CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

————————, secs. 54, 60 and 61—Magistrate giving bail and ordering person arrested by police under sec. 54 to appear in another Court after 10 days, legality and propriety of. A commission agent in Calcutta of a limited company in Ahmedabad was charged in a Magistrate's Court in Ahmedabad with having committed the offence of criminal breach of trust in respect of sale proceeds of certain bales of goods, and was arrested in Calcutta on the 5th March 1924 by a C. I. D. Officer of Poona under the provisions of sec. 54, Criminal Procedure Code. On the 6th March the C. I. D. Inspector produced him before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, asking that he might be forwarded to the Magistrate in Ahmedabad. The Chief Presidency Magistrate granted the accused bail and directed him to appear in Ahmedabad Court on the 16th March: Held—That the Chief Presidency Magistrate was not right in acting as he did upon the mere statement of the investigating Police Officer but should have required him to produce a warrant from Ahmedabad, releasing the prisoner in the meantime on bail to appear when called on before himself. Though under sec. 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Police Officer may arrest without warrant in the case of a cognizable offence under sec. 60 he is bound without unnecessary delay to take or send the person arrested before the Magistrate and under sec. 61 this must be done within 24 hours. The precautions laid down in these sections seem to be designed to secure that within not more than 24 hours some Magistrate shall have seisin of what is going on and some knowledge of the nature of the charges against the accused, however incomplete the information may be. DWARKADAS HARIDAS v. MR. AMBALAL GANPATRAM ... 850

————————, secs. 61 and 167, procedure when investigation cannot be completed in twenty four hours. The law laid down by secs. 61, 167, 169 and 190 (1) (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code is that at the expiration of the maximum period of 15 days' detention of an accused person and the additional time necessary to bring him before a Magistrate allowed under secs. 61 and 167, an accused must either be released by the Police under sec. 169, security for his appearance if and when required being taken, or the Magistrate, empowered in that behalf, must either take cognizance if he has before him a Police report (which ordinarily would be a report in the form laid down in sec. 173) which he thinks made out a prima facie case or he must release him. BHOLANATH DAS v. EMPEROR ... 490

————————, secs. 107 and 110, initiation of proceedings under, on insufficient materials, propriety of—High Court's interference in the preliminary stage, desirability of. Where on a memorial by the tenants against the zamindar containing certain allegations which were not substantiated on enquiry, the District Magistrate drew up proceedings under secs. 107 and 110 (d) of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the zamindar: Held—That reading the memorial and the report of the enquiry together it was impossible to hold that they furnished any material sufficient to justify proceedings either under sec. 107 or under sec. 110, Cr. P. C. The proceedings themselves showed that it was on this report and petition and no other material that they were based. Although the High Court seldom interferes in the preliminary stage with the discretion of the Magistrate taking action under the preventive sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, when the materials on which such orders are based are clearly insufficient to support those orders, the High Court should interfere and quash the orders and proceedings. NAFAR CHANDRA PAL CHOWDHURY v. THE KING-EMPEROR ... 23

————————, sec. 144, Collector, if may pass order as District Magistrate forbidding interference with cutting of a bundh ordered by Civil Court to be maintained—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 147, resistance to cutting of the bundh, if an offence under, when there is no order in express terms to cut the bundh—Civil Court injunction, how far may be interfered with by Magistrate. A compromise decree provided inter alia that if the bundhing of the eastern bank of a certain river was not completed within a specified time, the permanent injunction, which the decree granted for the maintenance of the bundh on the western bank, would be cancelled and the Plaintiffs would raise no objection to the cutting of the western bundh and bundhing the eastern bank. After the expiry of the specified time one of the Defendants applied to the Collector for permission to remove the western bundh and the Collector, in his capacity as District Magistrate, issued an order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., stating that the conditions had arisen which authorised the Defendants without opposition to cut the western bundh and forbidding the public to interfere when the western bundh was cut. At the cutting of the bundh a riot ensued and some of the villagers who tried to prevent the cutting of the bundh were convicted under sec. 147, I. P. C.: Held—That the order of the District Magistrate was not in terms an order directing the bundh to be cut. If it was in effect so, the District Magistrate had no right to usurp the functions of the Civil Court to construe the consent decree of the Civil Court and to say that the circumstances had arisen which justified the dissolving of the injunction of the Civil Court and the cutting of the western bundh. The Civil Court injunction was still subsisting and could only be dissolved by the Court which granted it. There being, however, no order in express terms to cut the bundh, no one was entitled to cut the bundh in view of the Civil Court's

[APPEAL FROM THE CHIEF COURT OF LOWER BURMA.]

LORD ATKINSON.
LORD SUMNER.
LORD PARMOOR.
LORD CARSON.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1922,
Heard, 31, October, 2 and 6, November.
Judgment, 20, December.

M. SUBRAMONIAN and anr., Appellants,
v.
M. L. R. M. LUTCHMAN and ors., Respondents.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), secs. 17, 49 — Equitable mortgage—Deposit of title deeds, accompanied by delivery of signed memorandum, not registered—Memorandum, if admissible—Mortgage, if may be proved aliunde—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 91.

When depositing title deeds of certain properties to secure an advance of money by way of equitable mortgage, the debtor signed and delivered to the creditor an unregistered memorandum which constituted the bargain between the parties and was not merely the record of an already completed transaction:

Held—That the mortgage was void under secs. 17 and 49 of the Registration Act inasmuch as it was effected by an instrument in writing which was not registered, and oral evidence was not admissible to prove the mortgage otherwise than by the memorandum by reason of sec. 91 of the Evidence Act.

This was an appeal from a judgment and two decrees of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, dated the 24th January 1916, reversing a decree of the said Court in its original jurisdiction, dated the 25th August 1914.

The Plaintiff who is represented in the appeal by the Appellants, his executors, filed the suit against the Respondents, to enforce a mortgage, dated the 26th August 1910.

The Respondents were the members of two firms of Chettys which had gone into dissolution, the Receiver appointed in the dissolution proceedings and Seedat, a creditor of the Chettys, who had deposited with them by way of mortgage his title deeds to certain properties.

On the 15th July 1908, Seedat's title deeds were deposited with the Plaintiff as security for a debt due to him by the Chettys accompanied by a memorandum which was not stamped nor registered. On the 5th April 1910, the Receiver was appointed in the dissolution suit of the Chetty firms and on the 26th August 1910, the latter obtained a legal mortgage from Seedat over, amongst other properties, the properties included in the original equitable mortgage.

The mortgage of the 26th August 1910 was deposited with the Plaintiff as security for the debt due to him by the Chettys and a memorandum signed by the Receiver accompanied such mortgage.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiff to enforce payment of the debt due to him by sale of the properties mortgaged on the 26th August 1910. The trial Judge (Young, J.), decreed the suit and ordered the sale of the mortgaged properties. Against this decree cross-appeals were preferred and the suit was dismissed.

From the resulting decrees the present appeal was brought.

Messrs. A. Powell, K. C., Kenelm Preedy and B. Dubé for the Appellants.—The Plaintiff can in any event recover on the original sub-mortgage of the 15th July 1906 whether or not the 1900 mortgage is invalid.

Equity never allows a merger where the effect is to injure an innocent party.

The Plaintiff had all the time the right to call for a legal mortgage. Carter v. Wake (4).

It is settled law that the Court will not infer an intention in a mortgagee to abandon his old right; on the contrary the Court will infer an intention to retain that right if there is evidence to support such inference. Locking v. Parker (5), Kehoe v. Hall (6), Arumugam Pillai v. Periasami (7) and Gopaldass v. Ranchud Sheochand (8).

They also referred to Fisher on Mortgages, 6th Edn., secs. 1559, 1560.

The Receiver did, on the facts, give additional security by the deposit of 1910, and the evidence shows that he was authorised to do so apart from the order appointing him.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent No. 10.—The cases cited on behalf of the Appellants are not applicable because in the present set of circumstances there was no privity between the original mortgagor and the sub-mortgagee.

As to registration, where you have an equitable mortgage and deposit accompanied by a document shewing the terms agreed upon, that is the only evidence of the transaction and must be registered.

Secs. 17 and 49, Indian Registration Act.

Sec. 91, Indian Evidence Act.

Sec. 59, Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Dwarka Nath v. Sarat Kumari (9) and Kedarnath Dutt v. Shamlall Khettry (1).

In the latter case the document was not executed until some time after the agreement.

[LORD SUMNER.—It is largely a question of evidence as to whether the document was part of the agreement or merely a record of an already completed transaction. The trial Court find the latter.]

The point is not touched on by the High Court and the Board must decide whether that finding is correct.

The decisions in Dwarka Nath v. Sarat Kumari (9) and Kedarnath Dutt v. Shamlall Khettry (1) have been followed in Esthur Isac v. Martu Mall (10) and Bhoirab Chandra v. Anath Nath (11).

In the present case the document was an essential part of the agreement and its registration was compulsory. Moreover the memorandum required to be stamped under the provisions of the Indian Stamp Act, II of 1899, amended by Act XV of 1904, sec. 8, Sch. I, No. 6.

An equitable mortgage is a disposition of property, per Lord Cairns in Credland v. Potter (12), and no evidence other than the document is admissible to determine the nature of the transaction. Shaw v. Foster (3).

Mr. Powell in reply.—The charge was created by the deposit and not by the document.

If the document creates the charge, it must be registered; but if the deposit creates the charge no question of registra-

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD CARSON.—On the 15th July 1908, the firms of Chettys owed to the original Plaintiff, Mallady Sathalingum, whose executors the present Appellants are, a considerable sum of money, and as security for the same deposited with him by way of equitable mortgage title deeds relating to certain properties of the Defendant Seedat and which had been deposited with the said firm by the said Seedat. On the occasion of such deposit a memorandum was signed and delivered to the said Plaintiff in the following terms :—

"From M.L.R.M.A. Soliappa Chetty and A L.A.S.R M. Chetty, Rangoon.

"To Mallady Sathalingum,
Rangoon.

Dated Rangoon, the 15th July 1908.

"DEAR SIR,

Nos. 78, 79 and 80, Block E, each measuring 25 by 50 with building thereon belonging to Saleman Ahmed Seedat, also his promissory note for rupees sixty-three thousand (Rs. 63,000) due us, this please hold as security against advances made to us; we also hand you second mortgage executed in our favour by C. Ranga Sawny Moodaliar on 1st class Lot No. 6 in Block Fl. On this we had advanced Rs. 32,000. Please also hold this as further security against advances made to us. "Witness:—

"Yours faithfully,

"A.L.A.S.R.M. ALAGAPPA CHETTY."

(1) 11 B. L. R. (O. C. J.) 405 (1873).

This document was not registered, and the effect of such non-registration will have to be considered later. On the 17th December 1909, the said Plaintiff sent to the said firms of Chetty and the Respondent Seedat notices demanding repayment of the moneys due and interest. In the year 1910 a suit was brought for the dissolution of the said Chetty firms, and on the 5th April 1910, Ramanathan Chetty was appointed Receiver by an order of the Court in the suit in the following terms :—

"It is ordered that M. A. R. A. R. Ramanathan Chetty be and he is hereby appointed receiver on a monthly remuneration of Rs. 300 (three hundred only) to take charge of the property of the Chetty firms of M. L. R. M. A. and A. L. A. S. R. M. pending the decision of the suit for dissolution of partnership, with power to collect outstandings and do all things necessary for the realisation and preservation of the assets of the said firm."

The Receiver so appointed and the members of the Chetty firms being anxious to realise the debt due to them by Seedat, wrote to the Plaintiff for the promissory note and the title deeds deposited with the Plaintiff on the 15th July 1908, in order to enable them to carry on proceedings against Seedat, and the Plaintiff handed them over on condition that he received payment from the fruits of the decree. No suit, however, was brought, but Seedat gave the Chetty firms a legal mortgage, dated the 26th August 1910, over the properties included in the original equitable mortgage and also other properties which were not so included. The Plaintiff agreed to this compromise upon condition that the mortgage of the 26th August 1910 was deposited with the Plaintiff and also the title deeds relating to the properties included in it as collateral security for the monies owing by the Chetty firms to the Plaintiff. This deposit was carried out, and on this occasion a memorandum setting forth such deposit was signed by the Receiver, and is dated the 4th September 1910. The present action was brought by the Plaintiff as equitable mortgagee to enforce payment of the debt due to him by sale of the properties mortgaged by the said mortgage of the 26th August 1910.

At the trial of the action before Mr. Justice Young, it was contended that the original sub-mortgage of 1908 was void inasmuch as it was effected by an instrument in writing which was admittedly not registered and that it was inadmissible in evidence on the same ground.

The learned Judge, however, held that it was admissible as being a record of an already completed transaction.

It was also contended that the old equitable mortgage had been surrendered and that the Plaintiff was suing on a new mortgage which was ultra vires the Receiver, who had not obtained the leave of the Court.

The learned Judge held, however, that so far as the new legal mortgage so deposited related to the property included in the former equitable mortgage "there was not an iota of difference between the return of the title deeds and the return of them accompanied by the deposit of the legal mortgage," and he accordingly gave a decree for the usual accounts and for sale in default of payment of the properties included in the original memorandum of deposit. There was an appeal by the Plaintiff to the Chief Court of Lower Burma from this judgment so far as it disallowed his claim to an equitable sub-mortgage on the new and additional properties included in the mortgage of the 26th August 1910; and there was also an appeal from this judgment by the first Defendant in so far as it allowed the claim of the Plaintiff to an equitable sub-mortgage of the properties originally pledged.

The Appellate Court on the 24th January 1916, set aside the decree of the original Court and dismissed the Plaintiffs' claim, holding that by the events which had happened the original mortgage by deposit was extinguished and no deposit of deeds by the Receiver of the Chetty firms was authorised by the order appointing him.

The Chief Judge, Sir Charles Fox, who gave the judgment of the Court, stated that it was unnecessary to deal with the vexed question as to whether the memorandum of the 15th July 1908, required registration. From this judgment and the decrees made under it the present appeal has been brought.

It was not seriously contended before their Lordships that the Receiver had any authority under the order of the 5th April 1910, to mortgage property of the firms, and on this point their Lordships are in agreement with the decree of the Appellate Court. The Plaintiffs' chief effort before this Board was directed to supporting the order of Mr. Justice Young, basing their claim upon the original sub-mortgage of the 15th July 1908. The Respondents' Counsel, on the other hand, raised the objections which had also been made at the trial of the action (1) that the original sub-mortgage was void inasmuch as it was effected by an instrument in writing which was admittedly not registered and relied upon secs. 17 and 49 of the Registration Act, 1908; and (2) that oral evidence was not admissible, as the memorandum of the 15th July 1908 constituted the contract between the parties (sec. 91, Law of Evidence, Act I of 1872). The Appellants, however, contended that though the terms of the deposit were embodied in a written document that document was a mere memorandum of and did not constitute the contract and therefore did not require to be registered, and that on the same ground oral evidence was admissible to prove and explain the deposit.

As already stated, the trial Judge acceded to this argument.

This Board, however, cannot agree with the view taken by the trial Judge. The law upon the subject admits of no doubt. In the case of Kedarnath Dutt v. Shamlall Khettry (1), Couch, C. J., says :—

"The rule with regard to writings is that oral proof cannot be substituted for the written evidence of any contract which the parties have put into writing. And the reason is that the writing is tacitly considered by the parties themselves as the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement. If this memorandum was of such a nature that it could be treated as the contract for the mortgage and what the parties considered to be the only repository and appropriate evidence of their agreement, it would be the instrument by which the equitable mortgage was created and would come within sec. 17 of the Registration Act."

This Board in Pranjivandas Mehta v. Chan Ma Phee (2), laid down the law as follows :—

"The law upon this subject is beyond any doubt: (1) Where titles are handed over with nothing said except that they are to be security, the law supposes that the scope of the security is the scope of the title. (2) Where, however, titles are handed over accompanied by a bargain, that bargain must rule. (3) Lastly, when the bargain is a written bargain, it, and it alone, must determine what is the scope and extent of security.

"In the words of Lord Cairns in the leading case of Shaw v. Foster (3) 'although it is a well-established rule of equity that a deposit of a document of title without more, without writing, or without word of mouth, will create in equity a charge upon the property referred to, I apprehend that that general rule will not apply when you have a deposit accompanied by an actual written charge. In that case you must refer to the terms of the written document, and any implication that might be raised, supposing there was no document, is put out of the case and reduced to silence by the documents by which alone you must be governed.'"

Applying the principles thus laid down to the present case, what this Board has to determine is, did the document of the 15th July 1908 constitute the bargain between the parties, or was it merely the record of an already completed transaction?

The only evidence upon this subject in their Lordships' opinion is conclusive that the memorandum of the 15th July 1908 constituted the bargain between the parties. The Plaintiffs' agent swore: "The arrangement to deposit their title deeds was made in the presence of the eldest son of E. Solomon," and when we turn to S. Solomon's evidence, he says, "The document was drafted and typed in my office after they had come to an agreement. The document was drawn up at the time they came together"; and upon cross-examination he says :—

"The agreement was signed and handed over in my presence. Unless the title deeds had been handed over he would not have accepted Ex. I (the memorandum of 15th July 1908). The transaction was completed in my office at the same time."

Turning to the document itself, one is led to the same conclusion. "We hand you herewith title deeds, etc. . . . This please hold as security, etc. . . . Please also hold this as further security." Their Lordships have no doubt therefore that the memorandum in question was the bargain between the parties, and that without its production in evidence the Plaintiff could establish no claim, and as it was unregistered it ought to have been rejected.

It has already been stated that the Receiver was not under the order appointing him authorised to create any mortgages of the partnership property, and therefore the claim of the Plaintiff fails both in respect of the original equitable deposit and the subsequent deposit in August 1910.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal of the Plaintiff should be dismissed with costs.

thereon of building material by the Defendant. The Plaintiff in his plaint claimed Rs. 5,300 as damages and obtained a decree for Rs. 10, and costs were awarded to him on the High Court Scale No. II.

The Defendant now applies for a review of the above order relating to costs on the ground that the suit was cognisable by the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta, and, inasmuch as the Plaintiff obtained a decree for damages for trespass of an amount less than Rs. 300, the Court had no jurisdiction to award him any costs by reason of the provisions of sec. 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act of 1882. The Plaintiff applied under this section for a certificate that the suit was one fit to be brought in the High Court, but this was refused.

I have, therefore, to decide whether the suit was cognisable by the Small Cause Court or not. A suit, in my opinion, is cognisable by the Small Cause Court if in respect both of its character and of the amount or value of its subject-matter it is within the jurisdiction of the Court. This suit in respect of the character of the relief claimed, was clearly one which the Small Cause Court was entitled to entertain. [See Peary Mohun Ghosal v. Hurrish Chunder Gangooly (1).]

Was it also within the ambit of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court by reason of the amount or value of its subject-matter? That depends upon whether the amount or value is that actually recoverable or ascertained at the trial, or that claimed by the Plaintiff and set out in the plaint.

The law and practice in British India, contained, partly in legislative enactments, and partly in a long and continuous stream of judicial decisions, are, in my opinion, in favour of the latter view.

(1) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 261 (1885).

Learned Counsel for the Defendant urged that if this view is to prevail, the effect will be that if the Plaintiff elects to value his claim at Rs. 1,200 the suit will come within sec. 22, while if he inflates his claim to Rs. 12,000 the section will not be applicable. In favour of his contention he has cited an unreported judgment of my brother Buckland, in suit No. 1657 of 1922. With great respect to the learned Judge I find myself unable to agree in the opinion which he expressed in that case as to the construction of sec. 22. If the test of the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit be that for which the Defendant contends, one result would appear to be that in a suit, for example, in respect of negligence or of trespass, in which the damages are at large, and it is impossible a priori to estimate, even approximately, the amount of the damages which ultimately will be awarded, a Plaintiff, however bonâ fide may be his estimate of the damage he has suffered, would be unable to bring his suit in the High Court without running the risk of losing his costs even if he were to be successful. In my opinion, the object of the legislature was to prevent congestion in the High Court, and to provide, where the Plaintiff values his claim at a sum which brings his suit within the jurisdiction both of the High Court and of the Small Cause Court, and yet elects to institute proceedings in the High Court, that he should do so at his peril. It is not to be supposed that the legislature intended ex post facto to penalise a Plaintiff because he had failed to guess correctly which was the proper Court in which to launch his suit. If the construction urged upon me by the Defendant were the correct one, it would result in a mere gamble and add a new terror to litigation.

CHANDMULL KANGORIA v. DEBI CHAND.

Chief Justice Edge makes some pertinent observations on this subject in Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (2). There the learned Chief Justice says :—

"Now it has been held by this Court in Mahabir Singh v. Behari Lal (3) that "for the purpose of determining the proper Appellate Court in a civil suit, what is to be looked to is the value of the original suit, that is to say, 'the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit'; such 'amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit' must be taken to be the value assigned by the Plaintiff in his plaint and not the value as found by the Court, unless it appears that, either purposely or through gross negligence, the true value of the suit has been altogether mis-represented in the plaint." As a matter of fact in this case the value assigned by the Plaintiff in his plaint was Rs. 1,500. That valuation made the suit one which was triable in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and that valuation also made the appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge lie to the Court of the District Judge. The law contemplates that, in many cases, it may be impossible for a Plaintiff, at the inception of his suit to state correctly the value of the relief which he seeks, as for example, in cases to which sec. 11 of the Court Fees Act, 1870 (Act No. VII of 1870) applies. This was particularly a case in which, until all the evidence had been taken, it was impossible for the Plaintiff to put anything more than a hypothetical value on the relief claimed qua the balance in the hands of Babu Madho Das. In our opinion it would be impossible to hold that the jurisdiction of an Appellate Court should depend upon the amount of the decree of the Appellate Court. Take, for example, this case. The lower Appellate Court here being satisfied that the Plaintiff under his second relief was entitled to a decree for over Rs. 7,000, gave him that decree. If the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to give that decree, what would have been the result? According to the argument for the Defendant-Appellant the lower Appellate Court could have done nothing except return the memorandum of appeal for presentation in the High Court. It could not, according to that contention logically worked out, have given the Plaintiff in his appeal a decree for any sum whatever, even a sum less than Rs. 5,000, as if that contention was correct, its jurisdiction was determined by the finding that the Plaintiff was entitled in appeal to a sum exceeding Rs. 5,000. If that contention were correct, and the lower Appellate Court returned the memorandum of appeal, and it was presented in this Court as a first appeal, it is conceivable that this Court might have come to the conclusion that the Plaintiff was entitled, we shall say, to Rs. 2,000 only. Now if the Defendant's contention were correct, in that event what could this Court do except again return the memorandum of appeal to be presented in the Court having jurisdiction, i.e., that of the District Judge? That is an illustration which we think goes to show that it is the Plaintiff's valuation in his plaint which controls the jurisdiction, not only of the first Court, but of the Appellate Court, and not the amount which may be found and decreed by the first Court or by the Appellate Court."

It has repeatedly been held by the High Courts in India that the test of the 'amount or value of the subject-matter of a suit is to be determined by the amount set forth in the plaint. [See Lakshman

v. Babaji (4), Mahabir Singh v. Behari Lal (3), Hamidunessa Bibi v. Gopal Chandra Malakar (5) and Raj Krishna Dey v. Bepin Behari Dey (6).] And a perusal of the material statutes leads me to the same conclusion. By the Suits Valuation Act of 1887, sec. 8, "the value as determinable for the computation of court-fees and the value for the purpose of jurisdiction shall be the same."

By the Court Fees Act of 1870, sec. 4, court-fees are payable as indicated by the Schedule to that Act. By the Bengal Fees Amendment Act of 1922, sec. 5, court-fees are payable according to the amount or value appearing in the plaint. [See also on this subject Court Fees Act of 1870, secs. 5 and 7, sub-secs. (1) and (4), and sec. 17 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, sec. 18, Exp. I, and also secs. 20 and 21 and 39, (1), (2) and (4). See also Civil Procedure Code, Or. 7, r. 1 (i), r. 2 and r. 11 (b)].

In cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, it is provided that the High Court shall not have such Original Jurisdiction in a case falling within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta in which the debt, or damage, or value of the property sued for does not exceed Rs. 100. It has to be observed that the words are "sued for" and not "recoverable."

In my opinion, on a true construction of sec. 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, where a Plaintiff institutes a suit of a character cognisable by the Small Cause Court in the High Court, and estimates the value or amount of his claim in the plaint at a sum which is within the ambit of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, sec. 22 is applicable to the suit, and the Plaintiff must be taken to have deliberately accepted the risk to which the provisions of the section expose him. On the other hand, the Plaintiff's estimate of the value or amount of his suit may be so high that the suit is not cognisable by the Small Cause Court, but it is erroneous for that reason to suppose that the Plaintiff is entitled, by a designed exaggeration of the claim, to oust the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. The Plaintiff by placing a fictitious value on his claim is not at liberty to determine the tribunal by which his suit is to be tried. [See cases cited supra, also Dayaram v. Gordhandas (7) and Ashiq Ali v. Imtiaz Begam (8)].

Ample safe-guards are provided to meet such a contingency. Where the relief obtained in the plaint is incorrectly valued, the Court may reject the plaint, or return the plaint to be presented to the proper Court under Or. 7, rr. 10 and 11. The Court of first instance, in a proper case where it deems such a preliminary investigation to be desirable, will itself determine the amount and value of the subject-matter of the suit, if objection is taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues are first framed and recorded. [See Suits Valuation Act, sec. 11 and Koti Pujari v. Manjaya (9)].

Moreover, the High Court under sec. 35 of the Civil Procedure Code possesses an unfettered discretion of deciding all questions of costs in such a suit. It might, for example, under such circumstances, deprive the Plaintiff wholly of costs, or only award him such costs as he would have recovered if he had brought his suit in the Small Cause Court.

Courts of Justice, in construing a statute, must endeavour to discover the meaning to be given to it by a consideration of its terms. Little or no assistance is to be obtained by referring to other statutes in which the words used are not the same.

The provisions of the English County Court Acts from 1867 to 1919 do not contain the safe-guards which are to be found in the Indian practice. Moreover, the provisions of these Acts differ materially from those contained in the statute relevant to the issues raised on this application, and the decisions thereunder proceed upon different considerations, and I do not, therefore, propose to refer to them.

In my opinion, questions of practice in India are to be determined in accordance with the principles laid down in the Courts in India.

Bearing in mind the evidence adduced at the hearing of this suit, and having regard to all the circumstances, I am not disposed to vary the decree which has been passed.

I hold that this application has been misconceived, and I dismiss it with costs.

This was an appeal preferred on the 2nd August 1920 against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Zillah Mymensingh (Babu Bamandas Mukherjee), dated the 21st June 1920, affirming the decree of the Munsif, 1st Additional Court at Jamalpur (Babu Basanta Behari Mukherjee), dated the 26th May 1919.

The facts are briefly as follows :—One Omar Chand Oswal embezzled a sum of money from the shop of a Marwari merchant and absconded. After several futile enquiries by the Police in Calcutta and in Bikanir, an enquiry slip was sent to the Superintendent of Police at Mymensingh and he sent it to the Sub-Inspector of Police at Islampur, with the note "to enquire and report." The papers attached to the slip described the absconder. The Sub-Inspector, purporting to take action under sec. 54, Cr. P. Code, went to the shop of one Omar Chand Oswal, a trader in Dharmakura Bazar, in the District of Mymensingh, and in spite of the protests of the latter and of other respectable inhabitants of that place, arrested Omar Chand and took him in the custody of a constable to the Thana though he knew that Omar Chand was not the absconder. At the Thana the Sub-Inspector demanded a sum of Rs. 100 as a condition for his release and after some bargaining took Rs. 75 and then released Omar Chand on bail. Thereupon Omar Chand brought the present suit against the Sub-Inspector for recovery of the sum of Rs. 75 which the Defendant had extorted from him and further claimed Rs. 50 as damages for the wrongful arrest. The lower Courts decreed the suit and the Sub-Inspector preferred the present second appeal to the High Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a second appeal by the Defendant from the judgment of the learned second Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh.

The suit was brought by one Omar Chand Oswal, who was a trader of the Dharmakura Bazar against the Sub-Inspector of Police of the Islampur Thana, to recover the sum of Rs. 75 which, it was alleged, the Defendant had extorted from the Plaintiff by placing the Plaintiff under a wrongful arrest and taking him to the Thana and detaining him there for more than an hour.

There was a further claim for Rs. 50 which was claimed as damages for the alleged wrongful arrest.

The two points which the learned Vakeel, who appeared for the Appellant, has taken are, first that the Defendant was a public officer and in executing the arrest of the Plaintiff he was purporting to act in his official capacity and, that consequently by reason of the provisions of sec. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure the Plaintiff could not institute this suit until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing to the Defendant; that no such notice was given and that consequently the suit would not lie. The other point was that the payment of the sum of Rs. 75 was the result of a bargain between the Plaintiff on the one hand and the Defendant on the other, and that the Plaintiff was in pari delicto with the Defendant and consequently the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover in this suit.

The learned Vakeel after further consideration admitted that he could not press the second point, having regard to the findings of fact of the learned Subordinate Judge, which were to the effect that the Plaintiff purchased his release by payment to the Defendant of the sum of Rs. 75 under coercion, or putting it in other words, that the Rs. 75 was extorted from the Plaintiff by placing him under a wrongful arrest, taking him to the Thana and detaining him there. There is, therefore, one point only to be considered in this appeal, and that is the question whether the Defendant was entitled to notice under sec. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code before the suit was instituted.

For the consideration of this point it is necessary to state a few facts: It appears that a person, who gave the name of Omar Chand Oswal, was alleged to have embezzled a sum of Rs. 275 from the shop of one Dwarka Das Agarwalla of Sonari and then absconded. Endeavours were being made by the Police to find the absconder. Apparently, an enquiry had been made at Bikanir with no result. An enquiry was then made in Calcutta with no result. Then an enquiry slip was sent to the Superintendent of Police at Mymensingh and he sent it to the Sub-Inspector of Islampur, who is the Defendant in this case, with the note "to enquire and report." Apparently, attached to this slip there was the report of the Bikanir Police, and the papers, which were with the Defendant, described the absconder. It was the Defendant's case that having regard to the information contained in those papers and in the enquiry slip, he took action under sec. 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and arrested the Plaintiff. It appears that he went to the shop of the Plaintiff on the morning of the 22nd of March 1918 accompanied by some Chowkidars and Constables, that inspite of the protest of the Plaintiff and some other persons, who are described by the learned Judge as respectable inhabitants of that place, the Plaintiff was taken in the custody of a Constable to the Thana, that at the Thana the Defendant demanded a sum of Rs. 100 as a condition for the release of the Plaintiff, that after some bargaining with the Plaintiff and some others, who had accompanied the Plaintiff to the Thana, it was agreed that the Defendant should receive Rs. 75, and one of those, who had accompanied the Plaintiff, went to his place of business, obtained the money which was paid to the Defendant, and then the Plaintiff was released on bail.

Now, the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the Defendant ought to have known that the Plaintiff was not the absconder. He said: "The Defendant had this document in his hand and a look at the man would satisfy him that the Plaintiff was not the absconder." Further on he said: "The Plaintiff had his firm at Dharmakura in the name of Amarchand Askuram for about 25 years and is a man of established reputation in the locality. His shop is only 15 minutes' walk from the Police Station of the Defendant." I need not dwell upon this at any greater detail because the finding is that the conduct of the Defendant was marked with malâ fides from the beginning to the end and that he arrested the Plaintiff having good reason to believe him to be innocent and refused to grant him bail at the shop; and, under these circumstances the learned Subordinate Judge made a decree for the recovery of Rs. 75 and a further decree for Rs. 50 as damages for the wrongful arrest.

The learned Vakil, who appeared for the Appellant, has admitted that the point upon which he relies, namely, the omission of notice under sec. 80, does not apply to the claim for Rs. 75, because when the Defendant demanded and obtained the Rs. 75 under coercion no body could suppose that he was purporting to act in his official capacity in so demanding and obtaining the Rs. 75: and consequently, the decree which the lower Appellate Court has made in favour of the Plaintiff for the Rs. 75 must remain undisturbed.

But the learned Vakil pressed the point with regard to the claim for Rs. 50 compensation or damages for the wrongful arrest.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the Defendant was not entitled to notice under sec. 80, because, he said: "Sec. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code is meant for the protection of Government Officers acting in good faith in lawful discharge of their duties: but it does not apply to cases of malâ fide acts perpetrated by Government Officers taking advantage of their position and abusing the salutary provisions of law as engine of torture as has been done in the present case. The law is clear on the point. The ruling reported in Peary Mohan Das v. D. Weston (1) does not entitle the Defendant to any notice in the present case. So this point also is decided against the Appellant."

Speaking for myself, with great respect to the learned Subordinate Judge, I am of opinion that that decision is wrong. The words of the section are plain. In this case the material words are these: "No suit shall be instituted against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been delivered to him. . . ." On the facts of this case there is no doubt that the Defendant was a public officer, and on the facts which I have already stated, in my opinion, there is equally no doubt that the act, namely, the arrest of the Plaintiff, was an act purporting to be done by the Defendant in his official capacity: and consequently, in my judgment, the Defendant was entitled to notice. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge implies the importation of words into the section which cannot be found there. He would read the section as if it were "in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer bonâ fide in his official capacity." In my judgment it is not legitimate to construe the section by importing into the section words which do not appear in the section. For the purpose of my judgment it really would not be necessary for me to say anything further.

It is desirable, however, in my judgment, to refer to the case which was mentioned by the learned Subordinate Judge. That was a decision of Mr. Justice Fletcher, in the case of Peary Mohan Das v. D. Weston (1). The passage which is relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge is to be found at p. 214, which runs as follows: "The third issue is whether the Defendants' were entitled to notice of this suit under sec. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In my opinion they were not. A public officer sued in respect of an act done in bad faith is not entitled to notice under sec. 80. The decisions in this Court of Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (2) and Raghubans v. Phoolkumari (3) establish this proposition without doubt."

With great respect to the learned Judge, I do not agree with him. The case of Raghubans v. Phoolkumari (3), in my judgment, is no authority for the proposition which the learned Judge ennunciated. In the case of Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (2), the judgment was delivered by Mr. Justice Cunningham and it contains some statements which go to support the opinion of Mr. Justice Fletcher, but in my judgment they were obiter dicta and were not nécessary for the decision of that case.

The opinions of Mr. Justice Fletcher and that of Mr. Justice Cunningham are, in my judgment, inconsistent with the decision of this Court in the case of Jogendra Nath Roy Bahadur v. J. C. Price (4), to which Mr. Justice Macpherson and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali were parties. In that case the lower Court had not arrived at any findings of fact, because the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the Defendant was entitled as a public officer to two months' notice under sec. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, previous to the institution of the suit, the acts complained of having been done by the Defendant in his official capacity. It is material to notice that the allegation in the plaint was that the Defendant illegally and maliciously caused the Plaintiff to be arrested: and, in the judgment it is stated that "the Plaintiff charges that this act was illegal and malicious." The learned Judges in giving judgment said this: "The learned pleader for the Appellant contends that as the act is said to have been done maliciously, sec. 424 does not apply, and that that section only applies to acts done inadvertently, and as authority he cites the case of Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (2). There certainly are some remarks of Mr. Justice Cunningham which would lend support to this contention, but that was a case of a very different description from this, and we think the remarks made must be taken in connection with the facts of that particular case, and not as of general application." . . . . "This is a case of a wholly different character, and we are not aware of any instance, certainly no such case has been cited to us, in which it has been held that the section does not apply to the case of a public officer charged with a tortious act done by him in his official capacity. The section does not seem to us to warrant the drawing of any distinction between acts of this kind done inadvertently or otherwise." I agree with the decision in that case, and with great respect to Mr. Justice Fletcher, I do not agree with the decision in Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (2). It seems to me that the decision of this Court in Jogendra Nath Roy Bahadur v. J. C. Price (4) is in accordance with the plain words of the section: and, I am glad to find that that decision has been arrived at; because my own opinion is that if the Courts would be satisfied to give effect to the natural meaning of the language used in the sections of the Codes, a great deal of time would be saved.

The matter does not end there, because the learned Vakeel drew our attention to a Full Bench case in the Madras High Court, Koti Reddi v. Subbiah (5), the head-note of which is, "a public officer is entitled to notice of suit under sec. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, even if in the discharge of his duty he has acted malâ fide." The decision confirms the view which I have taken of the words in sec. 80; and, the result is, as I have already said, that I am unable to agree with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge by which he held that it was not necessary for the Plaintiff to give the notice prescribed by sec. 80, before bringing a suit against the Defendant, because it was proved that, although the Defendant purported to act in his official capacity as a public officer, he had acted malâ fide.

In view of the conclusion at which I have arrived as to the proper interpretation of sec. 80, the only question on this point is whether the arrest of the Plaintiff was an act purporting to be done by the Defendant as a public officer in his official capacity. On the facts of the case I have no doubt that the arrest was an act purporting to be done by the Defendant as a public officer in his official capacity; and, consequently the suit, so far as the claim for the Rs. 50 is concerned, could not be instituted until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing was given. Inasmuch as no notice was given, in my judgment, the claim of the Plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 50 as compensation or damages for wrongful arrest must fail and the appeal in respect of that claim must be allowed and the suit in respect thereof should be dismissed.

Inasmuch as the appeal has succeeded as to a part of the Plaintiff's claim and failed as regards the other part, we make no order as regards the costs of this appeal. We do not interfere with the order as to the costs of the lower Courts, which will stand.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. In the present case even though the Defendant knew that he was arresting the wrong person and was in that sense acting malâ fide, he was, in my opinion, purporting to act as a Police Officer, that is, as a public officer, within the meaning of sec. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. That being so, the Defendant was entitled to notice of this suit, so far as it is a suit for damages for wrongful arrest or false imprisonment.

Our attention has been called to no decision binding on us with which this conclusion is in conflict. Not only so. But the view that the words of sec. 80 should receive their natural meaning is supported by the decision of this Court in Jogendra Nath Roy Bahadur v. J. C. Price (4), which is binding upon us, and which has been approved by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Koti Reddi v. Subbiah (5).

MIS. APP. No. 95 OF 1923.

Judgment, 17, July.

SADEK ALI, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
SAMED ALI, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Provincial Small Cause Court, power of, to attach immoveable property before judgment and to investigate claim thereto—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), sec. 17—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 7, 37, Ors. 38 and 50.

A Provincial Court of Small Causes has no power to attach immoveable property before judgment under Or. 38 of the Civil Procedure Code, and an order of such a Court adjudicating a claim to property so attached is ultra vires.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st March 1923, against the order of District Judge of 24-Parganas (A. J. Chotzner, Esq.), dated the 2nd February 1923, reversing an order of the Munsif at Alipur (Babu Prafulla Ch. Dutta), dated the 28th July 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Santosh Kumar Basu and Pravat Ch. Dutta for the Appellant.

Babu Sitaram Banerjee for the Respondent.

RANKIN, J.—This is an appeal by the Defendant in an ejectment suit. The Defendant's defence was a denial of the Plaintiff's title. The Plaintiff claimed title as purchaser at an execution sale against one Majammil Mea under a Small Cause Court decree for money obtained under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It appears that in the Small Cause Court at Sealdah he obtained an attachment of the land now in suit before judgment, that there was an investigation of claim held under Or. 21, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, that the claimant succeeded and that the Plaintiff then brought a suit to establish the right of his judgment-debtor, but that suit was withdrawn. Later, the decree was transferred to the ordinary civil Court; the property was attached and sold to him ignoring the previous claim case.

The Munsif held that the Small Cause Court had power to attach immoveables before judgment and to decide the claim case. Accordingly he dismissed the Plaintiff's suit holding that the Plaintiff had no title. The learned District Judge held that the Small Cause Court had no such power and that the proceedings which purported to have been taken under Or. 21, r. 63, C. P. C., were ultra vires. Accordingly, he remitted the suit for retrial to the first Court on the other issues. The only point made by the learned Vakil for the Defendant-Appellant is that, under the Code of 1908, a Provincial Small Cause Court has power to attach immoveable property before judgment and to decide a claim case thereon. This matter has been elaborately argued before us. It is quite clear that the proper method is first to examine this matter on the face of the Code and of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). So far as the latter Act is concerned, it is only necessary to note that by the second schedule great care has been taken to exclude from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court all suits in respect of immoveable property whether for possession or declaration or partition or otherwise howsoever, with small exceptions as regards certain classes of rent suits. In effect, rights to, or interests in, immoveable property are elaborately excluded; but as questions of this character may arise incidentally in suits, for example, for money, a facultative provision is made by sec. 23 enabling the Small Cause Courts to send the matter to the ordinary Civil Court but not obliging it to do so. Sec. 17 of this Act deals with procedure. It is the only section applying anything in the Code to Small Cause Courts. The provisions in the Code itself are directed entirely to excluding certain powers of the Court from application to Small Cause Courts. The provisions of the Code of 1882 specified in its second schedule "so far as those chapters and sections are applicable" were made to obtain in the Small Cause Court by virtue of sec. 17. They include Chaps. XIX and XXXIV—"Execution" and "Arrest and Attachment before judgment." In each case the words "except as regards immoveable property" are inserted as a qualification in the second schedule itself. In form sec. 17 is entirely inapposite now. Since 1908 it must be taken by virtue of sec. 158 of the Code to refer to sec. 7 and Or. 50 of the Code of 1908. By sec. 7 of the present Code so much of the body of the Code as relates to certain things is declared not to extend to Small Cause Courts, namely, suits excepted from their cognizance, execution of decrees in such suits and the execution of decrees against immoveable property. Also certain sections are made inapplicable, including secs. 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders. This provision is badly drafted. Sec. 94 appears to refer entirely to interlocutory orders and even to call them so, but the parts of this section intended to be excluded are apparently cls. (c) and (e). Cl. (b) is not excluded by the words of sec. 7 [Kumud Behary Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (1)] and it can certainly take effect as regards moveables. The actual words of the clause, however, are "order the attachment of any property." Still sec. 94 only confers powers of any sort "if it is so prescribed" which means that unless the power is given by the orders in the first schedule, it is not in existence. It is fairly clear that we must therefore go to the schedule which by Or. 50 declares that certain provisions of the schedule shall not extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts. This repeats the matters mentioned in the first half of sec. 7 and adds two new matters. It then mentions certain rules and orders specifically and declares them also to be inapplicable to Small Cause Courts. It may be noticed that whereas by secs. 7 and 94 a Provincial Small Cause Court cannot grant a temporary injunction, Or. 39, r. 1 is not expressly mentioned in Or. 50. Or. 50 is not, it would appear, drafted either on the principle of repeating every exclusion made by sec. 7 or of not repeating any such exclusion. Further in Or. 16, r. 10 the power of compelling the attendance of a witness by attachment of his property is qualified by the proviso "'that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for the attachment of immoveable property." In these circumstances, the question seems to turn on the exact implication of the exclusion from the Small Cause Court powers of "the execution of decrees against immoveable property" in sec. 7 and Or. 50.

(1) I. L. R. 46 Cal. 717 (1918)

SADEK ALI v. SAMED ALI.

There can be no doubt that in Or. 38 attachment before judgment is contrasted with and distinguished from "attachment of property in execution of a decree." Nor can it be doubted that there is an important difference between these two things [see Basiram v. Kattyayani (2)] though it may be doubted whether the difference is really fundamental since attachment in execution is a step taken to crystallise the creditors' rights and prevent loss of the property prior to sale: attachment before judgment is also for the purposes of preservation so far as the Plaintiff is concerned.

Two views have been taken. The District Judge has adopted the view stated in Woodroffe on the Civil Procedure Code. That is, in effect, the principle applied in Madras to the Code of 1859 under Act XI of 1865 that "a Court which cannot attach primarily in execution of its decree cannot attach in anticipation of it" [Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (3)].

The other view was adopted in Kanchedi v. Kanchedi (4) by the Judicial Commissioner at Nagpur. He regarded the express exception in Or. 16, r. 10 as in favour of this construction and he did not think that r. 7 of Or. 38 was against it. He pointed out that the exclusion of this power was express and clear in the Code of 1882 and that it is not repeated in the present Code.

Or. 38, r. 7 lays down: "The attachment shall be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree." R. 8 applies in like manner to the provisions as to the method of investigation of claims.

This not only refers inter alia to Or. 21, r. 54 but also to the provisions for investigation of claims (rr. 58 to 62) and further to r. 63 which makes the order in a claim case conclusive subject only to a suit. If there is power to attach before judgment, then whether it be limited to moveables or not, r. 63 must be intended to apply [Srimanth Raju v. Matiapalli (5)]. However the matter be regarded, r. 63 is not in reality a mere question of "manner."

Again by sec. 36 of the Code "the provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decrees shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to the execution of orders." It cannot be contended that "the execution of decrees against immoveable property" is not meant to cover the execution of orders for the purposes of sec. 7 or Or. 50, yet they are only excluded by implication.

The argument from previous Codes is apt to exceed the limits laid down in Bank of England v. Vagliano (6), but no doubt in so far as a revised Code takes the form of an amendment as regards a particular provision something may legitimately be gathered by a comparison. Compare, for instance, sec. 73 of the present Code and sec. 295 of 1882. But the whole manner and scheme of declaring the powers of Small Cause Courts were recast in 1908, though sec. 17 of Act IX of 1887 lives on. Sec. 5 of the Code of 1882 declares everything expressly mentioned in the second schedule to extend to Small Cause Courts to the extent provided. Sec. 7 and Or. 50 of the present Code mention certain things as not to extend. Formerly every chapter was specifically dealt with, i.e., inserted with or without qualification or omitted. Thus "Chap. XXXIV of Arrest, Attachment before judgment," except as regards "immoveable property."

SADEK ALI v. SAMED ALI.

The Code of 1877 as amended in 1879 was exactly the same. The position which arose under Act XLII of 1860 (which first created the Provincial Small Cause Court) and the amending Act XI of 1865 was that these had to be read with the Code of 1859 which knew nothing of Small Cause Courts. Sec. 2? of the Act of 1860 provided that "except as hereinbefore provided" the Code of 1859 should be applicable "in so far as the same may be applicable and necessary." Sec. 47 of the Act of 1865 was equally general "so far as the same are or may be applicable." In this respect I think the comment of the learned Vakil for the Appellant upon the Madras decision [Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (3)] has force. In 1871 there was a wide general direction left to be applied by common sense. From 1877 to 1908 there was clear and specific provision. The Code of 1908 did not revert to wide or general direction.

It is by no means absurd to suppose that the Code of 1908 may have meant, subject to the right of High Courts to amend the Rules . . . . . to extend the power of attachment before judgment to immoveable property in the case of Provincial Small Cause Courts, while refusing to such Courts the right to attach such property in execution of decrees. As the language of sec. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) is now inapposite, I am inclined to think that the onus is on the person denying the existence of the power to show that it is excluded by the Code. I agree that the principle of Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (3) is not so forceful as it was under the old Acts. On the other hand, I think the difference between attachment before and after judgment is not so great as has been sometimes thought and I do not think the comparison ... with the clear language ... 1882 affords ground for a safe ... to the effect that the power was not me... to be excluded.

It is very difficult to think that a Court which so far as is possible is prohibited from entertaining questions of rights in immoveables and which may not levy thereon, nor attach such property to compel a witness to appear, should have been given without plain language the extreme right of attachment before judgment and of adjudicating on all claims which such an attachment may produce. That the debt must be small in all cases makes the difficulty greater. It is quite true that on the language of r. 51 of Or. 21 the attachment is made an order: but the peon or the officer who affixes on the premises the order of the Court and proclaims it by beat of drum could hardly deny that he was executing an order upon immoveable property any more than the Sheriff when seizing moveables could deny that he was executing an order. If sec. 7 (a) (iii) is read with sec. 36 as meaning to exclude "the execution of decrees or orders against immoveable property"—as I think it must—then, apart from Or. 50, I think that the power to attach immoveables before judgment is sufficiently, if not too clearly, negatived. [Cf. Or. 38, r. 11.]

In the end, therefore, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, hearing-fee, two gold mohurs.

This appeal arose out of a suit by an auction-purchaser at a rent sale for refund of purchase-money with compensation on the allegation that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property purchased by the Plaintiff and on certain allegations of fraud which are discussed in their Lordships' judgment.

dent. Mohideen Ibrahim v. Md. Mura Levai (15) and Mannu Lal v. Bhugwan Das (16).

Mere averment of fraud or misrepresentation in the plaint is not sufficient, particulars of fraud must be set forth.

Or. 6, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code.

Ganga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhury (8), Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shri Shriniwas Pandit (17) and Jyoti Prokash Nandy v. Jhow Mull Johurry (18).

In the present case only two facts are alleged in the plaint, but they do not amount to fraud or misrepresentation, first, that the landlord sued only one of several co-sharer tenants and hence the decree was a money decree and not a rent decree. The judgment-debtor was not in possession and he had no interest in the property. But in the plaint it was alleged that he was in joint possession with his co-sharers. At an auction-sale there is no warranty on the part of the decree-holder as to the interest or extent of interest. of the judgment-debtors. The doctrine of caveat emptor applies. There is no fraud. The sale cannot be set aside even under the Code (Or. 21, r. 92) if the judgment-debtor had any the slightest interest. Ram Coomar Dey v. Shoshee Bhushan Ghose (19), Sonaram Dass v. Mohiram Dass (20), Ram Narain v. Dwarka Nath Khettry (21) and Sant Lal v. Ramji Dago (22).

The second fact alleged is that in the rent suit the jama was wrongly and fraudulently stated as Rs. 38 and not Rs. 22. This does not constitute fraud. The decree-holder obtained the decree on a jama of Rs. 38. The auction-purchaser might have enquired. He has got no locus standi to impeach the decree. Facts found cannot be impeached in second appeal, but whether the facts found constitute fraud is a question of law.

Ishan Chandra Das Sarkar v. Bishu Sirdar (23).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—The Plaintiff, who was the auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree for rent, sued both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor for refund of the purchase-money and also for compensation on certain allegations made in the plaint. The suit was decreed in the primary Court against both the Defendants. On appeal by the decree-holder Defendant, the learned Judge dismissed the suit holding that it was not maintainable. The Plaintiff appeals to this Court and two questions have been raised on his behalf : (1) Whether a suit for refund of purchase-money is maintainable by the auction-purchaser on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the land, and (2) whether the suit is maintainable on the ground of fraud of the Defendants.

With regard to the first question, the learned Vakil for the Appellant has placed before us all the cases decided by the different High Courts with reference to sales held after the Code of Civil Procedue of 1908 came into operation. He admits that the general view is that such suits are not maintainable. It is only necessary to refer to the latest cases, which are Ram Sarup v. Dalpat Rai (1), Balvant Raghunath v. Bala (2), Tirumalaisami Naidu v. Subramanian Chettiar (3) and Juranu Mahamad v. Jathi Mahamad (4). He, however, relies on two cases in support of his contention that such a suit is maintainable, namely, the cases of Rustomji Ardeshir Irani v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (5) and Prosanna Kumar Bhattacharjee v. Ibrahim Mirza (6). The case of Rustomji Ardeshir Irani v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (5) was under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice in Balvant Raghunath's case (2). The only case then in which a discordant note was struck is that Prosanna Kumar Bhattacharjea v. Ibrahim Mirza (6). That case, however, was based on the decision in Rustomji Ardeshir Irani v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (5), which is no authority on the question where the sale was held under the Code of 1908. We must, therefore, follow the later case in our Court, Juranu Mahamad v. Jathi Mahamad (4), which is in agreement with the decision of all the other High Courts, and hold that such a suit is not maintainable.

The learned Vakil for the Appellant further contends that there is a difference between the present case and the others, as in the present case the sale was a sale in execution of a rent decree and there is a warranty of title in the case of such a sale. The authority cited in support of this proposition is the decision in Abdul Sobhan Seikh v. Nekbar Mandal (7). That case, however, does not lay down any such rule, as it decides merely a question of estoppel by representation. That there is no such distinction as regards warranty will be apparent from the fact that the proclamation of sale which has to be published is in the same terms in both classes of cases. The difference in the rights acquired by purchasers in execution of decrees does not affect the question as regards warranty of title.

Before parting with this question, I must observe that the Plaintiff does not state that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, the allegation being to the effect that the Plaintiff purchased only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and not the holding free from all encumbrances as in a rent sale. On that allegation, the question discussed does not arise and the Plaintiff's suit is not maintainable on any ground whatsoever.

With regard to the second point the matter of fraud was not investigated by the learned Judge on appeal and the Appellant asks us for a remand of the case for retrial on that ground. The learned Vakil for the Respondent contends that, assuming that such a suit on the ground of fraud is maintainable, there is no such averment of fraud in the plaint by which the Plaintiff was induced to purchase the property and that there is nothing to be enquired into; although the words "fraud" and "collusion" have been used several times in the plaint, if those words are struck out, the facts alleged do not disclose any fraud which would entitle the Plaintiff to maintain this action nor was any issue raised on that question. Reference has been made in this connection to the case of Ganga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhury (8), where Lord Watson quoted the well-known dictum of Lord Selborne on that question. The Appellant urges that, although no issue was raised, the trial Court decided the question of fraud and the Defendants cannot be said to have been prejudiced or taken by surprise. The trial Court, however, seems to have decided two points on the facts alleged in the plaint. First, that in the rent suit the Defendant No. 2 who was a grandson of the recorded tenant did not represent the entire body of tenants deriving title from the recorded tenant and, secondly, that the enhanced rate of rent claimed by the landlord in his suit was not bonâ fide as the Defendant No. 2 had no authority to agree to an enhancement on behalf of all the tenants and this enhancement was made by the landlord in collusion with the Defendant No. 2. These findings can hardly be said to be findings of fraud which would entitle the auction-purchaser to have the sale set aside. I have examined the plaint and there is no allegation in it beyond those which have been found by the Munsif. It seems to me clear that these findings were not considered to be findings on any question of fraud by the parties in the lower Appellate Court as it does not appear that the lower Appellate Court was asked to come to any finding on the question of fraud. This ground also, therefore, fails.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

NAFAR CHANDRA PAL CHOWDHURY, Petitioner,

THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 107 and 110, initiation of proceedings under, on insufficient materials, propriety of—High Court's interference in the preliminary stage, desirability of.

Where on a memorial by the tenants against the zamindar containing certain allegations which were not substantiated on enquiry, the District Magistrate drew up proceedings under secs. 107 and 110 (d) of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the zamindar:

Held—That reading the memorial and the report of the enquiry together it was impossible to hold that they furnished any material sufficient to justify proceedings either under sec. 107 or under sec. 110, Cr. P. C. The proceedings themselves showed that it was on this report and petition and no other material that they were based.

Although the High Court seldom interferes in the preliminary stage with the discretion of the Magistrate taking action under the preventive sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, when the materials on which such orders are based are clearly insufficient to support those orders, the High Court should interfere and quash the orders and proceedings.

These were two Rules granted against the order of H. G. Bloomfield, Esq., I. C. S., District Magistrate of Nadia, drawing up proceedings under secs. 110 (d) and 107, Cr. P. C., dated the 11th May 1923.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows :—

The Petitioner Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury, is one of the principal zamindars in the District of Nadia. In February 1923 some of his tenants, of mouza Mahajanpur, submitted a memorial to His Excellency the Governor of Bengal alleging that (1) the zamindar habitually realised settlement costs from the tenants, (2) that on the refusal of the tenants to pay the same, the zamindar's men impounded their cattle and harassed them by false litigation, (3) that the zamindar's gomostha did not grant rent receipts at the time of payment but granted receipts after deducting 4 to 6 as. per rupee as parbani, mathut, etc., (4) that the zamindar's men forcibly took away vegetables from the gardens of tenants and also took away molasses from those who tapped trees, (5) that the zamindar took ghee, milk, etc., on making inadequate payments, and (6) that the zamindar upheld the actions of his men who destroyed the crops of tenants by grazing cattle thereon. This memorial was sent to H. G. Bloomfield, Esq., I.C.S., District Magistrate of Nadia, who in turn sent it to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Meherpur for report after enquiry. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate reported in detail after examining a large number of witnesses and found that allegations Nos. 1, 2, 5 and 6 were not established but found that allegation No. 3 was true and was established against the zamindar's gomostha and allegation No. 4 was established against zamindar's menials but there was no forcible taking away of vegetables in recent times. Upon receipt of the said report of the Sub-Divisional Officer, dated the 1st May 1923, the District Magistrate drew up proceedings against the Petitioner under secs. 107 and 110, cl. (d) of the Code of Criminal Procedure asking the Petitioner to show cause both under secs. 107 and 110, cl. (d), Cr. P. C. Thereupon the Petitioner moved the High Court to quash the proceedings mainly on the ground that the initiation of the proceedings was bad in law inasmuch as there were no materials upon which the same could be legally founded.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerjee (with him Babus Amarendra Nath Bose and Radhikaranjan Guha) for the Petitioner.—There were not sufficient materials to initiate the proceedings against the Petitioner. The High Court under similar circumstances quashed the proceedings. The liberty of the citizens should not be interfered with lightly, In re: Jai Prakash Lal (1), Queen-Empress v. Abdul Kadir (2) and Rajendra Narain Singh v. Emperor (3) and the unreported decision of N. Chatterjea, J. and Cuming, J., in Ainuddin v. Emperor (4).

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer for the Crown submitted that their Lordships ought not to interfere at the initial stage in proceedings under the preventive sections of the Code.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

These Rules are directed against two orders of the District Magistrate of Nadia drawing up proceedings under secs. 107 and 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the Petitioner Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury. The Petitioner is a wealthy zamindar aged 74 years and in his early days he was more than once commended for his public spirit and liberality. In February last some tenants of village Mahajanpur in his zamindary who have become refractory submitted a memorial to His Excellency the Governor of Bengal. This memorial was sent down to the Collector of Nadia for disposal. The Collector sent it to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Meherpur for report after local enquiry. The Sub-Divisional Officer reported in detail after examining a large number of witnesses. The substance of his report is that out of six definite allegations made in the petition four were not established. The remaining two he believed to be true as against the zamindar's servants but held that the zamindar's responsibility for these acts had not been established. On receipt of this report the learned District Magistrate of Nadia drew up the proceedings which in these Rules we are asked to quash.

These proceedings are based on the petition and the report. Reading the two together it is impossible to hold that they furnish any material sufficient to justify proceedings either under sec. 107 or under sec. 110, Cr. P. C. The proceedings themselves show that it was on this report and petition and no other material that they are based. The explanation submitted by the Magistrate shows clearly that he has come to the conclusion that the Petitioner is guilty of all the accusations against him and that he is clearly prejudiced against him. But the explanation does not disclose what grounds the Magistrate has for coming to this conclusion. This Court seldom interferes in the preliminary stage with the discretion of the Magistrate taking action under the preventive sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but when in a case like this the materials on which the orders are based are clearly insufficient to support those orders we feel bound to interfere.

We accordingly make these Rules absolute and quash the orders of the District Magistrate calling on the Petitioner to show cause both under secs. 107 and 110, Cr. P. C.

Rule made absolute;

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

LORD BUCKMASTER. LORD PHILLIMORE. SIR JOHN EDGE. SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS. LORD SALVESEN. 1922, Heard, 28 and 30, November. Judgment, 30, November.	CHALIKANI VENKATARAYANIM GARU and ors., Appellants, v. SREE RAJAH VATSAVAYA VENKATA SUBADRAYAMMA JAGAPATI BAHADUR GARU and ors, Respondents.

Mortgage—Collateral advantages to mortgagee, stipulated for in mortgage deed—Valid and invalid stipulations—Tender—Release of debtor from obligation to tender, what act amounts to—Costs.

A mortgage with possession provided for the repayment of the mortgage money according to certain instalments and contained inter alia the following stipulations: (1) certain charges to be incurred by the mortgagee when in possession were fixed at Rs. 4,000 per annum, (2) a lease was to be given for two years of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, at the expiry of which the mortgagor was to deliver possession to the mortgagee, failing which the mortgaged property was to stand sold to the mortgagee for the entire amount due, and (3) that the mortgagor should not sell any portion of the estate to anybody except the mortgagee. The Appellants having purchased the equity of redemption on 16th January 1894, on 10th February 1894 tendered to the mortgagee an instalment of Rs. 15,000 which had fallen due on 1st February 1894; but the two years' lease meanwhile having expired and possession not having thereupon been delivered as stipulated to the mortgagee, the latter refused to accept the instalment fearing that such acceptance might pre- judice his rights. On 17th January 1899, the Appellants wrote to the mortgagee to be informed of the amount due to him on the mortgage, which the letter stated they were prepared to pay in full. The mortgagee in reply stated that owing to breaches of the conditions of the mortgage, the estate had vested in the mortgagee, so that there was no need for the intended payment, but the letter concluded with a statement of the amount due on the mortgage. The Appellants thereafter made no further tender and did not pay any money into Court:

Held—That the agreement fixing the annual allowance at Rs. 4,000 for payment of charges was not open to objection as a collateral advantage which the mortgagee was not entitled to exact.

That there was no justification for the refusal of the tender of Rs. 15,000 made on 10th February 1894, the delay of nine days being immaterial.

That the view expressed in the mortgagee's reply to the Appellants' letter of 17th January 1899 that the whole of the estate had vested in him was erroneous being based upon invalid provisions in the deed, but it did not follow that the reply meant that if in fact tender had been made of the whole of the amount due the mortgagee would not have accepted it. The reply therefore did not constitute such a clear release to the mortgagor of his obligation to tender the money as is required to justify the latter in not having presented it for receipt.

HUNTER v. DANIEL (1) approved.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Madras, dated the 21st November 1917, varying a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, dated the 25th December 1915.

(1) 4 Hare Rep 420 (1845).

The suit was instituted by the mortgagee against the Appellants and others to enforce a mortgage executed by the predecessors-in-title of the present Appellants, who are assignees of the equity of redemption.

The mortgage was executed in March 1891 in favour of the Raja of Tuni to secure repayment of Rs. 1,80,000.

Seven annual instalments of Rs. 10,000 were agreed upon for repayment of the mortgage debt from February 1892-1898, the balance of the principal and the whole of the interest to be payable in February 1899.

The mortgagee granted to the mortgagor a mustajari lease for two years and the mortgage provided that :—

"If during our said mustajari period of two years, the amount of any instalment is not paid but remains due to any extent, we shall deliver the estate and other landed property to you without any objection so that you may, at the end of the said period of two years, take possession of the estate immediately and manage the same by leasing it out, either on ryotwari or mustajari system."

The material provisions of the mortgage and the facts leading up to the suit are summarised in the judgment of the Board. The mortgagor failed to pay the second instalment due in February 1893 and retained possession at the end of his lease, whereupon the mortgagee obtained a decree and entered into possession in July 1894.

The main questions for consideration in the appeal were (1) whether the first Respondent was entitled to interest on the mortgage amount subsequent to the 1st February 1899, the date fixed for payment of the mortgage amount, (2) whether the first Respondent was entitled to interest on the instalment of Rs. 10,000 due in February 1894, subsequent to the 10th February 1894, the date on which the amount was tendered and refused, and (3) whether the first Respondent was entitled to debit Rs. 4,000 for establishment charges every year or only the actual amounts spent for the purpose.

The Subordinate Judge held that interest was payable subsequent to February 1899, that the tender of Rs. 10,000 for the instalment of February 1894 was made on the 10th instead of the 1st and that the mortgagee was entitled to refuse it, but in his view the Plaintiff was entitled to debit only the actual amounts spent in establishment charges.

The High Court (Abdur Rahim and Oldfield, JJ.) held that the mere expression of willingness on the part of a debtor to pay a debt cannot amount to a tender in law so as to bring the case within sec. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Both Courts in India held that the offer to redeem was not bonâ fide as the mortgagors or their assignees were not in a position to pay the sum due.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., Narasimham and C. V. Rao for the Appellants.—There was an undoubted offer in 1899 by the Appellants to redeem and this was refused by the mortgagee. It then became unnecessary for the mortgagor either to tender or deposit in Court and sec. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act is inapplicable.

By his action the mortgagee waived his right to a tender of the money and it is outside the scope of the enquiry to find whether the mortgagor was or was not actually in a position to pay the mortgage debt.

The provision as to Rs. 4,000 establishment charges was a clog on the equity of redemption.

Sec. 60, Transfer of Property Act.

Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Co. (2).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.—There was never any genuine offer to pay off the mortgage-debt. The mortgagor was neither able nor willing to pay it off and so the High Court have found.

These conditions cannot be waived. The Appellants' contention really amounts to this that the writing of a letter such as the mortgagor wrote places him in a better position than if he had actually tendered and paid the money into Court.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C. in reply referred to Cort v. Ambergate Railway Co. (3).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Three questions are raised upon this appeal. They all arise out of the rights created under a mortgage deed which was executed on the 2nd March 1891, in favour of the first Plaintiff in the suit by the first Defendant. The Appellants are assignees of the equity of redemption of that mortgage, and claim that in the accounts taken to determine the true amount due under the deed three mistakes have been made adverse to their interests. The mortgage deed itself is in a peculiar form. It is a mortgage with possession to secure the repayment of Rs. 180,000 with interest at the rate of R. 1 per cent. per month; the principal of the debt is to be repaid by sums of Rs. 10,000 payable year after year, beginning on the 1st February 1892, down to the 1st February 1898, and on the 1st February 1899, the entire balance of the debt and the interest is to be paid. These instalments are protected not merely by the security of the mortgaged property but also by an express agreement in these terms: "We shall pay to you at Tuni, the principal according to the aforesaid instalments and the whole of the interest upon the entire debt calculated with reference to the instalments, along with the last instalment." There was a further agreement in the deed by which certain charges which would be incurred by the mortgagee, when in possession, were fixed at the sum of Rs. 4,000 per annum. They are specified as being the usual earthwork repairs annually done to canals, etc., expenses on account of the village headmen, service inams of village headmen, village deities, contingent charges, and other business expenses. The deed also contained two further material provisions. The first that notwithstanding the arrangement by which the mortgagee was to be put into possession a lease was to be granted by him to the mortgagor for a period of two years, and the second that if the provisions of the mortgage deed as to redelivery of the estate to the mortgagee by the mortgagor at the expiration of the lease for two years were not carried out, the mortgaged estate should at the end of the time stand sold to the mortgagee for the entire amount due inclusive of the balance of principal and interest, and further that the mortgagor should not sell any portion of the estate to anybody except the mortgagee. Arrangements were also made by which the mortgagee was to pay all the necessary peishcush or quit rent or land cess, and a provision that if that should be raised there should be a further right on his part to recover the money from the mortgagor with interest as therein mentioned. What happened consequent upon the execution of the deed was this: The lease for two years was duly granted to the mortgagor, but at the expiration of the term he did not pay the second instalment due on February 1, 1893, nor did he redeliver possession to the mortgagee. The mortgagee accordingly instituted a suit for recovery and possession and for the amount of the second instalment. To meet this a sum of Rs. 15,000 was paid into Court by the Appellants on behalf of the mortgagor, but possession was not delivered up by him, and he was in fact in possession at the time when the third instalment became due.

(2) [1914] A. C. 25, 61.
(3) 17 Q. B. 127 (1851).

Shortly before this date, namely on the 16th January 1894, the mortgagor executed a sale deed for Rs. 160,000 for some of the mortgaged properties, and a mortgage for Rs. 60,000 for the others in favour of the Appellants, and requested them to pay to the mortgagee Rs. 205,000, being the total Rs. 220,000 after deducting the Rs. 15,000 already paid into Court. The Appellants accordingly, on the 10th February 1894, tendered the Rs. 10,000, due on the 1st February to the mortgagee, who refused to accept the money upon the ground that there existed at that date a breach of the bargain made by the mortgagor as to redelivery of possession, and that consequently his acceptance might prejudice his rights. Their Lordships think that this is a mistaken view of the rights which the mortgagee possessed. The agreement for the payment of the instalments of the purchase-money is in fact the main obligation of the mortgage deed, and the whole of the other provisions, however extensive and far-reaching they may be, are really nothing but the security to enforce this obligation. The acceptance of Rs. 10,000 due on the 1st February 1894 would not have prejudiced the mortgagee in any way in the claim he had then pending against the mortgagor for possession; and their lordships think there was consequently no justification for his refusal of the tender. The fact that the tender was nine days after the due date is of course immaterial; accordingly, in taking the accounts, interest on the sum of Rs. 10,000 according to the terms of the deed must cease to be charged against the mortgagor from the 10th February 1894.

On the 13th July 1894, the mortgagee obtained a decree for possession, and entered in pursuance of its terms, so that the agreement for the annual allowance of Rs. 4,000 for the particular payments to which reference has been made became operative, and the next question is as to the validity of that agreement. It is urged on behalf of the Appellants that it gives the mortgagee a collateral advantage under the deed which he is not entitled to exact, but their Lordships think that that contention cannot be supported. The truth is that it is a fixed payment to be made in respect of a variable charge, and though it may be assumed that the amount was not fixed so as to prejudice the mortgagee, there is nothing to prevent the mortgagor and mortgagee entering into a bargain as to what sum should be charged annually for expenses that may or may not exceed the agreed figure. They therefore think the objection to the Rs. 4,000 cannot be maintained.

There remains what is after all the most serious part of this appeal, and it is the claim that in February 1899, the Appellants were willing and offered to make a tender of the whole of the outstanding principal and interest, but that the mortgagee so acted as to excuse the actual tender being made, and that in consequence there is no longer any right on the part of the mortgagee to debit interest in the mortgage accounts from that date. This controversy depends upon the true meaning to be placed on two important letters. The first is written on the 17th January 1899, by the Appellants to the mortgagee. It refers to the mortgage and the assignments, and points out that the balance of the monies payable by them to the mortgagor in respect of such transaction—which appear to be stated erroneously at Rs. 2,25,000 instead of Rs, 205,000—had not been paid over but left with them for satisfaction of the mortgage debt, and concludes in this way: "It is requested that, on receipt of this letter, the amount becoming due to you by that date from the estate may be made known at once. Soon after receipt of your letter, we are ready to send respectable men with money and get the repayment of the amount of your debt made in full in the forenoon on the due date. Your reply is requested." Both the Subordinate Judge and the High Court Judges, before whom this case has been heard, have come to the conclusion that that was not a bonâ fide offer on the part of the Appellants. They say they had not at that time either the money or the control of the money that would have enabled them to meet the tender of the large amount that was due upon the mortgage deed. Their Lordships think, for reasons that will presently appear, that it is not necessary to consider that question. It is very difficult indeed to say whether or no a man will be able to have control of money at a future date, and the real question to be determined here is not whether that money was within the power of the Appellants but whether the mortgagee in the letter he sent in answer to the offer definitely and unequivocally refused to accept the money were it tendered. Before reading this reply it is well to bear in mind what has been stated by Vice-Chancellor Wigram in the case of Hunter v. Daniel (1) as to the true position in such a case. He there says: "The practice of the Courts is not to require a party to make a formal tender where from the facts stated in the Bill or from the evidence it appears the tender would have been a mere form and that the party to whom it was made would have refused to accept the money." Their Lordships think that that is a true and accurate expression of the law, and the question, therefore, is whether the answer that was sent on behalf of the mortgagee amounted to a clear refusal to accept the money. The letter is dated the 28th February 1899, and is in part in the form of an argument, and the substantial part is as set out in the record in these words:—"As in the face of the suit instituted by us of late in the District Court of Vizagapatam against the proprietor for possession of the entire proprietary estate of Uratla held by us under the terms of our possessory mortgage deed, you have purchased from the proprietor, as you have stated, during the pendency of that suit and subsequent thereto, with full knowledge of the conditions, etc., of our possessory mortgage deed, and yet in contravention of the same and without necessity, a considerable portion of the estate at different times for Rs. 2,40,000 in favour of yourself and others, there is no need for us to pay any of those amounts you state under that head, inasmuch as the right to purchase that estate for that sale price has vested in us.".

The explanation of the earlier part of that paragraph is due to the provisions contained in the deed which prohibit, so far as they had the power, just such a transaction as that which had taken place. The latter part of the letter is unfortunately an obvious mistake or misprint. Either it should run, "there is no need for us to receive," or "there is no need for you to pay us any of those amounts you state under that head." The better reading in favour of the Appellants is the latter, "there is no need for you to pay any of those amounts you state under that head inasmuch as the right to purchase that estate for the sale price is vested in us." Accepting this as the true reading, the meaning of the letter in their Lordships' mind is this, that the rights which the mortgagee had conferred upon him have vested in him the whole of the estate, and that consequently the mortgage is at an end. It was an erroneous view based upon invalid provisions in the deed, but it by no means followed from that that if in fact the tender had been made of the whole of the principal money and interest which was due up to that date, the mortgagee would not have accepted it, and it is remarkable that in the latter part of the letter he continues in these words: "In reply to the letter, dated 14th ultimo, from the Proprietor about the balance of demand after payments made, on the Proprietary Estate of Kota Uratla, we informed him on the 27th instant, that the amount of debt due under our said deed was Rs. 3,19,946-2-2." Now upon the view that this letter was intended to excuse the mortgagor from making any tender at all under the deed, there could have been no possible reason for stating what the amount was that was to be paid. The fact is that this letter contains a reason why the tender is unnecessary, but the reason was wrong because the right to buy according to the terms which the mortgage deed contained was a right which was not enforceable in law. But it is on that hypothesis that they say there is no need for payment to be made. If this were not accepted as correct, there is nothing to relieve the Appellants from making the tender. Their Lordships are unable to construe the letter as equivalent to any such clear release to the mortgagor of his obligation to tender the money as is required in order to justify him in not having presented it for receipt. From, that time to this nothing has in fact been tendered. No money has been paid into Court, and no effort on the part of the mortgagor has been made to satisfy his obligations under the deed. Their Lordships, therefore, think that the Appellant must fail upon that part of his appeal. It follows, therefore, that the appeal succeeds, but succeeds only to a very limited extent, but though it is small in relation to the part in respect of which he fails, he does obtain some substantial relief which could not have been obtained without coming before this Board, and their Lordships therefore think, having considered all the circumstances, that he ought to have one-half of the taxed costs of the appeal, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[Appeal from the Chief Court of Lower Burma.]

Lord Phillimore.

Heard, 14 and 16, November.
Judgment, 16, November.

A. E. Salayjee, Appellant,
v.
Fatima Bi Bi, Respondent.

Mahomedan law—Will—Bequest to heir—Consent of heirs—Consent of some, effect of—Minor heirs cannot consent.

The Mahomedan law does not allow a testator to leave a legacy to any of his heirs unless the other heirs agree, but any single heir may so agree as to bind his own share.

There can be no question of consent as regards minor heirs.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Chief Court, Lower Burma, dated the 9th June 1919, which varied a decree of the said Chief Court in its Original Jurisdiction, dated the 3rd July 1918

The parties to the dispute are Sunni Mahomedans. The Appellant is the son and one of the heirs and sole executor of the Will of Ebrahim Salayjee Nanabarva who died at Variar in Baroda State on the 25th February 1907.

The Respondent is a daughter and one of the heirs of the testator.

The testator by his Will appointed the Appellant sole executor and trustee and desired he should sell all his properties and out of the proceeds set apart ¼th share instead of ⅓rd or "suls" and after certain specific bequests authorised the Appellant to dispose of the remainder in such manner as he should think proper, and the testator directed that neither his heirs nor any person should be entitled to take any account from the executor regarding such disposal, and he authorised the Appellant to charge a commission of 10 per cent. on cash coming to his hands and on the proceeds of all his properties sold.

The suit was instituted by the Respondent for an account and for a declaration that the provisions of the Will which authorised the Appellant to dispose of ¼th share in the estate in such manner as he should think proper and to charge commission were inoperative and void, and that such undisposed of portion of the estate formed part of the estate of the testator divisible among the heirs according to their respective shares. The Appellant contended that the provisions of the Will were valid and alleged the consent of the Respondent to the carrying out of the disputed provisions.

The trial Court (Young, J.) held the disputed provisions to be void but held also that the Respondent had impliedly consented to them, that sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act made the granting a declaration discretionary and that there were no circumstances to justify such a declaration. On appeal the Chief Court decided that there were no circumstances from which an implied consent on the part of the Respondent could be inferred and reversed the decree of the lower Court on that point.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellant contended that the Appellate Court should not have interfered with the discretion exercised by the trial Judge and that the evidence established the consent of the Respondent to the disputed provisions of the Will.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Gerard S. Sanders for the Respondent were not called upon.

LORD PHILLIMORE.—The dispute in this case arises in the course of the administration of the estate of a wealthy Mahomedan, who died on the 25th February 1907, having left a Will dated the 15th June 1903, which was admitted to probate on the 18th March 1908. By that Will he left his only son, the Defendant in this suit and the present Appellant, his executor, and he gave him certain powers and professed to entitle him to a commission of 10 per cent. on the proceeds of the sale of all his estate. That provision is twice over expressed, but substantially the effect is the same on the two occasions. He also, instead of reserving, as by Mahomedan law he could, one-third of his estate for his general disposition, reserved somewhat less—one-fourth, and with regard to that fourth he directed the executor, whom he described also as "executor and trustee" to pay certain charitable legacies amounting to Rs. 13,700, directing at the same time that none of his heirs or any other persons should be entitled to have any right to claim an account of his disbursements from the executor, and, with regard to the balance of the fourth share he gave it to the executor to spend or to dispose of in such manner as to him should seem fit and proper. This has been treated in both Courts as a legacy of the residue of the fourth share to the Defendant, the present Appellant.

There were various heirs, widows and children, by various families. The Plaintiff and Respondent now, a widow lady, was the eldest sister and of the same full blood as the Defendant, Appellant.

In 1917 she instituted this suit alleging that the two provisions for the benefit of her brother, namely, that giving him 10 per cent., and that giving him the balance of the fourth share, were contrary to Mahomedan law. It appeared in the course of the suit, if it had not appeared before, that several of the heirs had agreed nevertheless to the Appellant retaining his interest, as, according to Mahomedan law, they could, but there remained the Plaintiff, and there remained three minor children, and the contest in the suit was with regard to the Plaintiff. The Mahomedan law does not allow a testator to leave a legacy to any of his heirs unless the other heirs agree, but any single heir may so agree as to bind his own share, and, therefore, when it appeared in the course of the suit that the other heirs had agreed, the only contest was as regards the Plaintiff and the three minors. As regards the three minors there could be no question of their consent and the dispute therefore turned on the question whether the Plaintiff had consented or not.

Now the burden of proving that consent was on the Appellant, the Defendant in the suit. Both parties tendered oral evidence, each putting his or her case more strongly than the trial Judge thought was correct; the Plaintiff averring that she had protested from the first and had been put off by a promise that she should have her proper share (this the trial Judge did not accept); the Defendant averring on the contrary that he had made quite clear to the Plaintiff what the provisions of the Will were, and the Plaintiff, regarding him as the only male in the house, had expressed not only her consent but her pleasure that he should have this benefit. With regard to that the trial Judge found that there was oath against oath; that there was no corroboration, the only other person present being the husband of the Plaintiff, who was by this time dead, and, in the end, he was not satisfied that this consent was proved. He thereupon said that there was no direct evidence of explicit consent and the question turned upon whether there was implied consent, and the only two grounds of implied consent that he relied upon were delay and a certain transaction with regard to a loan and the interest upon it. On those materials he found in favour of the Defendant that there was an implied consent.

The Plaintiff appealed to the Chief Court, and the Chief Court reversing the decision of the primary Judge, found that there was not sufficient evidence of an implied consent, and the learned Judges agreed with the trial Judge that there was no proof of an explicit consent.

Thereupon this appeal was brought; but, in their Lordships' opinion, unsuccessfully. The burden of proof was, as already stated, upon the Defendant, and the only two elements to be considered were the question of time and the question of the loan. As to the first the delay is explained because the estate was not in fact realized until after the suit—by general consent only realized in parts from time to time—and there was no such realization and no such stating of accounts, even temporary or provisional stating of accounts, as could be suggested to have shown to the Plaintiff that the estate was being divided upon the footing that the Defendant was to be entitled to retain these advantages, for both Courts decided that both these advantages were legacies which had to be justified.

With regard to the loan it appears that in 1908 the lady's husband wanted some money to release a mortgage on his house, and the lady, not unnaturally, went to her brother, who was collecting money from time to time and asked for some money—it was not a very large sum—to enable her to pay off this mortgage. He thereupon appears to have said that he had no money, but as the lady was pressing him and he probably felt that he was an accounting party, he offered to borrow it, but said that she would have to be surety for the loan. She was prepared to do this but demurred to paying interest. Up to that point the parties are in substantial agreement. He did borrow money; she did, jointly with him, execute the promissory note to a Chetty, and she took from her brother a letter promising her that she should not have to pay the interest. Now what was the reason of this transaction? It is suggested for the Defendant that she said to him that he was taking great advantages under their father's Will—more than the Mahomedan law allows, and therefore the least he could do was to pay this interest. She denies this and says that she was asking for some of the money which was coming to her, and therefore it was quite right that he should relieve her from paying this interest. Now if it had appeared that he had really relieved her from paying the interest there would be some substance in the contention, although their Lordships do not say there would be very much substance in it then. But, it appears that he has now debited this lady, as part of her share, with the interest on this loan. After that it becomes of less importance to consider this transaction, but, even apart from that, the transaction is far from sufficient by itself to support an implied consent. That is the view the Chief Court took, and, their Lordships think, quite rightly, and, therefore, they will humbly recommend His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

* * * * *

In January 1921, R filed a suit for dissolution of partnership. Dorian Evans contended that he was not a partner inasmuch as he had no share in the profits of the business. Greaves, J., who tried the suit decided against this contention and gave a decree for dissolution of partnership, etc. Dorian Evans preferred an appeal which was heard by Woodroffe and Richardson, JJ., who differed. The result was that the senior Judge's (Woodroffe, J.) decision prevailed who held that Dorian Evans was not a partner. The present appeal was preferred by Babu Lala Raghumull against this decision. Dorian Evans was adjudicated insolvent during the pendency of the appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF WOODROFFE, J., was as follows :—

The issue in this case is whether the Appellant is a partner of a firm of which the Plaintiff-Respondent and the Respondents H. C. Ghosh and D. N. Sircar were admittedly partners. He says he was not, but was a manager who got Rs. 500 per month and 10 per cent. commission calculated on the net profits of the business as his remuneration for managing the firm. The learned Judge has held that he is a partner and has passed a decree which both sides admit is not a good decree, for it makes no provision for any share of profits going to the Defendant who is found by the judgment to be a partner. I will exclude from consideration a letter by the contesting Respondent Raghumull who now says that the Appellant is a partner but which letter stated that he, Raghumull, was the owner of the business and the Appellant was only to have a monthly allowance, apparently as remuneration of his management.

It may be admitted at once that the memorandum of agreement of the partnership contained provisions which can be referred to, to show that the Appellant is, as the Respondent contends, a partner. The question is whether they can be explained, or if not, whether they outweighed the considerations to which I will refer. Thus the document is called a memorandum of partnership agreement. The parties to the document are said to be desirous of starting a partnership business and, in cl. 12 the Appellant and H. C. Ghosh are directly called managing partners and cl. 23 contemplates an act by the Appellant which might be a ground for dissolution of partnership by the Court. I may here say that callin, a man partner or a man calling himself a partner does not make him such. It must be seen whether the provisions under which the parties come together do constitute in law and fact a partnership. Apart from this, the document being loosely drawn it is possible to construe these references to a partnership in such a way as gives effect to them without affecting the Appellant's contention. Thus the memorandum was in fact a co-partnership agreement as regards three of the parties to it. All of them again may have been desirous of starting a partnership business in which their respective positions were to be those specified in the deed, without referring for the moment to the question whether the position assigned to the Appellant amounted to a partnership so far as he was concerned. The other two points to which I have referred have for whatever they are worth greater weight. Reliance is also placed on the fact that the name of the Appellant was used for the firm and he was given considerable powers. But this may mean that the Respondent Lala Raghumull who was supplying the capital was desirous of having the advantage of an English name for the firm and wisely enough left the management to a man who presumably knew the business which was that of the partnership.

The ground upon which I would decide this appeal is this: A person may share in profits and yet not be a partner. But a person cannot be a partner without sharing in profits. If he does not share in profits he may be called a partner, but is not in law or fact such. The question in short is, was the Appellant to have a share in the profits. This is the whole question in short which arises in this appeal.

To me it seems clear on a construction of the document that he was neither to share in the profits nor to share in the loss. As regards the profits the 5th paragraph of the agreement says: "The said Mr. Dorian Evans will be in charge of the firm and devote his whole time in the business of the firm and will get Rs. 500 per month as remuneration over and above 10 per cent. as commission on the net profit of the business exclusive of all the cost expense for payment of rent, taxes, municipal license, salaries of servants and all other charges and expenses to be incurred in carrying on partnership business but he will get no shares of profit of the firm." After having stated expressly that he will have no share in the profits of the firm the next paragraph proceeds to allocate to the other three persons the shares which they are to get, and states that "Babu Lala Raghumull will get 12 annas share, H. C. Ghosh will get 2-6 annas share and Babu D. N. Sircar will get 1-6 annas share in the profits of the said business." This exhausts the whole 16 annas of profits.

As regards loss para. 19 says: "If the firm suffer any loss Mr. Dorian Evans will get his monthly remuneration regularly, but he will not get any commission and the other partners will be liable for the said loss according to their shares."

Apparently to meet the case that the Appellant is not a partner the plaint alleges in para. 1 that the Appellant was to get besides remuneration at the rate of Rs. 500 a month, 10 per cent. of the profit and loss and the balance of 90 per cent. of the profit and loss was to be divided between and borne by the Plaintiff and the Defendants Hari Charan Ghosh and Dina Nath Sircar according to the shares mentioned in para. 6 of the agreement to which I have referred. But this is not what the agreement says. The agreement does not say that the Appellant was to have 10 per cent. of the profit and loss, but 10 per cent. was given to him as a commission which was calculated on the amount of the net profit, which is a different thing. On the contrary the agreement expressly says that he is to have no share of the profit of the firm and is not to be liable for any loss. I am unable to agree that a commission, the amount of which is calculated on the net profits, is the same as a share of the profits. Such a provision is a well-known one and acted upon here, namely, the payment to persons as managers of a fixed salary together with a commission calculated on the net profits. This I think is done without it being supposed that the recipient of the commission thereby becomes a partner. Moreover, as I have said, cl. 5 in express terms states that the Appellant is not to get any share of the profits of the firm, and to make it still more clear, cl. 6 which does set out the shares of the profits altogether excludes the Appellant.

This point appears to me to have such force as to justify me in differing from the opinion of my learned brother in this matter—a course which I might otherwise have hesitated to take, seeing that his opinion is also that of the learned Judge whose judgment is under appeal. As in my opinion the Appellant was not to share in the profit or loss it was not a partnership and this is what he contends. In my opinion the appeal ought to be allowed with costs and the suit as regards the Appellant should be dismissed with costs.

The JUDGMENT OF RICHARDSON, J., was as follows :—

The question whether the Appellant Dorian Evans is a partner in the firm of Dorian Evans & Co. turns on the terms of a written agreement, dated the 15th June 1919. This document describes itself as a "memorandum of co-partnership agreement" among four persons, the Plaintiff, the Appellant, and the other two Defendants in the suit H. C. Ghosh and D. N. Sircar (not represented before us). This general description of the nature of the agreement is followed by the words: "Whereas the said persons are desirous of entering into a partnership business upon (sic) on terms and conditions hereinafter contained, viz.," the sentence such as it is, is never grammatically finished but though the English may be imperfect and the language rough, primâ facie no words could more clearly and unequivocally express the intention of the four persons to become partners on the terms and conditions which are then set out in separate clauses numbered from 1 to 23.

By cl. 1 the firm's name was to be Messrs. Dorian Evans & Co.

By cl. 2 the capital of the firm Rs. 1,00,000 was to be supplied by the Plaintiff who in addition to his share of the profits was to receive interest on this amount at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

By cl. 3 the firm was to continue for a period of five years commencing from the 1st July 1919.

Cl. 4 provides: "That the partnership business shall be that of hardware but partners may include other business with their mutual consent."

Cls. 5 and 6 upon which the Appellant takes his stand are as follows :—

"5. That the said Mr. Dorian Evans will be in charge of the firm and devote his whole time in the business of the firm and will get Rs. 500 per month as his remuneration over and above 10 per cent. as commission on the net profit of the business exclusive of all the cost expense for payment of rent, taxes, municipal license, salaries of servants and all other charges and expenses to be incurred in carrying on partnership business but he will get no shares of profit of the firm.

6. That the Babu Lala Raghumull will get 12 (twelve) annas shares and H. C. Ghosh will get 2-6 annas shares and Babu D. N. Sircar will get 1-6 annas shares in the profits of the said business."

These two clauses should be read with the first sentence of cl. 19 which runs :—

"If the firm suffer any loss, Mr. Dorian Evans will get his monthly remuneration regularly but he will not get any commission and the other partners will be liable for the said loss according to their shares."

Cl. 7 like many others is badly expressed but quite intelligible. Dorian Evans is to remain in charge of the firm, to devote all his time to improving the business with all his effort and H. C. Ghosh is to devote his whole time to the firm and to supervise the sale department.

In cl. 12 Dorian Evans and H. C. Ghosh are described as "managing partners."

By cl. 14, the general management of the firm is to remain entirely in the hands of Dorian Evans and H. C. Ghosh.

Cl. 15 empowers the same two persons to appoint and to discharge the servants of the firm.

Cl. 20 is also of some importance on the point of control. It reads :—

"If any big job of value of above Rs. 25,000 (twenty-five thousand) is taken in hand all the partners should be consulted and the premission of the capitalist partner Lala Raghumull be taken."

Cl. 23 is in the nature of a penal clause. If Dorian Evans and H. C. Ghosh do certain things, and inter alia, if they "do or suffer any act which would be ground for dissolution of the partnership by the Court," then the Plaintiff as capitalist partner, "may within three calendar months after becoming aware thereof by notice in writing determine the partnership."

My learned brother's view makes me diffident of my own. Otherwise I should have thought that under this deed the Appellant was undoubtedly the partner of the Plaintiff and the other two Defendants.

It is said that cl. 5 of the agreement expressly states that the Appellant "will get no shares of profit of the firm." In my opinion that can only mean in the context that he is to get no share other than the share already provided for, namely, a salary of Rs. 500 a month and a commission of 10 per cent. on the net profits. The first sentence of cl. 19 supports this construction. If the Appellant was not a partner but a mere servant or managing agent, what was the necessity of providing that if the firm should suffer loss he should still "get his monthly remuneration regularly." The view that the Appellant was a partner is also supported by the powers of control and management conferred on him and H. C. Ghosh by such clauses as 4, 12, 14, 15 and 20. The Appellant was to have at least an equal voice in the management with H. C. Ghosh.

No doubt if cls. 5 and 6 are abstracted from the rest of the document, I should agree that they point to the Appellant being a mere servant or manager remunerated by salary and by a commission on the profits.

But the intention of the parties must be gathered from the agreement as a whole. The agreement as a whole, as I read it, plainly manifests the intention of the parties to it, including the Appellant, to enter into partnership with one another. The Appellant in my opinion became a partner unless it can be said that the receipt of a fixed salary or of a commission on the net profits can never in law amount to sharing in the profits within the meaning of sec. 239 of the Contract Act which defines "partnership" as the relation subsisting between persons "who have agreed to combine their property, labour or skill in some business and to share the profits thereof between them."

A commission of 10 per cent. on the net profits is a fixed share of those profits and the argument for the Appellant seems merely to resuscitate a distinction which has been abandoned with the rule that any "participation in the net profits of a business made the participant liable as a partner to third persons." In the leading case of Mollwo, March & ors. v. The Court of Wards (2), the Privy Council stigmatized this rule as "evidently an arbitrary one." Their Lordships continue:—"While it was supposed to prevail much hardship arose from its application, and a distinction, equally arbitrary was established between a right to participate in profits generally as such, and a right to payment by way of salary or commission in proportion (to use the words of Lord Eldon) 'to a given quantum of the profits'."

"This distinction has always been admitted to be thin, but it may be observed that the supposed rule itself was arbitrary in the sense of being imposed by law and of being founded on an assumption opposed in many cases to the real relation of the parties; and when the law thus creates a rule of liability and a distinction both equally arbitrary, the distinction which protects from liability is entitled to as much weight as the rule which imposes it."

Their Lordships go on to point out that the necessity of resorting to these fine distinctions had been greatly lessened since the rule or presumption itself had lost the rigid character it was originally supposed to possess and the conclusion of the matter is thus stated:—

"It appears to be now established that a right to participate in the profits of trade is a strong test of partnership and that there may be cases when from such participation alone, it may, as a presumption, not of law but of fact, be inferred; yet whether that relation does or does not exist, must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties."

It is true that these observations were made with reference to the liability of an alleged partner to third persons but the reasoning has its application, and has in fact been applied, where the question

The English law on the topic as it stood after the leading case (an Indian case be it noted) was codified in cl. (3) of sec. 2 of the Partnership Act of 1890 (53 and 54, Vic., c. 39). The clause lays down the general rule and then applies it to particular cases dealt with in sub-clauses. The general rule and the relevant sub-cl. (b) read as follows:—

"The receipt by a person of a share of the profits of a business is primâ facie evidence that he is a partner in the business, but the receipt of such a share, or of a payment contingent or varying with the profits of a business does not of itself make him a partner in the business and in particular.

"(b) A contract for the remuneration of a servant or agent of a person engaged in a business by a share of the profits of the business does not of itself make the servant or agent a partner in the business or liable as such."

The principle thus accurately expressed holds true as I conceive as much in India and in England. If that is so and if due emphasis be laid on the words "of itself" which I have underlined, then upon such an agreement as that before us the burden would seem to be on the Appellant to show that he is not a partner rather than on the Plaintiff to show that he is.

I do not, I may add, accept the suggestion of the learned Judge (it was a mere suggestion and not the ground of his judgment) that the Appellant was in some way estopped from contending that as between himself and the other parties to the agreement he was not a partner. If two parties agreed together on terms repugnant to and inconsistent with the partnership relation, they would not be partners in the legal sense inter se, however, the terms might be loosely or mistakenly used in the agreement and whatever rights third parties might have against either of them on the principle that he had held himself out as a partner. But that is not the present case. Here as it seems to me, regard being had to the agreement as a whole cls. 5 and 6 not only can but ought to be construed in a sense consistent with the partnership relation. In the agreement which came before the Court in Walker v. Hirsch (3), the word "partner" was not used, nevertheless the question whether Walker was a partner was taken to the Court of Appeal. It was decided that he was not a partner partly on the ground that he had no voice in the management of the business.

Much was made here of the imperfections of language and the want of art in this agreement. But any argument founded on the form of the agreement as opposed to its substance cuts both ways. It may be possible to say that the terms "partner" and "partnership" were loosely used. But the terms are common business terms and it is much more likely that they were used in their usual legal and business sense and that cls. 5 and 6 were badly constructed.

In my opinion these four persons knew what they wanted. They wanted to be partners. In the agreement before us they sufficiently stated their intention to be partners and nothing therein contained is necessarily inconsistent with the Appellant being a partner. I have no doubt that the Appellant would have claimed the rights of a partner if it had been to his advantage to do so. I hold therefore that the Appellant is a partner with all the rights and liabilities of a partner compatible with the express terms of the agreement, and if the decision rested with me, I should, with great respect to my learned brother, dismiss the appeal with costs.

[Against this judgment there was a further appeal preferred by the Plaintiff under the Letters Patent.]

Sir B. C. Mitter, and Mr. S. N. Banerjee for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. D. Bose and S. K. Chakrabarti for the Official Assignee (Respondent).

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in the suit, one Raghumull Khandelwal, and the Respondent is the Official Assignee representing the estate of one Dorian Evans, who was the first Defendant in the suit.

The suit was brought against Dorian Evans, Hari Charan Ghosh and Dino Nath Sircar on the allegation that there was a partnership between the Plaintiff and the Defendants: and, the prayers were for a declaration of the shares of the parties in the partnership and for a declaration that the partnership stood dissolved on the 21st of December 1920 and for incidental reliefs.

The sole question which we have to consider is whether Dorian Evans was a member of the partnership, which admittedly existed between the Plaintiff and the other two Defendants and, the question depends upon the construction of the agreement, dated the 15th June 1919.

My learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves who tried this suit came to the conclusion that Dorian Evans was a partner in the firm.

There was an appeal by Dorian Evans to the Appeal Court, and the appeal was heard by my learned brothers Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Richardson. These two learned Judges differed in their opinion, Mr. Justice Woodroffe holding that Dorian Evans was not a partner and Mr. Justice Richardson holding that he was a partner. The result was that the opinion of Mr. Justice Woodroffe prevailed and the appeal was allowed.

This appeal is under the Letters Patent against the decision of Mr. Justice Woodroffe.

The terms of the agreement have been so fully dealt with in the judgments of both the learned Judges, who heard the appeal, that I do not think it necessary to go through the clauses in detail. It is sufficient for me to say that but for cls. 5 and 6 of the agreement, in my opinion, there could not be the smallest doubt that Dorian Evans was a partner of the firm in question.

The section of the Contract Act which applies to the matter is sec. 239 which runs as follows: "Partnership is the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to combine their property, labour, or skill in some business, and to share the profits thereof between them." That is the definition of partnership within the meaning of the Contract Act: and, I desire to emphasize in this case, that which I have said on previous occasions, viz., that the principle which was laid down by Lord Herschell in the case of Vagliano Brothers v. The Governor and Company of the Bank of England (1) should be observed when the Court has to consider the interpretation which ought to be put upon a section such as that now under consideration. The learned Lord said as follows; "I think the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the statute, and to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a statute, intended to embody in a code a particular branch of the law, is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated." It is on account of the principle, which was thus laid down, that I do not refer to the English cases, which were cited to us during the argument, and I decide this case having regard to the language of sec. 239 of the Contract Act.

It is not disputed that the proper test is to try and to find out from the agreement. reading it as a whole, what was the real intention and contract of the parties. Applying that test and having regard to the natural meaning of the language used in sec. 239, I have no doubt that the intention of the parties to the agreement was that Mr. Evans should be a partner.

Mr. Justice Woodroffe based his decision on the sole ground that in this case there was no agreement that Dorian Evans should share the profits of the business: and I proceed to deal with that point.

Cl. 5 provides that "the said Mr. Dorian Evans will be in charge of the firm and devote his whole time in the business of the firm and will get Rs. 500 per month as his remuneration over and above 10 per cent. as commission on the net profit of the business exclusive of all the cost expense for payment of rent, taxes, municipal license, salaries of servants and all other charges and expenses to be incurred in carrying on partnership business but he will get no shares of profit of the firm."

Cl. 6 provides that "Babu Lala Raghumull will get 12 annas share and H. C. Ghosh will get 2 annas 6 pies share and Babu D. N. Sircar will get 1 anna 6 pies share in the profits of the said business," making altogether the 16 annas.

I agree with my learned brother Mr. Justice Richardson's conclusion in respect of this part of the contract. The learned Judge said: "It is said that cl. 5 of the agreement expressly states that the Appellant 'will get no shares of profit of the firm.' In my opinion that can only mean in the context that he is to get no share other than the share already provided for, namely, a salary of Rs. 500 a month and a commission of 10 per cent. on the net profits." I agree, with respect to my learned brother, with that conclusion except that I should substitute the word "remuneration" for "salary." The learned Judge then proceeded as follows. "The first sentence of cl. 19 supports this construction. If the Appellant was not a partner but a mere servant or managing agent, what was the necessity of providing that if the firm should suffer loss he should still 'get his monthly remuneration regularly'."

In my judgment, it is clear that the 10 per cent. was to be paid to Dorian Evans out of the net profits of the business when they were ascertained, and although the words "as commission" are used in the agreement, the 10 per cent. which was to be received by Mr. Dorian Evans was a share of profits within the meaning of sec. 239 of the Contract Act.

The conclusion, therefore, at which I arrive, is that Dorian Evans by the terms of the agreement had a share in the profits and that reading the agreement as a whole there is overwhelming evidence that the intention of the parties was that Dorian Evans as well as the other three persons should be partners of the firm.

For these reasons I agree with the conclusion at which my learned brother Mr. Justice Richardson arrived: and, in my opinion, this appeal should be allowed.

The Appellant Raghumull Khandelwal is entitled to his costs in the appeal before Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Richardson, and also in the appeal before this Court.

It was pointed out by Mr. Justice Woodroffe that the form of the decree was admittedly defective; consequently the decree will be amended in accordance with the suggestion made by Mr. H. D. Bose, the learned Counsel for the Official Assignee, as follows:—

"It is declared that the Defendant A. H. C. Dorian Evans is a partner of the firm of Dorian Evans & Company in the plaint in this suit mentioned and is entitled to a remuneration of Rs. 500 a month and also a commission of 10 per cent. on the net profit of the business as mentioned in cl. 5 of the Memorandum of Partnership, dated the 15th of June 1919, and it is further declared that the Plaintiff is entitled to twelve annas part or share of the profits of the partnership in the plaint in the suit mentioned and the Defendant Hari Charan Ghosh is entitled to two and a half annas share therein and that the Defendant Dino Nath Sircar is entitled to one and a half share thereof, and are liable for loss in such shares as mentioned in cls. 6 and 19 of the said plaint."

Subject to the above modification the decree of the Court of first instance is restored.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree that the view taken by Mr. Justice Richardson must be upheld. I would not have thought it necessary to make any observation but for the fact that there has been a difference of opinion between Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Richardson.

It is conceded that the relative rights of the parties must be determined upon a true construction of what is described as the memorandum of co-partnership agreement made on the 15th of June 1919 among four persons Raghumull, Dorian Evans, H. C. Ghosh and D. N. Sircar. The true rule of construction is not to take one term of the contract and raise a presumption therefrom, but to ascertain the whole scope of the agreement by reference to all its terms. If this process be adopted it is plain that there is no answer to the appeal. The introductory paragraph makes it abundantly clear that the memorandum was a partnership agreement amongst the four persons and that these persons desired to start a partnership business. The firm itself was named after Evans and the next paragraph stated that the place or places of business were to be determined by agreement of the copartners, i.e., the four persons who had entered into the partnership agreement. The second paragraph entitled the financing partner to get interest not from three of the four persons but from the firm. It is not necessary to examine in detail all the provisions of this agreement but I may refer to para. 19 and para. 23. Para. 19 leaves no doubt that Evans was a partner and that he was entitled to get his monthly remuneration regularly while the other partners would be liable for loss according to their shares. Then follows the sentence "Each partner shall be just and faithful to the capitalist partner." This I have no doubt refers to all the three partners other than the capitalist partner. Para. 23 placed Evans and Ghosh on the same footing in respect of certain matters namely, if either of them committed a breach of the provisions of the memorandum or committed an act of bankruptcy or should become physically unfit to attend to the business or committed a criminal offence or did or suffered an act which would be a ground for dissolution of the partnership by the Court, then the capitalist partner might by notice in writing determine the partnership which according to a previous clause was to continue for a fixed term of five years. To my mind it is inconceivable that if Evans had been a mere Manager, the partners should have ever contemplated that this result would follow merely because he became physically unfit to attend to the business or committed an act of bankruptcy.

The deed taken as a whole leaves no doubt as to the position of Evans, but it is urged that the provisions of the 5th and 6th paragraphs nullify the effect of the other clauses. In this connection an attempt was made to refer to a decision which had no bearing upon the construction of sec. 239 of the Indian Contract Act, this codifies the law on the subject in this country and I agree entirely with the observations made by the learned Chief Justice as to the danger likely to result if provisions of this character were attempted to be interpreted by reference to judicial decisions which, it is well known, cannot be reconciled. Sec. 239 requires that the persons should have agreed to combine their property, labour or skill in some business, and to share the profits thereof between them. The argument on behalf of the Respondent was that the legislature intended to provide that the parties should have agreed to share in the profits "as such" between them. This is precisely what the legislature has not said. Cl. 5 provides for the payment of Rs. 500 as remuneration to Evans and also 10 per cent. of the net profits of the business as commission. It is urged that as the 10 per cent. of the profits was to be paid as commission, this was not a share in the profits within the meaning of sec. 239. I do not think this contention is well-founded. The expression "share of the profits" is simple and a narrow construction ought not to be put on it.

Taking the document as a whole I have no doubt that the view taken by Mr. Justice Richardson is correct.

CHATTERJEA, J.—The question whether Dorian Evans was or was not a partner depends upon the construction of the memorandum of agreement, and there can be no doubt, having regard to the terms of the document (except cls. 5 and 6), that it was intended that Dorian Evans was to be a partner just as the others.

The only question to be considered, to my mind, is whether having regard to the terms of cls. 5 and 6, there was an agreement to share the profits of the business between Dorian Evans and the other partners: in other words, whether the payment of 10 per cent. commission of the net profits of the business was a share of the profits of the business. The expression "a share of the profits" is not defined in the section, and I think there is no sufficient reason for holding that payment of 10 per cent. on the net profits is not a share of the profits. The question whether there was a partnership or not must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties; and, having regard to the agreement of the parties, taken as a whole, I am of opinion that Dorian Evans was a partner.

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 337 OF 1921.

CHATTERJEA, J.
CUMING, J.
1923,
18, January.

ANIL KUMAR BISWAS and ors., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
RASH MOHAN SAHA and ors., Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Estates Partition Act (V of 1897), sec. 119, Civil Court's jurisdiction to entertain suit which, though not in form but in substance, challenges the correctness of Collectorate partition proceedings—Sec. 59 (2), in case of discrepancy between the partition paper and the map, which should prevail—Question of adverse possession not pressed in the first Court or in the lower Appellate Court, if can be urged in Second Appeal.

The partition papers of a Collectorate partition proceeding showed a certain land to have been allotted to A, but the attached map showed it to have been allotted to B, in accordance with which B got and continued in possession by receipt of rent from the tenant. On an attempt by A to prevent payment of rent, B brought a suit for declaration of his title and confirmation of possession:

Held—That as the map merely delineates the plots allotted to each co-sharer by the partition papers and must necessarily follow it, where there is a discrepancy between the two, the partition paper should prevail and the map should be rejected as erroneous.

That the land was allotted to A by the partition papers and under sec. 119 of the Estates Partition Act, the Civil Court had no power to question the correctness of the orders passed in the partition proceedings. Although the suit might not, in form, be one for contesting the correctness of the said orders, in substance it was, and the Civil Court had no power to question them.

Where a plea of adverse possession by B though made in the plaint was not raised in the issues or dealt with in the judgment of the trial Court, nor taken in the grounds of appeal in the lower Appellate Court:

Held—That under the circumstances the contention of adverse possession in second appeal could not be given effect to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 11th of November 1921, against the decree of Babu Srish Chandra Banerjee, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, of Zillah Bakergunj, dated the 29th of June 1921, reversing the decree of Babu Satish Chandra Chakravarti, Munsif, 5th Court at Barisal, dated the 29th of November 1919.

The facts are shortly these:—By a Collectorate partition a certain piece of land was shown in the partition papers to have been allotted to the predecessor of the Defendants-Appellants, but the attached map showed it to have been allotted to the predecessor of the Plaintiffs-Respondents, who had in accordance with the map obtained possession and continued in possession for a number of years by receipt of rent from the tenant. The Defendants-Appellants having, however, attempted to prevent the tenant from paying the rent to the Plaintiffs-Respondents, the latter brought this suit for declaration of his title and for confirmation of possession. The trial Court held that the land had been allotted to the Defendants by the partition papers and that the Civil Court had no power to question the correctness of the orders passed in the partition proceedings. On appeal the Sub-Judge held that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to decide the question, that there were mistakes in the partition papers and that the map was correct. The Defendants thereupon preferred the present second appeal to the High Court.

This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of the Plaintiff's title to the land in dispute on the allegation that it was included in a separate estate which was allotted to his predecessor-in-title upon a partition of the parent estate between him, the contesting Defendants and certain other co-sharers. It was further alleged that the disputed land was shown in the partition map as having been allotted to his predecessor-in-title, that the latter had obtained possession of the land in accordance with the map; that the Plaintiff and his predecessor-in-title had been in possession by receipt of rent from the tenant and that as the contesting Defendants Nos. 5 to 7 were attempting to prevent the tenant from paying the rent to the Plaintiff, he brought this suit for declaration of his title and for confirmation of possession.

The main defence was that the land in dispute was allotted to the Defendants' taluk on partition according to the partition papers.

The Court of first instance held that the land in dispute was allotted to the Defendants Nos. 5 to 7 by the partition papers and that the Civil Court had no power to question the correctness of the orders passed in the partition proceedings.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to decide the question, that there were mistakes in the partition papers and that the map was correct. He accordingly set aside the decree of the Court of first instance and remanded the case to that Court for trial of the other questions raised in the suit.

The Defendants Nos. 5 to 7 have preferred this appeal against the order of remand.

The first question is whether the Civil Court can go into the question of the correctness of the orders passed in the partition proceedings.

Sec. 119 of the Estates Partition Act (V of 1897) provides that no order made under certain sections and Chapters of the Act including Chap. VIII shall be liable to be contested or set aside by suit in any Court or by any means other than those expressly provided in the Act. There is a proviso to the section which, however, does not touch the question before us.

Chap. VIII consists of secs. 57 to 61. Sec. 57, sub-sec. (2) lays down that the Deputy Collector shall "proceed to determine how the lands of the parent estate shall be partitioned into separate estates and shall cause to be prepared, (a) a paper of partition, in a form prescribed by rules made by the Board, specifying in detail

(i) the lands which he has included in each separate estate, and the area of such lands,

(ii) the rental of such lands, and other assets, if any, of each separate estate,

(iii) the name or names of the recorded proprietor or proprietors of each separate estate" and certain other matters; and

"(b) a map showing the lands which fall within each separate estate and the boundaries of such lands."

Then sec. 58 (1) provides that "the partition as made under this Chapter, shall be submitted for the sanction of the Collector and he shall by notice fix a day for the consideration of the same.

(2) Every such notice shall be served on the proprietors and shall be published in the manner prescribed by sec. 104.

ANIL KUMAR BISWAS v. RASH MOHAN SAHA.

(3) The day fixed by the said notice shall be not less than 15 days after the publication of the notice at the Collector's Office.

(4) After hearing and disposing of any objection which may be preferred, the Collector shall pass such orders as he may think proper,

(a) approving the partition, with or without amendments." It is unnecessary to refer to the other clauses.

Sec. 59 provides: "When the partition has been approved by the Collector, the Deputy Collector shall, after making such alterations as may be necessary in the partition paper or map, or preparing a new partition paper or map, in accordance with the orders passed by the Collector—

(a) cause to be prepared a separate extract of the portion of the partition paper which relates to each separate estate;

(b) cause to be tendered to any recorded proprietor of a separate estate, or any authorised agent of such proprietor, who may be in attendance at the Deputy Collector's Office, the extract which relates to such separate estate; and

(c) publish a notification at his office calling upon every proprietor to whom or to whose agent an extract from the partition paper has not been tendered as aforesaid, to take out of the Deputy Collector's Office the extract of the partition paper relating to his separate estate." And sub-sec. (2) lays down: "If the circumstances of the partition so require, an extract of the map prepared by the Deputy Collector, or a copy of such map, shall be annexed to every separate extract from the partition paper mentioned in sub-sec. (1)."

It appears, therefore, that the partition papers must be prepared and an extract therefrom must be served upon the recorded proprietors under orders passed by the Collector. A map has also to be prepared and as laid down by sub-sec. (2) of sec. 59 in certain cases a copy of the map is also to be annexed to every separate extract from the partition paper mentioned in sub-sec. (1).

There can be no doubt upon these sections that the allotment paper which is referred to as extract from the partition paper gives to the owner of each separate estate the lands allotted to him as forming his separate estate. The map is only to delineate the allotments made in the partition paper and must necessarily follow those papers. The title to the lands allotted to each must therefore depend upon the partition papers, and the allotments are based upon the assets of the lands given to each which cannot be disturbed without disturbing the partition.

It is contended on behalf of the Respondents that the suit was not for contesting or setting aside any order in the partition proceedings, but a suit for declaration of the Plaintiff's title, and for rent as against the tenant Defendants and sec. 119 of the Act therefore has no application to the case.

The Plaintiff, however, sought a declaration of his title to the lands as being included within the separate estate allotted to him and for a further declaration that the lands were not included in the separate estate allotted to the Defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the partition paper was erroneous and unless the paper was held to be erroneous, the Plaintiff's title could not be declared to the land in dispute as being included within the separate estate allotted to him. Although, therefore, the suit may not, in form, be one for contesting the correctness of any order in the partition proceedings, in substance it was; and as a matter of fact the Plaintiff contested the partition paper which was prepared under the orders of the Collector and the learned Subordinate Judge has given effect to that contention. This, we think, the Court had no power to do.

It is further contended on behalf of the Respondent that the partition paper and the map are merely pieces of evidence and that it is for the Court dealing with facts to attach such weight, as it thinks proper, to the partition paper and the map respectively. If, however, the partition paper is to be taken as the title deed of each proprietor in respect of the lands allotted to him under the partition, as we think it should, it is open to us to consider in case of a discrepancy between such papers and the map, as to which of them should prevail. As already stated, the map merely delineates the plots allotted to each co-sharer by the partition paper and must necessarily follow it and we think that where there is a discrepancy between the two, the partition paper should prevail. The map by giving a particular colour to some of the plots, shows to which of the owners those plots had been allotted by the partition papers and if it differs from the partition papers, it should be rejected as erroneous.

It has been contended by the learned Pleader for the Respondent that the suit was also based upon the ground that the Plaintiff and his predecessor-in-title had been in adverse possession for 12 years.

Such an allegation appears to have been made in the plaint but the issues did not raise the question and we do not find any trace of it in the judgment of the Court of first instance.

The learned Pleader for the Respondents, however, say that the question might be covered by issue No. 6.

As a matter of fact, however, the question of adverse possession was not gone into in the judgment of the Court of first instance. The Munsif no doubt refers to the evidence of possession on both sides; but that is evidently in connection with the question of title based upon the partition.

Then again, the Plaintiff lost his suit in the Court of first instance and he appealed to the lower Appellate Court. But in the grounds of appeal no objection was taken on the ground that the question of adverse possession had not been dealt with by the Court of first instance. Under these circumstances, we are unable to give effect to the contention of the learned Pleader for the Respondents.

That being so, the appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs here and below.

Judgment, 8, December.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, Appellant,
v.
LAXMIBAI and anr., Respondents.

Saranjam grant, what passes – Presumption—Pleadings and proof.

There is no presumption that a grant of a saranjam is a grant of the soil. It may be a grant either of the soil and the whole revenue derived from it or a grant of the royal share of the revenue only. It must be determined in each case upon the facts what was the quality of the original grant although it may well be that it is ordinarily a grant of the royal revenue only.

ADUSUMILLI SURYANARAYANA v. ACHUTA POTHANNA (1) and CHIDAMBARA SIVAPRAKASA PANDARA SANNADHIGAL v. VEERAMA REDDI (2) followed.

Although it is not the practice to construe pleadings too strictly or to exclude a plea which was not embodied in the plaint from being made an issue in the case, the fact that a case which was argued on the Plaintiff's behalf at the hearing was not put forward in the plaint has a bearing on the question as to the proper inference to be drawn from the evidence adduced.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court at Bombay, dated the 22nd December 1916, reversing a decree of the District Judge of Dharwar, dated the 6th January 1913.

The suit was instituted for the recovery of certain lands forming part of the Kasba Hebli estate.

The original grant of the Kasba Hebli Estate was made to Balwantrao by the Peshwa. At the introduction of the British Government, the estate was held by Lakshmanrao bin Suryarao, and his uncle Ramchandrarao. Lakshmanrao died in 1836 and was succeeded by his son Appajirao. Ramchandrarao was succeeded in A. D. 1818 by his sons Krishnarao and Raghunathrao. The latter adopted Ramchandrarao, and this adoption was recognised by the British Government in 1839. Krishnarao died in 1842, and was succeeded by his son Pandurangrao. Pandurangrao died in 1899.

The share of the Hebli estate held by Pandurangrao was resumed by the Bombay Government and re-granted to Narsingrao Ramchandra in 1901. The Secretary of State for India in Council, however, ultimately directed in 1904 that Pandurangrao's estate should be resumed and re-granted to Vithalrao, the great grandson of Pandurangrao. As a result of this grant to Vithalrao the present Plaintiff was dispossessed of the lands in suit.

The Plaintiff Gururao (since deceased and represented by his widow the 1st Respondent) filed the present suit in 1911 in the District Court of Dharwar to recover possession of the property mentioned in the Schedule referred to in the plaint with mesne profits. He based his claim mainly upon two grounds: firstly, that the grant to Pandurangrao was a sarva inam and not a saranjam and that therefore it was not resumable by Government, but heritable and partible property; and secondly, that even assuming the grant to Pandurangrao to be a saranjam, the Government could resume what they granted, viz., the royal share of the revenue and not the lands and that the Government could assess the lands and recover the royal share of the revenue but could not dispossess the Plaintiff. The property described in the Schedule attached to the plaint was claimed as forming one-sixteenth share of the whole estate, i.e., one-fourth of Pandurangrao's one-fourth share in the estate. The suit was filed against the Secretary of State for India in Council, who was Defendant No. 1, and Vithalrao, the new grantee, who was Defendant No. 2.

The defences raised by the Defendant No. 1, briefly stated, were that the suit was barred by sec. 4, cl. (a) of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), that the grant was not a sarva but a saranjam, that the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover separate possession of the property, as the saranjam was impartible except to such extent as might be recognised by the Government, and that the Government could take possession of the lands in effecting resumption. Defendant No. 2 made no separate defence but adopted the contentions of the Defendant No. 1.

The District Judge found that the grant to Pandurangrao, which was declared by the Government in 1863 to be saranjam and not sarva inam, must be treated as saranjam and that the Court had no jurisdiction to question the declaration, made by the Government. He further found that though the grant was of land revenue the right to hold the land went with and therefore formed part of the grant, and that the lands were resumable as the grant was. He also found that the lands being held as part of the saranjam, the suit was barred by the Revenue Jurisdiction Act, and in the result dismissed the suit with costs.

Against the said decree of the District Judge, the Plaintiff appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, and on the 22nd December 1916, that Court delivered judgment allowing the appeal with costs in both Courts. The Plaintiff did not contend before the High Court that the original grant was not saranjam, but the learned Judges, who heard the appeal, held that the decisions of the Inam Commissioner and the Government under Act XI of 1852, that the grant was saranjam, were final. The learned Judges also held that in the case of saranjam or jaghir (the terms being convertible), the grant was ordinarily of the royal share of the revenue and not of the soil; that the burden of proving that in any particular case it was a grant of the soil, was upon the party alleging it; that the Secretary of State for India on whom that burden lay had failed to prove that the grant here was of the soil and not merely of the royal share of the land revenue; that there was nothing to show that the original grant by the Peshwas was of the soil and not merely of the royal share of the land revenue, or that it had any relation to the occupation of lands by Balwantrao; that when the British Government first confirmed the grants in favour of the descendants of Balwantrao they were in occupation of the lands; that the grants were, as usual, grants of the royal share of the land revenue and had no relation to the possession of the lands; and that the right to resume the lands at the time of the resumption and re-grant of the saranjam was never put forward by the Government till after the death of Pandurang and was asserted for the first time in 1904. They further held that the Government could resume what they had granted as saranjam, viz., the royal share of the land revenue; that the right to the occupation of the land, subject to the payment of the full assessment, could and did survive the resumption of this saranjam; that the Plaintiff's occupation of the lands in suit could not be disturbed in consequence of the resumption on Pandurang's death and the re-grant of the saranjam to Defendant No. 2; that inasmuch as the lands were neither granted nor held as saranjam, the Plaintiff's alternative claim was not barred by sec. 4 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act X of 1876. They decided that the Plaintiff's claim for possession of lands, subject to payment of the royal share of the land revenue, was not barred by sec. 4 of the Pensions Act XXIII of 1871. In the result they allowed the Plaintiff's claim for possession of the lands in suit, subject to his liability to pay the royal share of the land revenue, and gave him mesne profits for three years prior to the date of the suit, and from the date of the suit to the date of the delivery of possession or the expiration of three years from the date of the judgment whichever event occurred first, and ordered that the mesne profits should be determined by the Court below, that the rest of the Plaintiff's claim should be disallowed, and that he should have costs throughout.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant.—The High Court were in error in presuming that the grant was only of revenue.

Adusumilli Suryanarayana v. Achuta Pothanna (1) and Chidambara Sivaprakasa v. Veerama Reddi (2).

If there is any presumption as to the nature of the grant, that is displaced by the evidence. The High Court really decided on the basis of "seri" right in the saranjamdar, as to which see William's Glossary and Ramchandra v. Venkatrao (3).

This case and Ganpatrao Trimbak v. Ganesh Baji Bhat (4) have been misapplied by the High Court and Rajya v. Balkrishna Gangadhar (5) relied on by them is not in point.

A saranjamdar cannot either as "seridar" or otherwise become a permanent occupier adversely to Government. The right as "Seridar" is not independent of the right of saranjamdar but part of that right and ends on resumption. The doctrine formulated in sec. 90 of the Trusts Act, 1882, is applicable.

Shekh Sultan Sani v. Sheikh Ajmodin (6) is indicative of the evidence requisite to show ownership by grant.

The sanad there is found in Trimbak Ramchandra v. Gulam Zilani (7).

They also referred to Vasudev Pandit v. Collector of Puna (8) and Ravji Narayan v. Dadaji Bapuji Desai (9).

The history of this caranjam is set out in the report of the Inam Commission which is on the record and shows a grant of the soil. The question of jurisdiction depends on whether it is land or revenue. If it was a grant of revenue only and they had no other right there was no jurisdiction.

This case arises through a loophole left in Ramrav Govindrao v. Secretary of State (10).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and L. M. Parikh for the 1st Respondent.—The Plaintiff and his ancestors have been in possession since before 1775, at which date the Government had no property in the land so as to entitle them to make a grant.

The cases show that a saranjam is a series of life estates and is impartible without the consent of Government but in the present case there is found a series of divisions without the consent of Government. The burden of proof is on the Government to establish its right, not to assess the revenue, but to obtain possession of the property.

An "occupant" in Bombay is not necessarily a cultivator, he is an owner and has tenants. The Inam Commission did not determine the title to lands but the liability to revenue. Resumption was merely a re-assessment. If as I contend the grant was one of revenue the Plaintiff's rights are untouched, although there remains the Government right to a re-assessment.

Pandurang died in 1899 and there was a re-grant. The authorities were in error in assuming that the Inam Rules applied to an estate of this kind.

Inam Rules, Bombay, 1898, rr. 5, 6.

The terms of the re-grant do not indicate a grant of land.

See Elphinstone's Report on territories conquered from the Maharattas, pp. 22, 129.

It was under the Mahratta system that this kind of grant came into use.

Reference was also made to Etheridge's Narrative of Bombay Land Commission.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. in reply.—There was no suggestion in the plaint of occupancy rights being acquired. The District Judge found that there was no occupancy right and that finding was never challenged before the High Court.

LORD SALVESEN.—This is an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, dated the 22nd December 1916, which reversed a decree of the District Judge of Dharwar, dated the 6th January 1913. The suit relates to a part of the Hebli estate, from which the Plaintiff was evicted by the Government on the death of his grand-father, Pandurangrao. Their object in doing so was to prevent partition of what they regarded as an impartible estate held under a grant of saranjam.

It is not necessary to recapitulate the facts which have been very fully stated in the judgment of the District Judge of Dharwar or to consider the majority of the points which were disposed of by him and on appeal by the High Court at Bombay. The sole issue which remains for determination is whether the saranjam grant made by the British Government in favour of an ancestor of the Plaintiff was a grant of the royal revenue only, or was a grant of the land itself, or of the whole revenue of the land coupled with a right to hold it. The learned District Judge held that the original grant by the British Government was a grant of the whole revenue of the land, and that this carried with it the right to make the best possible use of unoccupied land. The High Court at Bombay in reversing his decision held that the grant was one of the royal share of the revenue only and not of the soil. In reaching this conclusion it is impossible to resist the view that the Judges of the High Court were much influenced by their view that there is a presumption that a grant of saranjam is a grant of royal revenue only, and accordingly that the burden of proving that, in any particular case of saranjam, it is a grant of the soil, lies upon the party alleging it. They relied upon various cases cited and which at that time seemed to establish this proposition. They had not, however, the benefit of two recent decisions of this Board, viz.: Adusumilli Suryanarayana v. Achuta Pothanna (1) and Chidambara Sivaprakasa Pandara Sannadhigal v. Veerama Reddi (2) in both of which it was held that there is no such presumption.

In conformity with these decisions their Lordships are of opinion that a grant of saranjam may be either of the soil and the whole revenue derived from it, or a grant of the royal share of the revenue only. It must be determined in each case upon the facts what was the quality of the original grant, although it may well be that it is ordinarily a grant of the royal revenue only. It may be that as the Plaintiff was dispossessed by the British Government in 1901 there is a certain onus upon the Appellant to justify his dispossession, but this becomes of little materiality when evidence is adduced from which a conclusion in fact may be legitimately drawn. In the present case the oral evidence is of no value as supporting the Plaintiff's case, and an inference must be drawn one way or the other from the documents that have been produced in the case. T have been examined in detail by the District Judge on pp. 35 and 36 of the record, and their Lordships concur generally in the result of his analysis. It is plain that the original grant was made in respect of political services; and while it is no doubt possible that the grantees were at that time the owners of the estate, and that all that the grant was intended to give them was a release from payment of the royal share of the revenue, there is nothing in any of the documents produced which suggests such a limitation. On the contrary, in one of the early documents founded on, the grant was made expressly of the Kasba Hebli with its hamlets and Watnhal, with the Mahal Jukath and Mokassa "with the whole of the dues and cesses and hidden treasures, exclusive, however, of the dues of Huckdars and Inamdars," and the language of the other documents is in similar terms. It is significant also, that in the deed of partition executed by Pandurangrao in 1879, the property partitioned is described as the Jahagir villages of Kasba Hebli and Majre Watnhal and the Mouza of Talvai and Kurdapur "obtained from the British Government." Throughout the documents there is no suggestion that what was conveyed was merely the royal share of the land revenue. They assume throughout that the whole revenue of the lands was conveyed to the grantees and the amount of the nazarana which has been levied from time to time appears to have been based on the yearly revenue of the estate, "there being no suggestion (as the learned District Judge says) that revenue derived by the holder as occupant, as distinct from 'saranjamdar was not liable to nazarana." All these considerations are sufficient in their Lordships' opinion to justify the inference that the original grant was a grant of the soil.

It is significant as bearing on the result at which their Lordships have arrived, that the Plaintiff in his original plaint nowhere maintained the view upon which the learned judges of the High Court proceeded. His main claim was that he was a full owner of the property in dispute, and that the estate in question was granted as sarva inam hereditarily in recognition of the services which his ancestors had rendered in assisting the British in settling the country conquered from the Peshwas. This claim was rejected by the District Judge and has now been admitted by the Plaintiff to be untenable. As an alternative to this claim, based on the grant by the British Government, the plaint proceeds as follows:—

"Saranjam grant is a grant of the Revenue only, and the Government cannot resume the Raitava rights which the Plaintiff and his ancestors have been enjoying from ancient times. And even if the Saranjam grant be of the soil, Government has no right to resume it. And the estate in suit is partible."

It is not clear what is meant by "Raitava rights," but the statement sufficiently discloses that they are rights of occupancy only and not of ownership, and a claim of this kind was strenuously maintained in the Lower Court with regard to the occupation of lands which were unoccupied at the date of the original grant. This latter claim has now been abandoned. In no part of the plaint is it possible to find a claim that the saranjam grant was a grant of the royal share of the revenue only. It appears, however, that this point was argued, and it has not been the practice of their Lordships to construe the pleadings too strictly, or to exclude a plea, which was not embodied in the plaint, from being made an issue in the case. The fact, however, that it did not occur to the Plaintiff's advisers to propound this contention on the evidence which he adduced has a bearing on the question as to the proper inference to be drawn in fact from that evidence.

As the case was framed, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in India was apparently not ousted. But in the view which their Lordship now take, the right of the Government to resume these lands could not be questioned in the Civil Courts.

In the result their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court at Bombay should be set aside and the suit dismissed with costs, here and in the Courts below.

BAIJNATH GOENKA BAHADUR, since deceased (now represented by Kedar Nath Goenka), Appellant,
v.
NANDA KUMAR SINGH and ors., Respondents

Mesne profits, decree in trial Court ordering payment of, from date of decree to delivery of possession Appeal from decree dismissed by Order in Council Mesne profits, whether to be assessed from date of trial Court's decree or Order in Council.

On 28th November 1905, the trial Court passed a decree in Plaintiffs' favour for recovery of possession and mesne profits, to be ascertained at the execution stage, from the date of the decree to that of the recovery of possession. The Defendant appealed unsuccessfully to the High Court and to the Privy Council, the Order in Council dismissing his appeal being dated 7th March 1913:

Held—That the decree-holders were entitled to mesne profits from 28th November 1905, the date of the trial Court's decree and not from 7th March 1913, the date of the Order in Council, till delivery of possession.

RAJA BHUP INDAR BAHADUR SINGH v. BIJAI BAHADUR SINGH (1) applied.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Patna, dated the 20th July 1917 which varied an order of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, dated the 13th March 1916.

The question in this appeal was as to the period for which mesne profits should be calculated under the following circumstances.

In the year 1901 the Respondents and one Baijnath Singh brought a suit against the Appellants in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr for possession of certain property and mesne profits from date of their—the Plaintiffs'—dispossession therefrom, that is to say, from 21st June 1900.

On the 28th November 1905, the said Court decreed possession with mesne profits only from the date of decree to that of recovery of possession the amount of which was to be ascertained at the execution stage.

The Appellants made an appeal to the High Court unsuccessfully and then to His Majesty in Council, but this appeal was dismissed by Order in Council, dated the 7th March 1913.

Baijnath Singh, one of the Plaintiffs, took possession of the property decreed to him shortly after the decree of the Subordinate Judge but the Respondents took no steps to obtain possession and executed the decree for costs only.

The Respondents then petitioned the said Subordinate Judge's Court in execution for mesne profits from 28th November 1905 to the 29th May 1914 when delivery of possession was given to them.

On the 13th March 1916, the said Subordinate Judge heard the said petition and directed an enquiry as to mesne profits from the date of the Order in Council to the delivery of possession holding that mesne profits were only given from decree and that the decree which was to be executed was the Order in Council.

The Respondents appealed to the High Court which on the 20th July 1917, allowed the appeal and directed an inquiry as to mesne profits from the 28th November 1905, till delivery of possession.

In their judgment the learned Judges agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the decree to be executed was the Order in Council, but they considered that as that Order affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of 28th November 1905, and as that decree was to the effect that Respondents were to get mesne profits from (the date of the) decree, therefore the Order in Council was an order directing that the Respondents were to get mesne profits from 28th November 1905, till delivery of possession. They further held that the order so construed was not in contravention of Or. 20, r. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code, because as they held, it gave mesne profits from the 28th November 1905, a date after the institution of the suit till the delivery of possession which was within three years of the Privy Council decree.

From this decree the Appellant appealed to His Majesty in Council.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL
No. 8 OF 1921.

DWIJENDRA MOHAN SARMA, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
SM. MONORAMA DASSI and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), sec. 29, District Judge's sanction, if rendered unnecessary by compliance with the provisions of Or. 21, r. 83, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—Sec. 30, person prejudicially affected by an unauthorised sale by the guardian, how far bound to indemnify the previous purchaser.

A guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act sold a minor's property without obtaining the permission of the District Judge, but with the sanction of the execution Court under Or. 21, r. 83, C. P. Code, as the property was at the time under attachment in execution of a money decree. Subsequently the guardian sold the same property to a third party with the permission of the District Judge:

Held—That the scope of an enquiry under sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act is entirely distinct from the scope of an enquiry under Or. 21, r. 83, C. P. C. When an application is made under the former to a District Judge the matter to be considered is the benefit to the infant. When an application is made to an execution Court to sanction an intended transfer under the latter, the matter for enquiry is the protection of the execution creditor. Compliance with the provisions of Or. 21, r. 83, C. P. C. should not consequently render unnecessary the fulfilment of the requirements of sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, in a case which falls within the scope of both these provisions of the law.

Held, further—That sec. 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act makes the transaction, unauthorised by the District Judge, voidable, that is, liable to be avoided in a proper proceeding. Consequently when the person affected by such a transaction seeks to avoid its consequence, he is in the position of a person who seeks equity and must do equity. Thus, not only can he not ignore the transaction but he must offer to re-imburse the prior transferee whose money has benefitted the infant.

The Plaintiff never having offered to reimburse the Defendant, the transfer in whose favour was for the benefit of the minor, should not be allowed at the late stage to set matters right and thereby change the whole aspect of the case.

This was an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent preferred on the 20th January 1921 against the judgment of Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda, dated the 22nd December 1920, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1613 of 1919, which had been preferred against a decree of Babu Hem Chandra Bose, Subordinate Judge of Sylhet, dated the 18th June 1919, reversing a decree of Babu Ashutosh Ghosh, Munsif of Sylhet, dated the 28th February 1918.

The facts are briefly as follows:— One Kamini Kumar was appointed by the District Judge as guardian of his minor son's property, viz., an one-third share of a homestead. The property of the minor being under attachment in execution of a decree for money, the guardian, with the sanction of the execution Court, sold the property by a conveyance, dated the 4th April 1905, to one Gourhari. Subsequently the guardian Kamini Kumar with the permission of the District Judge sold the property to one Sitanath by a conveyance, dated the 14th January 1906. Sitanath's successor-in-interest brought the present suit for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, the aforesaid one-third share of the homestead on the basis of the kobala, dated the 14th January 1906. The trial Court dismissed the suit and on appeal, the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit. On second appeal to the High Court, Mr. Justice Huda set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and passed the following judgment:—

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, one-third share of a homestead described in the plaint and for certain other reliefs. The suit was dismissed by the first Court but on appeal that decree was reversed and the Plaintiff's suit was decreed. The Defendant No. 1 is the Appellant before this Court. The facts of the case are somewhat complicated but having regard to the points that have been urged before me by either side they may be shortly stated to be these. One-third of the disputed homestead belongs to one Kandarpa who was a minor and his father was his guardian appointed by the District Judge. With the permission of the District Judge the guardian sold Kandarpa's one-third share to one Sitanath by a kobala, dated the 1st Magh 1312. Plaintiff derives his title from Sitanath. The main defence with which I am concerned in this appeal is that Kamini before the sale to Sitanath had sold the one-third share of the minor to one Gourhari on the 22nd Chaitra 1311 and that after such sale no interest was left in the minor which the guardian could convey to Sitanath even with the sanction of the District Judge. Defendant claims to have acquired title to the land by various purchases.

The lower Appellate Court accepts the contention that if the sale to Gourhari was a valid sale, Plaintiff cannot succeed in this suit and this is not disputed. In the opinion of the Court below, however, the sale to Gourhari was not a valid sale, because it was effected by the guardian of the minor without the permission of the District Judge obtained under sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. Defendants, however, contended that the permission of the District Judge was obtained and he relies on a recital in Gourhari's kobala in support of this contention. The Defendant also urged that the property of the minor had been attached in execution of two decrees obtained against the minor and the sale to Gourhari was effected with the previous permission of the attaching Court under sec. 305 of the old Code of Civil Procedure and that this was sufficient even without the sanction of the Judge. The learned Judge, however, overruled these contentions and held that sanction of the District Judge under sec. 29 to the sale to Gourhari had not been proved. That there was no evidence to prove the fact except the recital in the kobala and that such recital was no evidence against the Plaintiff. The learned Judge, however, held that substantial compliance with the provisions of sec. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code had been established but that this was not enough. Two main points have been argued in support of the appeal—(1) that the recital in Gourhari's kobala was evidence in the case and the Court below was wrong in holding the contrary; (2) that even if no such sanction was obtained the permission under sec. 305 was sufficient, and these are the only two main points that arise for my consideration and in my opinion both these contentions must prevail.

In support of the first contention the learned Vakil for the Appellant relies on the case of Banga Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya Chowdhuri (10), which lays down that a recital is evidence between the parties and those claiming under them. In this case the recital in the kobala executed by the guardian was evidence against him and is also evidence against the Plaintiff who derives his title through the same guardian.

As regards the second point I am of opinion that compliance with the provisions of sec. 305 was sufficient to validate the sale even if there was no permission under sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

The learned Vakil for the Respondents has relied on the cases of Sarju v. District Judge of Benares (2) and Dattaram v. Gangaram (1) as supporting his contention that the sanction of the District Judge was necessary. In my opinion the point involved in this case did not directly arise in either of the two cases.

I hold that the special provision of sec. 305 is not controlled by the provisions of sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. The unreported decision of this Court referred to in the judgment of the Court below, though not a direct authority, lends some support to the view I have taken. On these grounds I allow the appeal, set aside the decree passed by the Court below and restore the decree of the first Court. The Defendants are entitled to their costs throughout.

Against this judgment and decree the present Letters Patent Appeal was preferred.

Babus Brojolal Chakravartty and Hemendra Kumar Das for the Appellant.

Babu Birendra Chandra Das for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Huda in a suit for recovery of possession of an one-third share of a homestead upon declaration of title and for incidental reliefs. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed that decision. On second appeal to this Court, Mr. Justice Huda has set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restored that of the primary Court.

The disputed property belonged to an infant Kandarpa Kumar Sen whose father Kamini Kumar Sen was appointed as guardian of his property by the District Judge. The root of the title of the Plaintiff is a conveyance executed by the guardian on the 14th January 1906 with the sanction of the District Judge and registered three days later. The foundation of the title of the contesting Defendants is a prior conveyance executed by the guardian on the 4th April 1905 and registered six days later. This conveyance, like the one previously mentioned, recites that "it has been executed with the sanction of the District Judge." The Defendants, however, failed to satisfy the Courts below that the assertion made by the executant of their conveyance was well-founded on fact, for whereas the record shows that the transaction of the 14th January 1906 was sanctioned by the District Judge, no order has been traced in favour of the transaction of the 4th April 1905. The case has consequently been tried on the hypothesis that the conveyance set up by the Defendant, though prior in point of time, was executed without the sanction of the District Judge, while the conveyance set up by the Plaintiff, though subsequent in point of time, was executed with the sanction of the District Judge. In these circumstances, the question arose, whether the Plaintiff is entitled to treat the Defendants as persons without title and to obtain relief on that basis.

Sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, provides that a guardian of the property of a ward shall not, without the previous permission of the Court, mortgage, charge or transfer by sale, gift, exchange or otherwise, any part of the immoveable property of his ward. Sec. 30 then ordains that the disposal of immoveable property by a guardian in contravention of either of the two last foregoing sections is voidable at the instance of any other person affected thereby. It cannot consequently be maintained that the conveyance which is the foundation of the title of the Defendants is not liable to be impeached. The Defendants have appreciated this danger and have relied upon a circumstance extraneous to the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act.

It appears that at the time when the transfer in favour of the Defendants was made, the property was under attachment in execution of a decree for money held by a creditor of the infant. The transfer could consequently be effected, only with the sanction of the execution Court obtained in the manner prescribed in sec. 305 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which has since been replaced by Or. 21, r. 83 of the Code of 1908. The Court below has held that there was substantial compliance with the provisions of sec. 305 and we shall assume without discussion that this view is well-founded. This consequently raises the question, whether compliance with the provisions of sec. 305 cures the defect which attaches to a transaction effected in violation of the provisions of sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. The decisions in Dattaram v. Gangaram (1) and Sarju v. District Judge of Benares (2) point to the conclusion that the answer should be in the negative. These cases are authorities for the proposition that a private alienation, though confirmed by the execution Court under sec. 305 of the Code of 1882, is not validated, if such alienation is made by a certificated guardian and the transaction is not confirmed by the Court which appointed the guardian. We are of opinion that this conclusion is sound on principle.

The scope of an enquiry under sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act is entirely distinct from the scope of an enquiry under sec. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. When an application is made under sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act to a District Judge to sanction a proposed alienation, the matter to be considered is the benefit of the infant. When an application is made to an execution Court to sanction an intended transfer under sec. 305 of the Code of 1882, the matter for enquiry is the protection of the execution creditor. Compliance with the provisions of sec. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code should not consequently render unnecessary the fulfilment of the requirements of sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, in a case which falls within the scope of both these provisions of the law. This view is not opposed to the decisions in Barkar v. Jamila (3), Abdur Rashid v. Sheikh Khandkar (4) and Nakimo Dewani v. Pemba Ditchen (5). In the first of these cases the transfer was effected, not by a certificated guardian but by a guardian ad litem appointed for the purpose of a suit and the Punjab Chief Court held that sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act could not by its very terms be applied to such a contingency. In the second case, the question was considered, whether Or. 32, r. 7 of the Code of 1908 rendered unnecessary compliance with the requirements of sec. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. The answer was given in the affirmative. This view may perhaps be justified on the hypothesis that the objects of these provisions of the law are identical, namely, the protection of the infant concerned. On this ground alone, the decision is distinguishable and we need not express an opinion as to its soundness. In the third case, the question was raised whether the fact that a compromise had been sanctioned by the Court of Wards rendered needless a compliance with the provisions of Or. 32, r. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the answer was given in the affirmative. There is no real analogy between the provisions of the Court of Wards Act and the Guardians and Wards Act.

(2) I. L. R. 31 All. 878 (1909).

Finally, our attention has been drawn to the decision in Biku v. Mohesh (6) which deals with the question of the power of a certificated guardian to compromise a suit without the sanction of the District Judge. This is plainly of no assistance to the Respondent. We consequently hold that the position of the Defendant must be adjudged on the assumption that the conveyance which is the root of his title did not comply with the requirements of sec. 29. It was assumed in the Courts below that a transaction of this description might be ignored by the party prejudicially affected thereby and that the guardian who had executed the conveyance of the 4th April 1905 might indicate his repudiation of the transaction by execution of the conveyance of the 14th January 1906. In our opinion, this position is manifestly untenable.

Sec. 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act makes the transaction voidable, that is, liable to be avoided in a proper proceeding. Consequently when the person affected by such a transaction seeks to avoid its consequence, he is in the position of a person who seeks equity and must do equity. Thus, not only can he not ignore the transaction but he must offer to reimburse the prior transferee whose money has benefitted the infant. In support of this proposition reference may be made to the decisions in The Eastern Mortgage and Agency Coy. v. Rebati Kumar Ray (7), Hem Chandra v. Lalit Mohan (8) and Manasharam Das v. Ahmad Hossein (9). As was observed in the first of these cases nothing can be more unjust than to permit a person to sell a tract of land and take the purchase-money, and then because the sale happens to be informal and void, to allow him or, which is the same thing, the person on whose behalf he acts, to recover back the land and keep the money; any Code of law which would tolerate this would seem to be liable to the reproach of being a very imperfect or a very inequitable one. The Plaintiff in this litigation has ignored this view and has entirely misconceived his remedy. He has never offered to reimburse the Defendant, for there is no question that the transfer in favour of the Defendant must have been for the benefit of the infant whose property was under attachment at the time. We have considered whether the Plaintiff may at this stage legitimately expect an opportunity to set matters right and we have arrived at the conclusion that the answer should be in the negative, as he should not be permitted to change the whole aspect of the case.

We consequently affirm the decree of dismissal made by Mr. Justice Huda, but not on the grounds stated in his judgment, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Though in cases of alleged benami transactions, there may be grounds for suspicion, yet the Court's decision must rest, not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. The determination of the question must depend not merely upon direct oral evidence, but also upon circumstances, such as, the source of the purchase-money, the possession of the property, the custody of the title deeds, the adequacy of consideration and like facts.

MINA KUMARI BIBI v. BEJOY SINGH DHUDHURIA (1) referred to.

The burden of proof lies on the person who claims against the tenor of a deed, for the statement in a deed is to be taken as primâ facie *true, but may be established to be false or not intended to be acted upon. Where the lower Appellate Court based a finding of fact, viz., that a certain document was not a genuine one but was a benami transaction, upon general observations as to probabilities or upon suspicion, the finding was set aside in second appeal.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of August 1920 against the decree of Babu Girish Chandra Sen, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 14th of July 1920, modifying the decree of Babu Narendra Nath Lahiri, Munsif, 2nd Court at Magura, dated the 23rd of January 1919.

The facts were briefly these :—A conveyance by a Mahomedan husband in favour of his wife recited that dower debt was due to the lady and that as the executant was not in a position to pay her in cash he transferred to her the properties covered by the deed. After the husband's death, the son sued for recovery of possession of the properties upon establishment of title by inheritance. The trial Court held that the conveyance represented a real transaction and so the Plaintiff could not succeed on the basis of title by inheritance and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, the District Judge held that the kobala did not represent a genuine transaction but was a collusive benami transaction and decreed the suit. The following portion of his judgment will be found relevant :—

"The learned Munsif held that both the kobalas were genuine documents for consideration, and has dismissed Plaintiff's suit.

"The matter is not an easy one to decide. The oral evidence in such cases is altogether without value. There was on the one hand strong indications of the benami character of the transaction. There is no doubt that Aber was indebted to Defendant No. 26 and that the latter had obtained a decree against him. A collusive sale to the wife of the debtor is an extremely common form of benami and the allegation that money was due as dower is a very easy one to make and a very difficult one to disprove. There is really no evidence on the record that Defendant No. 17 was actually owed anything for dower. The learned Munsif says that there is a presumption that some dower was paid upon the marriage. He is right; but there is no presumption that long after the marriage, dower was still due.

"There is no documentary evidence showing what were the arrangements at the time of marriage; and the oral evidence is not worth anything. I am, therefore, of opinion that the circumstances are in favour of the view that the sale to Defendant No. 17 was collusive. I think that the two kobalas must be considered together; and I am justified in my view that the first was collusive by the circumstance which attended the execution of the second.

ABDUL LATIF KAZI v. ABDUL HUQ KAZI.

"The question of the second kobala was very satisfactorily dealt with by the Court, which decided the title suit brought by Defendant No. 1. Its judgment is Ex. 1 in this case. The learned Munsif has found that that Court was wrong; but his reasons for thinking so are not convincing. The property is said to have been sold after Defendant No. 26 had taken out execution proceedings against Defendant No. 17. As a matter of fact the kobala was executed a very few days after the notice of these execution proceedings was served on Defendant No. 17. That this property was in danger is shown by the fact that it was actually attached in the course of the proceedings, and Defendant No. 1 actually put in his claim relying on this kobala. A more flagrant case of a benami sale to defeat a creditor would be difficult to imagine. It certainly did not deceive the Court 10 years ago; and I do not think it should have deceived the learned Munsif now.

"There are of course circumstances on the other side; but they are not difficult to explain. There may have been several reasons why Defendant No. 17 should have executed a kabuliyat in favour of Defendant No. 1. She may have done it in order to safe-guard herself against malâ fides on his part; or she may have done so in order to create an atmosphere of genuineness. After all documents are easy to execute; and it is common to bolster up a benami transaction with a few documents of this sort. In the present case nothing can be deduced from possession of the land or from possession of the documents. The relationship existing between Aber and Defendant No. 17, and Defendant No. 17 and Plaintiff being what it was, the possession of one was the possession of the other. The possession of the documents by the Defendants is easily accounted for by the fact that Plaintiff was a minor at the time of Aber's death, and his mother since her re-marriage has colluded with the other Defendants and has taken sides against him."

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal by the Defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land upon establishment of title by inheritance. The property admittedly belonged at one time to Aber Kazi. The case for the Plaintiff is that Aber Kazi (his father) remained the owner of the property till his death in 1907 and that consequently he is entitled to a share by right of inheritance. The Plaintiff, however, is met by a conveyance which was executed by his father on 8th July 1905 in favour of the seventeenth Defendant who was the wife of Aber Kazi and step-mother of the Plaintiff. The conveyance recites that dower debt was due to the lady and that as the executant was not in a position to pay her in cash, the only course left open to him was to transfer to her the properties covered by the deed. If this document represented a real transaction, Aber Kazi ceased to be the owner of the disputed properties before his death, and the Plaintiff cannot succeed on the basis of title by inheritance. The essential question for consideration, consequently, is, whether this conveyance did or did not represent a real transaction. Upon this point, the Courts below have come to divergent conclusions. The urt of first instance held that the conveyance represented a real transaction and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, the District Judge has taken a different view and decreed the suit. We are of opinion that the decision of the District Judge cannot be supported.

In the first place, the District Judge has adopted the very course which was condemned by the Judicial Committee in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bejoy Singh Dhudhuria (1), where Sir Lawrence Jenkins observed that though in cases of alleged benami transactions, there may be grounds for suspicion, yet the Court's decision must rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. In cases of this character, the determination of the question must depend not merely upon direct oral evidence, but also upon circumstances, such as the source of the purchase-money, the possession of the disputed property, the custody of the title-deeds, the adequacy of consideration and like facts. The District Judge has not approached the case from this point of view, nor has he given effect to the principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee in Suleiman Kader Bahadur v. Mehndi Afsur Bahu (2), where Lord Davey stated that the burden of proof lies on the person who claims against the tenor of the deed. The Plaintiff seeks in substance a declaration that the deed executed by his father was fictitious. There is a recital in the document that dower debt was due to his wife. There is no reason why that statement should not be taken as primâ facie true [Irshad Ali v. Kariman (3)], but it may be established to be false, and it may also be possible to prove that the conveyance was never intended to transfer the title. That, however, is a question to be determined upon evidence, which cannot be disposed of upon general observations as to the possibility of fraud in cases of this character or as to the extreme probability of a collusive sale to the wife by a person who was not in affluent circumstances. One of the facts relied upon by the Plaintiff is that his father was in debt at the time of this transaction. The District Judge has not referred to the evidence which bears directly upon this point; but his judgment mentions a decree which was obtained by a creditor against the father of the Plaintiff after the execution of the conveyance. The decree itself has not been produced, and we are not able to find from the record when the decree was made. The Courts below further appear to have gathered information from a judgment in a suit which was instituted by the present Appellant against a creditor for the cancellation of an order dismissing a claim preferred in execution proceedings. But the recitals in that judgment are not admissible in evidence. The fact that a judgment is admitted in evidence in order to prove that there was litigation which terminated in a certain way, does not make all the recitals in that judgment part of the evidence in the subsequent action; Kashi Nath Pal v. Jagat Kishore Acharya Chowdhury (4) and Tripurana Seethapati v. Rokkam Vencanna (5). The District Judge has further overlooked that this very judgment was set aside by consent of parties; that makes it still more difficult to refer to the recitals therein. We are of opinion that this case has not been considered from the correct standpoint and that the judgment of the District Judge is erroneous in law.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the case remanded to him for reconsideration. The District Judge will be at liberty to permit the parties to adduce fresh evidence to be taken either by himself or by the primary Court, if he considers such a course necessary in the interest of justice. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

Nos. 1597 AND 1702 TO 1711 OF 1918.

WALMSLEY, J.
BUCKLAND, J.
25, May.

ANNADA MOHON ROY CHOWDHURY, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
KINA DAS and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, sec. 2 (8), Arts. 144, 149—Suit to recover from person adversely in possession by purchaser from Government within 60 years of, but more than 12 years from, commencement of adverse possession, but within 12 years of purchase, if barred.

Certain lands acquired by Government in 1873 were sold by Government to the Plaintiffs on 13th July 1913. In a suit instituted by the Plaintiffs on 9th July 1915 for recovery of the same, it was established that the Defendants were in adverse possession of the land from 1873:

Held—That the suit was governed by Art. 144 of the Limitation Act, the period commencing from the date when the Defendants' possession became adverse to the Government, the word Plaintiff including his predecessors-in-title by force of sec. 2, sub-sec. (8) of the Limitation Act.

That the contention that by reading Arts. 144 and 149 together, the Plaintiff would be entitled to get, before his righ became extinguished, either 12 years from the date of his purchase or the period to which the Government would still be entitled, whichever was less, was not maintainable.

These were appeals preferred on the 22nd of August 1918 against the judgment of the District Judge of Zilla Rungpur (G. C. Sankey, Esq.), dated the 16th May 1918, reversing the decree of the Munsif of that place (Babu Gopal Ch. Basu), dated the 26th January 1917.

These appeals were brought by Plaintiff in suits for recovery of possession on declaration of Plaintiff's title in respect of certain "B class" surplus lands which had been acquired by Government for a Railway.

The lands were acquired by Government in 1873, and the surplus lands put up to auction and purchased by Plaintiff on 13th July 1913. The suits were instituted on 9th July 1915.

One of the pleas taken in defence was limitation, the case of the Defendants being that despite acquisition by Government, the principal Defendants had been all along in actual possession as tenants under the pro formâ Defendants who were the original proprietors and neither Government nor the Plaintiff was ever in actual possession.

The learned Munsif overruled the plea of limitation holding that at the date of the transfer to the Plaintiff, the Government had a subsisting title which the Plaintiff acquired by his purchase and the suits having been instituted within 12 years from the date of the transfer, they were well within time. In other words, according to the learned Munsif, the Plaintiff would get his own start of limitation from the date of his purchase.

ANNADA MOHON ROY CHOWDHURY v. KINA DAS.

On appeal, the learned District Judge held that the suits were barred because, the Plaintiff was out of possession for more than 12 years. He took the view that the Plaintiff being the assignee from Government was not entitled to the 60 years' rule of limitation under Art. 149—but to the ordinary 12 years' rule, and as the Plaintiff's predecessor, the Government, was admittedly out of possession for over 12 years, "the Plaintiff" would be barred as soon as he took the transfer.

On second appeal, the High Court (Walmsley and Buckland, JJ.), held that Art. 144 applied to this case—hence whatever may be the period necessary to bar the Plaintiff, Defendants were bound to prove adverse possession and as there was no finding in the judgment of the learned District Judge as to the character of the Defendants' possession, the cases were remitted to him for a clear finding on the question of adverse possession.

The appeals came back after remand with the finding by the District Judge that the possession of the Defendants was adverse from the very beginning, i.e., since 1873.

Babu Bimal Ch. Das Gupta for the Appellant.—Following questions require consideration :—(1) Whether on the facts found, the inference of adverse possession by the Defendants was sustainable in law. (2) If so, what would be the period necessary to bar the Plaintiff.

As to point (1), finding amounts to this that Government having failed to prove realisation of rent from the principal Defendants who have been in open possession and cultivation of the disputed lands to the knowledge of the Government and without interference by the latter, the possession of the principal Defendants must be held to be adverse since 1873. This is not correct.

In 1873, when the lands were acquired and compensation taken out by the Defendants, the possession of the Defendants after receipt of compensation was mer permissive. They became licensees under the Government and unless Defendants can shew that they asserted a hostile title to the knowledge of the Government at a subsequent period, their possession would not become adverse. It may be objected that there is no finding or evidence regarding payment of compensation, but it being admitted that the Defendants owned and possessed the lands from before acquisition it may be presumed under sec. 114 of the Evidence Act, that they got the compensation. Hence the finding that possession became adverse from the beginning is wrong and there being no finding that at any subsequent period, the possession of the Defendants became adverse, the decision of the District Judge was incorrect.

As to point (2), this depends on the construction of Art. 144, for I do not for a moment contend that Plaintiff would be entitled to the benefit of Art. 149.

I concede that Plaintiff would get only 12 years, but the question is, when would the 12 years commence to run. In other words, whether the word Plaintiff as used in Col. 3 of that article includes the Secretary of State from or through whom he derived his right to sue.

Ordinarily this would be so. Where the period necessary to bar the Plaintiff and his predecessor is the same, there can be no difficulty; but where these periods differ, a good deal of difficulty arises . adopting the ordinary interpretation of the term Plaintiff. As the interpretation clause itself says, "this interpretation would apply only if there was nothing repugnant in the subject or context.

Now, under Art. 149, a suit by Government would not be barred before the lapse of 60 years, nor could the Government's title be extinguished before the lapse of that period. See sec. 28 of the Limitation Act. If so, Government had a good title in 1903. If it had a title, it certainly had the right to transfer it and did transfer the same to the Plaintiff in whom it became vested by the transfer. But if the ordinary interpretation of the term Plaintiff were adopted, the Plaintiff would find himself barred the moment the transfer became complete. This is reducing things to a practical absurdity. Art. 144, Art. 149 and sec. 28 should be read together and the interpretation that would avoid a repugnancy should be adopted. So in this case, Plaintiff, as used in Col. 3 of Art. 144, must mean Plaintiff himself and ought not to include his predecessor.

ANNADA MOHON ROY CHOWDHURY v. KINA DAS.

In this connection see the case of Lambert v. Taylor (1).

This case laid down that an assignee from the Crown in respect of a Crown debt, was entitled to sue for and recover the debt within 6 years from the date of assignment by the Crown, even though more than 6 years had elapsed from the date of accrual of the original cause of action. This case therefore supports the principle of my contention.

But it may be objected that the law even in England was different so far as assignment of land was concerned. See Doe d. Watt v. Morris (2).

In this case the Plaintiff got an assignment of a certain manor from His Majesty's Commissioners of Woods and Forests and sued the Defendant for recovery of certain waste lands within that manor which the Defendant had enclosed and been in possession of for over 20 years prior to the assignment. On a suit by the Plaintiff it was held that the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover because the Defendant had been in possession for over 20 years (the time limited for ordinary suits for recovery of possession of land).

But this decision proceeded on the interpretation of an English Statute, 21 Jac. 1, c. 14, which enacted that although the Crown would not be barred before the lapse of 60 years, yet after the lapse of 20 years, the Crown's rights would be qualified to this extent that the Crown would merely have the right of filing an information of intrusion and the intruder would be entitled to remain in possession pending adjudgment of title to the Crown. But no such qualification is imposed on the Crown's rights by the Indian law. Short of total extinction by reason of the lapse of 60 years no other restriction or limitation is to be found in the Indian Statute. But the result of the District Judge's view would appear to be that after the lapse of 12 years, Government loses the right to transfer. There is no warrant for this view.

Lastly, I would contend that even if the purchaser cannot have the full 12 years from the date of his purchase, he would at least get the 12 years subject to the 60 years' rule, i.e. to say, he would have either the full 12 years or the unexpired portion of 60 years whichever is less. See Kali Kishore v. Dhununjoy (3).

to be disposed of finally after remand for a finding as to adverse possession. The learned District Judge has found not only that the Defendants have all along been in possession since 1873, but also that their possession has been adverse as against the Government. This finding is challenged as not being justified by the facts. The suits not only had been fully heard when they came before us on second appeal on the previous occasion, but we also gave the parties permission to adduce further evidence if so advised and they have done so. The matter has been very fully considered and there are no grounds for interfering with the finding.

On such finding a further point has been argued, as to the date from which adverse possession should be deemed to run. Art. 144 of the first schedule to the Limitation Act provides that in a suit for possession of immoveable property the period of limitation shall be twelve years from the time when the possession of the Defendants becomes adverse to the Plaintiff. The property was bought by the Plaintiff from the Government in July 1903. Under Art. 149 had this suit been instituted by the Government it would not have become barred for sixty years. Consequently, we are asked to hold that in such circumstances, the word "Plaintiff" should not include the Plaintiff's predecessors-in-title, that is the Government, as ordinarily required by sec. 2, sub-sec. (8), because it is submitted that that would be repugnant to the intention of the Act since, if there has been more than twelve years' adverse possession as against the Government, though a suit by the Government might not be, a suit by a private purchaser from the Government would be barred. We are asked by reading the two articles together to say that a private person in such circumstances is entitled to get, before his right becomes extinguished, either 12 years from the date of his purchase or the period to which the Government would still be entitled, whichever is the less.

I see no grounds whatever for any such construction. It would give such purchaser an advantage which the law does not allow. If the period of 12 years was the less then the previous adverse possession against the Crown, and consequently sec. 2 (8), would be entirely ignored, if the balance of the period to which the Crown is entitled were the less, the Plaintiff would be obtaining the benefit of the full period of 60 years allowed to the Crown, to which it is conceded he is not entitled.

It was submitted that where there has been more than twelve years' adverse possession against the Government, if it was impossible for the Government's successor-in-interest to sue, the Act would be reduced to an absurdity. The answer to that, as is often the case, is a practical one, that when a conveyance of property is to be taken from Government against whom other persons are in adverse possession, it should not be taken until the Government has instituted proceedings and obtained an order for possession and is in a position to transfer the property free from such blot on the title.

The appeals must be dismissed with costs, separate sets of costs being allowed to the separate sets of Respondents who have appeared.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

REV. No. 56 OF 1923.

NEWBOULD, J.	DULA MEAH,
RANKIN, J.	Defendant, Petitioner,
1923,	v.
Heard, 21, May.	MOULAVI ABDUL
Judgment,	RAHAMAN, Plaintiff,
31, May.	Opposite Party.

Suit based on bond materially altered, if maintainable—Loan if recoverable when established by evidence apart from the bond—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 91, verbal negotiations leading up to written contract, if admssible in evidence as an independent contract.

Where a bond sued on is proved to have been materially altered by the Plaintiff, then, even apart from the question of merger, a suit on the original debt would not lie unless it can be proved as an independent contract apart from the bond.

Per RANKIN, J.—Verbal negotiations leading up to an express contract in writing cannot be set up as an independent contract and are not even admissible in evidence. Moreover, where there is an express promise, an implied promise will not be inferred.

Per NEWBOULD, J.—There is no decided authority that the material alteration of a written contract destroys the original debt, if the debt is not merged in the written contract.

This was a Rule issued on 29th of January 1923 against the judgment and decree of the Munsif at Lakhipur (Babu G. C. Biswas), in the District of Noakhali in exercise of the powers of a Court of Small Causes, on 31st December 1922.

The Opposite Party sued the Petitioner on a simple bond for Rs. 25. The Petitioner admitted having taken a loan of Rs. 15 only and having executed a bond for this amount. The Small Cause Court Judge held that Rs. 15 seemed to have been changed to Rs. 25; and that Rs. 5 out of that had been paid. He found the bond due and decreed the suit for Rs. 38, the true amount of principal and interest due in his opinion under the bond as it originally stood. The Petitioner thereupon moved the High Court and obtained the present Rule.

Babu Radha Binode Pal (for Babu Hem Kumar Bose) for the Petitioner.

Babu Radhika Ranjan Guha for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

NEWBOULD, J.—The Plaintiff sued the Defendant No. 1, who is the Petitioner in this rule on a bond in the Court of the Small Cause Court Judge at Lakhipur. The Plaintiff's case was that the Petitioner took a loan of Rs. 25 from him and executed a simple bond for Rs. 25 in favour of one Mafizulla who was the Plaintiff's benamdar and was made Defendant No. 2 in the suit. The Petitioner admitted having taken a loan of Rs. 15 only from Defendant No. 2 and having executed a bond for this amount in his favour and alleged that the amount due on this bond had been paid to Defendant No. 2. The judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge was as follows : "Payment of the bond is not proved save as to Rs. 5. Rs. 15 seems to be changed as Rs. 25. Defendant No. 2 does not file W. S. I find that Rs. 15 were paid and the bond is due." He decreed the suit for Rs. 38 but did not allow costs.

The Petitioner relying on the doctrine of Master v. Miller (1) contends that as it has been found that there was a material alteration of the bond the claim based on it should not have been decreed. The contention cannot be disputed, but on behalf of the Plaintiff Opposite Party it is urged that though he cannot successfully base a claim on the bond he is entitled to a decree on proof of the loan by independent evidence. Reliance is placed on the decision of Panton, J., and myself in an unreported case, Rule No. 708 of 1921, decided on the 17th February 1922. In that case a suit brought on an altered bond had been dismissed and we held that the Plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the money found to have been advanced. On behalf of the Petitioner it is pointed out that the debtor was not represented at the hearing of the case. It is suggested that on that account we overlooked an important difference in the case on which we based our decision: Mati Lal Saha v. Monmohan Gossami (2). That was a case where the whole bond was held to be a forgery and it was not a case of material alteration. Still this decision though not directly in point is important in its reliance on the decision in the case of Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath Dey (3). In that case it was held that "an implied contract to repay money lent arises from the fact that the money is lent even though no express promise either written or verbal is made to repay it. Therefore in a case where the Defendant admits the loan and has not repaid it the Plaintiff may maintain an action against him for breach of his promise or contract entirely independent of any security which may have been given for the advance." That was a case in which the hathchitta on which the Plaintiff relied was improperly stamped but the principle is equally applicable to the present case. This decision has been dissented from by a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Parsotam Narain v. Taley Singh (4). But it was cited as an authority by a divisional Bench of this Court in the case of Ram Bahadur v. Dusari Ram (5), where it was held that where a claim is founded on the original consideration it can be enforced provided that the original consideration has not merged in the bond or the promissory note which is excluded from evidence. A later case of the Allahabad High Court Benarsi Prasad v. Fazal Ahmed (6) was also there cited in support of this principle. On behalf of the Respondent reliance is placed on the case of Gour Chandra Das v. Prasanna Kumar Chandra (7) and more particularly on the remarks at p. 819. These were not necessary for the decision of the case and I can find no decided authority that the material alteration of a written contract destroys the original debt if the debt is not merged in the written contract. If the written contract is a negotiable instrument this would usually happen. But in the case of a simple bond I would hold that the alteration prevents a suit being based on the bond, and that the question whether a suit would lie on the original debt depends on whether there is a separate contract which can be proved apart from the bond.

(1) 1 Sm. L. C. 767 (11th Ed.) (1791).

DULA MEAH v. MOULAVI ABDUL RAHAMAN.

In the present case I would hold that the authorities support the Opposite Party's contention that he is entitled to recover the loan if he can establish his claim on evidence apart from the bond. But in the present case the findings have been arrived at after treating the bond as evidence and it cannot be said whether the Defendant would have been found liable if the bond had been excluded. The claim on the original debt is on the face of it barred by limitation. As a suit on the bond, limitation was saved by the proof of a payment of Rs. 5 which was alleged to be a payment of interest as such. But apart from the bond no contract to pay interest can be proved and on the findings arrived at there is nothing that would extend the period of limitation.

I would therefore make this rule absolute and reverse the judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court Judge and dismiss the suit with costs and allow the Petitioner his costs in this Court with hearing fee one gold mohur.

RANKIN, J.—I agree in the order proposed. The learned Judge on his own findings was dealing with a fraudulent suit brought upon a pretended bond for Rs. 25. He found that when in the custody of the Plaintiff the document sued on had been altered from Rs. 15 to Rs. 25. Though he granted sanction to prosecute he found that "the bond is due" and decreed the suit for Rs. 38, this being the true amount of principal and interest due in his opinion under the bond as it originally stood. No other interpretation of his decision seems possible.

In my opinion this is wholly contrary to law and can be corrected under sec. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 1887.

To the bond pleaded and tendered in evidence the Defendant has the simplest of all defences—non est factum. If the Plaintiff asked leave to amend his claim and sue upon the bond as it originally stood such leave should have been refused [Gagan Chandra Ghose v. Dharani Dhar Mandal (8)], but in any event such an amendment would effect nothing. The Plaintiff in such a case as this cannot recover on the bond at all—not even if he sues upon it in its original state : Master v. Miller (1) is undoubted law in India [Cf. Gour Chandra v. Prasanna Kumar (7)].

This is sufficient to show that the decision complained of cannot stand : in the present case it is not open to the Plaintiff to recover apart from the bond. A bill of exchange or promissory note is frequently given as conditional payment of or as security for the price of goods sold or some other debt. If the instrument is afterwards altered it cannot be sued on (as between the original parties) but the contract for the sale of goods (e.g.) can in such cases be enforced against the acceptor or maker who purchased the goods. As between an indorsee and indorser the case is different [Alderson v. Langdale (9), Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, sec. 87] because the indorser's remedy against prior parties has been prejudiced : this consideration does not affect a maker or acceptor who may therefore maintain an action on the original debt, [cf. Atkinson v. Hawdon (10)] so too a hathchitta is frequently given as an acknowledgment of a pre-existing date. Subject to any question of merger the same position may arise in the case of a bond. But an independent cause of action must be shown if the doctrine of Master v. Miller (1) is not to take effect.

Verbal negotiations leading up to an express contract in writing cannot be set up as an independent contract and are not even admissible in evidence (Evidence Act, sec. 91). Moreover, where there is an express promise an implied promise will not be inferred. In the present case I see no materials upon which the Plaintiff can make out an independent contract. Nor is it necessary to consider whether an honest Plaintiff whose bond had, while in his custody, been altered could on a case properly alleged and proved recover back the actual money lent as money had and received to his use. I think this rule should be made absolute and the suit dismissed with costs.

[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

LORD ATKINSON. LORD SUMNER. LORD CARSON. MR. AMEER ALI. 1922, Heard, 7, November. Judgment, 20, December.	HARICHAND MANCHARAM, Appellant, v. GOVIND LUXMAN GOKHALE, since deceased, Respondent.

Specific performance, suit for—Agreement whether subject to condition or a concluded contract—Principal terms settled but execution of a formal document in contemplation, effect of.

Where documents executed by the parties embodied the principal terms of the bargain on which they were in absolute agreement and regarding which they did not contemplate any variation or change, a reservation in respect of a formal document to be prepared by a vakil only meant that it should be put into proper shape and in legal phraseology with any subsidiary terms that the vakil might consider necessary for insertion in a formal document. The plea that there was no completed contract is not maintainable in such a case.

RIDGWAY v. WHARTON (1) and VON HATZFELDT-WILDENBURG v. ALEXANDER (2) referred to.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Appellate Court at Bombay, dated the 29th July 1919, allowing an appeal from the judgment of Marten, J., in the High Court at Bombay, dated the 1st February 1919.

(1) 6 H. L. C. 238 (1857).
(2) [1912] 1 Ch. 284.

The principal question on this appeal was whether an agreement between the Appellant and Govind Luxman Gokhale (hereinafter called the deceased Respondent), dated the 28th November 1917, providing for the sale by the Appellant to the deceased Respondent of a certain property in Grant Road, Bombay, was a concluded contract or whether the same amounted merely to negotiation and was dependent upon a formal contract being prepared.

On the 28th November 1917, the Appellant and the deceased Respondent drew up two documents in the Gujrati language and character which are Exs. "A" and "A1" in the case. It was admitted that for all intents and purposes the documents were in identical terms. Ex. A was addressed to the deceased Respondent and signed by the Appellant and Ex. A1 was addressed to the Appellant and signed by the deceased Respondent. The document signed by the Appellant, after a very full and careful description of the property by its number in Grant Road and by reference to its old and new numbers in the books of the Collector and in the old and new surveys, a statement of the exact measurement in square yards and a statement of the sum to be paid each year to the Government on account of ground rent, continued: "I agree to give you in sale the said immoveable property together with the messuage building (standing thereon) for the price of rupees two lacs and fifteen thousand." The document signed by the deceased Respondent similarly stated "I agree to purchase." The documents then continued that the conditions of the sale were that the bargain paper in respect of the sale should be made through a vakil within two days and at the time of making the bargain paper the Appellant was to take from the deceased Respondent by way of earnest money Rs. 10,000 and the balance of Rs. 2,05,000 was to be paid at the time of the execution of the sale deed. Careful provision was then made with respect to certain suits which were pending against the Appellant in the High Court at Bombay in relation to the property, it being provided that if these suits were decided against the Appellant "the bargain" should be cancelled and he should return the earnest money. Provision was also made for the costs of the sale and registration and the time of completion was fixed as six months after the date of the bargain paper, it being also provided that the Appellant should make out a marketable title and that if the said suits were not disposed of within six months "this agreement" should be in force until the suits were decided in the Appellant's favour. Provision was also made that the Appellant should get the signature of a certain person Ishwarlal on the sale deed and should not pay any brokerage. The documents then concluded with a statement that "the agreement" had been taken of the parties' own free will and pleasure.

After these documents were executed the Appellant's solicitors prepared a draft contract in English, but the parties could not agree as to its terms. Eventually on the 8th December 1917, the Appellant's solicitors wrote that as the deceased Respondent did not agree to the terms of the draft agreement as altered by them there was no course left open to the Appellant but to break off what was alleged to be the negotiations for the sale of the property. In consequence this suit was brought by the deceased Respondent. As was pointed out by the learned trial Judge in his judgment that the deceased Respondent's solicitors in entertaining and altering the draft agreement were particularly careful to do so without prejudice to his rights under the existing document Ex. A which they contended was a binding agreement.

The learned trial Judge in his judgment after reviewing the authorities, including Rossiter v. Miller (9), Winn v. Bull (3) and Von Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg v. Alexander (2), proceeded: "Now applying to Ex. A the principles laid down in the above judgments I think the words 'the conditions in respect thereof are as follows' are important and that it is also important that the first of the conditions referred to is for a bargain paper through a vakil. The reference to the more formal document (viz., the bargain paper) is therefore a 'condition' and according to Lord Parker that fact is generally, if not invariably, conclusive against the reference being treated as the expression of a mere 'desire.'" He therefore held that the agreement was subject to a more formal document being prepared and dismissed the suit.

The Appellate Court, (MacLeod, C. J. and Heaton, J.), unanimously reversed this decision. MacLeod, C. J., dealt with the use of the word "condition" as follows:—"The word 'condition' has two meanings. It is often used as synonymous with 'terms'. and ordinarily when it is stated in a document which takes the form of an agreement that the 'conditions are as follows,' as it is stated in Ex. A, the word 'condition' means 'term.' The commonest occasion where the word has this meaning is when conditions of sale are drawn up for an auction. Where a successful bidder signs the agreement annexed to the conditions of sale those conditions become part of the contract. Therefore the mere fact that a bargain paper was to be made through a vakil cannot of itself prove that there was a condition precedent to the agreement becoming effectual as a term of the agreement." Then after reviewing the authorities he pointed out that the present case was distinguishable from all those relied on by the Appellant in that in those cases the words "subject to" were used and it was held that they imported a condition. The Appellate Court therefore held that there was a concluded contract. The suits referred to in the contract having been settled and the Appellant being free to convey the property, the Appellate Court accordingly decreed specific performance of the contract.

On the 20th November 1919, the Appellant obtained from the Appellate Court at Bombay a certificate granting leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree of that Court and on the 20th December 1919 an order was made declaring the appeal to be admitted.

The deceased Respondent died on the 1st January 1922 and by Order of His Majesty in Council made on the 14th July 1922, it was ordered that the Respondents Dattatraya Govind Luxman Gokhale and Manohar Govind Luxman Gokhale, minors, should be substituted as Respondents in the place of the deceased Respondent and that Bai Satyabhamabai should be appointed their guardian ad litem.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., DeGruyther, K. C., Holman Gregory, K. C., E. B. Raikes and Parikh for the Appellant.—The Gujrati writings signed by the parties were merely the terms agreed on as a basis for a contract. The contract itself was to be made through a vakil and was never concluded.

There was merely a conditional agreement of which specific performance cannot be obtained. Winn v. Bull (3), Lloyd v. Nowell (4), Watson v. McAllum (5) and Von Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg v. Alexander (2).

The Courts have wrongly excluded evidence of an oral agreement which was the foundation of the written agreement.

Proviso 3, sec. 92, Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

Rogers v. Hadley (6) and Pym v. Campbell (7).

Messrs. Clauson, K. C., Tomlin, K. C. and R. J. T. Gibson for the Respondent.—The documents in Gujrati have provisions which contain the language of the contract and the clear terms agreed to between the parties.

The function of the vakil was purely ministerial, i.e., to put into legal language the terms already agreed on between the parties. Bonnewall v. Jenkins (8), Rossiter v. Miller (9) and Ridgway v. Wharton (1).

Mr. E. B. Raikes replied.

HARICHAND MANCHARAM v. GOVIND LUXMAN GOKHALE.

documents in the Gujrati vernacular were prepared on the occasion, one of which was signed by the Defendant Harichand Mancharam, the other by the Plaintiff, the vendee, Govind Luxman Gokhale. Both bear one and the same date, and are practically in identical terms. The document executed by the Defendant is marked in these proceedings as Ex. "A"; the other, signed by the Plaintiff, is marked Ex. "A1." Ex. "A," after giving the name and designation of the intending purchaser, the Plaintiff, and describing the vendor, Harichand Mancharam, proceeds thus:—

"I agree to give you in sale the said immovable property, together with the messuage building (standing thereon), for the price of Rupees two lacs and fifteen thousand."

It then gives the "conditions" of the sale in these terms:—

"The conditions thereof are as follows:—

"1. The bargain paper in respect of the sale of the said immoveable property shall be made through a vakil within two days from this day and at the time of making the bargain paper I am to take from you by way of earnest money in respect thereof Rs. 10,000, that is, you are to pay the same to me and as regards Rs. 2 lacs and five thousand being the balance you are to pay the same to me at the time of the execution of the sale deed by me and by way of earnest thereof I am to take from you, that is to say, you are to pay to me Rs. 10 ten thousand at the time of the (execution of the) bargain paper and the balance of Rupees two lacs five thousand is to be paid to me by you at the time when the deed of sale is executed by me.

"2. As regards the said Jaga premises to be sold suits are pending against me in the High Court. If perchance these suits are decided against me then this bargain shall be treated as cancelled and if such a thing happens then I am to return to you the Rs. ten thousand without interest received as earnest money by me.

"3. As to the costs in respect of stamp, registration, vakil, &c., in the matter of the said sale which may be incurred on behalf of both the parties, i.e., you and myself the same shall be totalled up and borne by you and me half and half.

"4. The time of completing the said matter of the said sale deed is agreed to be six months from the date of the bargain paper on the decision in the case being given in my favour during the said period,* I am to get passed, i.e., made out marketable title for you and to complete the matter of sale. If perchance the suit pending in the High Court not disposed of within six months then this agreement shall be in force till the disposal of the said suit and on the said suits being decided in my favour I am to complete the matter of this sale, and if the High Court suits be decided in my favour within six months I am to complete and you are to get completed the matter of sale within six months.

"5. For the purpose of the sale you are to get for me the signature of Ishwarlal the adopted son of Shankerbhai along with your signature on the sale deed.

"6. In the matter of this sale I am not to pay brokerage.

"The agreement I have given and taken from you to the above effect of my and your free will and pleasure. The 28th day of November 1918 correspond with the sud 15th of Kartak 1974, Wednesday."

Ex. "A1," after reciting the terms of the contract, in para. 7 says as follows:—

"7. This bargain is for the purchase of this immoveable property together with buildings and structures thereon, (you) have given and I have taken from you the agreement to the above effect, of our free will and pleasure. The 28th day of the month of November in the year 1918 (corresponding with) the 15th of Kartak sud of Samvat 1974, Wednesday."

The case came on for trial before Mr. Justice Marten on the Original Side of the Court. The Plaintiff contended that the two documents which formed the foundation of the suit, formed a completed contract; whilst the Defendant-vendor urged that it was only a provisional arrangement conditioned to the preparation by a vakil of a formal document evidencing the contract. The learned Judge framed a number of issues, but so far as the present appeal is concerned only the two following are material :—

* The equivalent of I and you are partly altered in the original.

"(1) Whether suit is maintainable having regard to fact that the writing sued on was conditional upon an agreement being entered into?

"(2) Whether there was a concluded contract between the parties and if so what are the terms thereof?"

At the trial the Defendant attempted to tender some oral evidence to show what actually took place on the occasion when the parties entered into the agreement relied upon by the Plaintiff. The trial Judge refused the application in these words : "I reject that evidence : irrelevant and inadmissible."

In their Lordships' opinion he was quite right, under sec. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, in rejecting the evidence, and no attempt appears to have been made on appeal to take exception on behalf of the Defendant to this part of Mr. Justice Marten's order. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to refer further to this matter.

On the main case the trial Judge came to the conclusion that Exs. "A" and "A1" did not constitute a completed contract, chiefly relying on the use of the words, "the conditions thereof are as follows." He considered that the condition that the "bargain paper" in respect of the sale shall be made by a vakil within two days from the date of the agreement was a condition to which the whole bargain was subject, so that until the vakil prepared a bargain paper "there was no completed contract." He accordingly dismissed the Plaintiff's suit with costs. On appeal by the Plaintiff to the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction the learned Judges (Macleod, C. J., and Heaton, J.) arrived at a different conclusion. They held that the two documents executed on the 28th November 1917, constituted a "binding agreement," and that the provision relating to the preparation of a "bargain paper" by a vakil was not a condition to which the contract was subject, and accordingly they reversed the order of the trial Judge and decreed the Plaintiff's suit.

On appeal before the Board it is urged, on behalf of the Defendant as it was urged in the Appellate Court in India, that the Gujratihahers of the 28th November 1917 represented only a provisional arrangement on which no decree could be made. In support of this contention various clauses in the document executed by the Defendant were referred to. It is said that the fact that the bargain paper was to be made within two days from the date of the execution of the documents "A" and "A1," and was to be prepared by a vakil, and that at the making of the bargain paper the earnest money is to be paid, shows that the real and effective contract was to be founded on the paper prepared by the vakil. Again, reference was made to cl. 1, Ex. "A," viz., that "the time of completing the said matter of the said sale deed is agreed to be six months from the date of the bargain paper on the decision in the case being given in my favour during the said period." It may be remarked here that two suits had been brought against the Defendant contesting his title to the property which he had bargained to convey to the Plaintiff, and the reference in para. 4 is to these two suits. Their Lordships understand that these two actions were subsequently settled, and there is no dispute now as regards the title of the vendor (the Defendant).

The Appellant's counsel refers also, in support of his contention, to the fact that formal documents were prepared by the Defendant's solicitors, in which certain additional terms were inserted, and he urges that the insertion of those terms indicates that the original agreement entered into on the 28th November 1917, was not intended to be a completed contract. On behalf of the Respondent reliance has been placed on the whole tenor of the two documents, and especially on cl. 7 of Ex. "A1," to show that the parties intended to have a definite and completed agreement on that date when they executed those two papers, and what was left to be done by the vakil was only to embody the contract in a formal document and to insert in it such subsidiary terms as are usual in such conveyances. The learned Chief Justice points out in his judgment that the word "conditions" used at the beginning of Ex. "A," in connection with the preparation of the "bargain paper" by a vakil, does not mean that it is a condition to which the bargain is subject, but that it is only one of the "terms" of the contract. Their Lordships concur in that view.

He has also examined at some length the cases in which the principle applicable to the construction of such documents is laid down; it is, therefore, not necessary to refer to them in detail in this judgment. Whether an agreement is a completed bargain or merely a provisional arrangement depends on the intention of the parties as deducible from the language used by the parties on the occasion when the negotiations take a concrete shape. As observed by the Lord Chancellor (Lord Cranworth) in Ridgway v. Wharton (1), the fact of a subsequent agreement being prepared may be evidence that the previous negotiations did not amount to an agreement, but the mere fact that persons wish to have a formal agreement drawn up does not establish the proposition that they cannot be bound by a previous agreement. In Von Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg v. Alexander (2), Lord (then Mr. Justice) Parker laid down that where "the acceptance by the Plaintiff was subject to a condition that the Plaintiff's solicitors should approve the title to and covenants contained in the lease, the title from the free-holder and the form of contract," the negotiations did not form a binding agreement between the parties.

The facts of that case were wholly different from the present, but the judgment marks the difference between a completed and binding agreement and one subject to a condition. Here Exs. "A" and "A1" show clearly that the parties had come to a definite and complete agreement on the subject of the sale. They embodied in the documents that were exchanged the principal terms of the bargain on which they were in absolute agreement, and regarding which they did not contemplate any variation or change. The reservation in respect of a formal document to be prepared by a vakil only means that it should be put into proper shape and in legal phraseology, with any subsidiary terms that the vakil might consider necessary for insertion in a formal document. The letter of the 1st December 1917 by the Defendant's attorney to the Plaintiff's solicitor shows that the terms of the vernacular document "A" were regarded by them as forming the foundation of the contract. They are as follows:—

"With reference to your letter of yesterday, delivered to us by your articled clerk after 4 P.M., we note that you agree that the alterations which you had made in the English draft agreement prepared by us and handed to your client are not in consonance with the terms of the Gujrati Chitti which our client gave to yours. We, however, do not agree with you that the English agreement as drafted by us originally, or as sent to you with our letter of the 29th ultimo, is not in consonance with the terms of the said Chitti."

Cl. 7 of Ex. "A1," to which reference has already been made, is explicit :—

"This bargain is for the purchase of this immoveable property, together with buildings and structures thereon, (you) have given and I have taken from you the agreement to the above effect, of our free will and pleasure. The 28th day of the month of November in the year 1918 (corresponding with) the 15th of Kartak sud of Samvat 1974, Wednesday."

It shows clearly that a completed bargain was intended by the Plaintiff.

On the whole, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment appealed from is correct, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs. They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF OUDH.]

LORD BUCKMASTER. SIR JOHN EDGE. MR. AMEER ALI. SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS. 1921, Heard, 10, November. Judgment, 9, December.	MOHAMMAD SHER KHAN, Appellant, v. RAJA SETH SWAMI DAYAL, Respondent.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 60, 98—Anomalous mortgage, provision in mortgage that mortgagee may take possession if property not redeemed at the end of term and remain in possession for 12 years appropriating profits towards interest and without right in the mortgagor to redeem during this period—Redemption, suit for, during period of possession, if maintainable—Clog on redemption

A mortgage of immoveable property for five years inter alia provided that if it was not redeemed at the end of that period the mortgagee would be entitled to take possession and remain in possession for twelve years during which period the right of the mortgagor to redeem would be suspended and the mortgagee would have the right to take the profits in lieu of interest without any obligation of account:

Held—That assuming the mortgage to have been an "anomalous mortgage" within the meaning of sec. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act, it would still be governed by the provisions of sec. 60 of the Act, under which the right to redeem arose as soon as the term of five years expired. This statutory right could not be defeated or hindered by the provision suspending the right to redeem during the period of the mortgagee's possession after the expiry of the term.

An anomalous mortgage enabling the mortgagee after a lapse of time and in the absence of redemption to enter and take the rents in satisfaction of the interest would be perfectly valid, if it did not also hinder an existing right to redeem.

Held—That as the provision authorising the mortgagee during possession to appropriate the profits in lieu of interest was valid, the mortgagee was not accountable for the profits during the period of his possession nor the mortgagor for interest.

These were two consolidated appeals from two decrees, dated the 9th February 1915, and the 19th June, 1918, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which affirmed two decrees, dated the 7th September 1914, and the 17th April 1916, of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri respectively.

The principal question for determination on the present appeal was whether the Appellant was entitled to redeem the mortgage in suit, dated the 9th June 1908, which was executed by the Appellant in favour of Seth Raghubar Dayal (since deceased), father of the Respondent.

The principal amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 82,000 payable with interest under the following terms :—

(1) That I shall pay interest on the said mortgage money at the rate of 9½ annas per cent. per month, in respect of the 1st six-months, at the end of Aghan 1316 Fasli, for the first time and thereafter, I shall each year pay, similarly, interest every six-months, at the end of Aghan and Jeth, under a duly executed receipt signed by the mortgagee. If the interest for any six-months be not paid on due date it will be added to the principal, and interest at the above rate will run on the total amount of principal and interest, and this system of payment of interest and of compound interest by six-monthly instalments will continue, during the stipulated period as well as after that, till redemption and payment of the entire demand.

(2) That after five years, at the end of Jeth 1320 Fasli, in the fallow season, I shall pay, at a time and in a lump sum, the entire principal interest, and compound interest, and redeem the mortgaged property.

(3) That if interest for four six-months be not paid in full, or if at the stipulated time, i.e., after five years, I do not get the mortgaged property redeemed on payment of the entire amount of principal, interest and compound interest, then, in both cases, the mortgagee will have the option either to take possession of the mortgaged property, in lieu of the principal for a period of 12 years commencing from the date of entering into posession, or to let his interest and compound interest run as usual, in which case I shall not raise the objection to the effect that the mortgagee did not take possession in order to let his interest accumulate, the mortgagee having the option to choose one of the two alternatives.

(4) That in case the mortgagee takes possession, I, the mortgagor, shall get mutation of names effected in his favour; and if I fail to do so, the mortgagee may himself get mutation effected in his favour, I being liable for the costs thereof. In case the mortgagee has to file a suit on account of my breach of promise, or for possession of the mortgaged villages on account of non-payment of four six-monthly instalments of interest, then the costs thereof will be borne by me, and I shall pay the same with interest, at the above rate, without any objection.

(5) That the mortgagee will remain in possession for twelve years from the date on which he takes possession of the mortgaged property, and the mortgagor will not have the right of redemption during this period of twelve years.

(6) That, during the period of possession, the mortgagee will appropriate, in lieu of interest, all the produce, mal and sewai, and profits of the mortgaged villages, after payment of the Government revenue according to the present settlement. During the period of possession, neither the mortgagee will have any claim to interest, nor I, the mortgagor, to profits: nor will there be any accounting as to shortage or surplusage of profits at the time of redemption.

(7) That from the date of possession, the mortgagee shall enjoy all proprietary rights as I do. He will have, like myself, the right of enhancing or altering rent, increasing or reducing the area of holdings, ejecting tenants, dismissal and retention of Patwari and Chaukidar and all other rights. No interference will be made on my behalf, during the period of mortgagee's possession. I shall give up sir and khudkasht, if any, in the mortgaged villages, and the mortgagee will have the power to arrange for the cultivation of such lands.

(8) That during the period of possession, all wood, green or dry, which might fall from trees in the groves or from other trees, will be appropriated by the mortgagee, and he will have the power to cut up to four trees, green or dry, every year, and I will advance no claim in respect thereof at the time of redemption. Every building used for the accommodation of myself, or of my peons and karindas, will remain in the mortgagee's possession, and no interference will be made on my behalf so long as he is in possession. The mortgagee will receive, like myself, all the zemindari dues, parjot, etc., the crops of groves and gardens, and all kinds of products along with mal and sewai, generally, and I will advance no claim in respect thereof at the time of redemption.

(9) That on the expiry of twelve years, at the month of Jeth, i.e., on Puranmashi, in the fallow season, I shall redeem the mortgaged property on payment of principal, interest, and compound interest, together with arrears and taqawi, due from tenants, such as may be recoverable. Pending the payment of the entire demands due hereunder, together with arrears and takawi, due from tenants, the mortgagee will, as usual, remain in possession and occupation of the mortgaged property in accordance with the above-mentioned conditions.

The mortgagee having died, the Respondent, his heir, filed the first of the present suits (No. 234 of 1913) against the Appellant on the 14th July 1913, in the Court of the said Subordinate Judge. He stated in the plaint that the Appellant had not paid the principal and interest of the debt due under the mortgage within the period specified therein, and that under the terms of the mortgage quoted above, the Respondent was entitled to obtain possession of the mortgaged property, and he accordingly claimed a decree for possession thereof.

The Appellant filed a written statement denying the Respondent's claim to obtain possession of the mortgaged property, and offering to redeem the said mortgage. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit framed the following among other issues:—

(4) Has the Plaintiff become entitled to possession over the mortgaged estate on account of breach on the part of the Defendant of any of the mortgaged terms and to retain possession for twelve years from the date he obtained it?

(5) Or, is the Defendant entitled to pay off the mortgage-debt and need not surrender possession?

The Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 7th September 1914. He held that the Appellant was not entitled to redeem the mortgage, and said as follows:—

"I have already discussed and held that the mortgage in suit is an anomalous mortgage and that the rights and liabilities of the parties to it should be determined according to its terms. It expressly provides that on default of the mortgage-debt at the due date the mortgagee shall be entitled to take possession over the mortgaged property and to retain it for twelve years. There is no dispute that the breach of this contract has taken place. Therefore the right to possession vested in the Plaintiff and he is entitled to the relief claimed. The Defendant is precluded, in my opinion, from withholding the possession from the Plaintiff and cannot pay off the mortgage. Therefore I find the 4th issue for the Plaintiff and the 5th issue against the Defendant."

The Subordinate Judge therefore made a decree for possession of the mortgaged property in favour of the Respondent, and from that decree the Appellant appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and the appeal was registered, First Appeal No. 126 of 1914. The learned Judicial Commissioners delivered judgment on the 9th February 1915. They held that the said mortgage was not an anomalous mortgage as defined in sec. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, but that it was a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage. In other respects they agreed with the said Subordinate Judge in holding that the Appellant was not entitled to redeem the mortgage, and they accordingly made a decree dismissing the appeal. In the course of their judgment they said as follows :—

"We do not, however, find that the Appellant has been able to make out any case for the setting aside or the modification of the decree. There is nothing in the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act which will give him a right to redeem other than the right which he agreed to accept under the terms of the deed. It is not open to him to obtain a right of redemption which would have the effect of defeating the claim for possession by obtaining a decree in this case stating the amount which would have to be paid as a condition precedent to redemption."

The Appellant thereupon filed the second of the present suits (No. 93 of 1915) on the 18th June 1915, in the Court of the same Subordinate Judge. In his plaint the Appellant stated that the Respondent had obtained possession of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree on the 14th February 1915. He further stated that the annual profits from the mortgaged property were not less than Rs. 12,255 and odd, and that the Appellant was entitled to redeem the said mortgage. The Appellant therefore claimed possession of the mortgaged property from the Respondent, who denied the Appellant's claim, and filed a written statement.

The Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 17th April 1916. He held that the terms of the deed contained in cl. 5 thereof did not amount to a clog on the equity of redemption, and that the Appellant was not entitled to redeem the mortgage before the expiry of twelve years from the 14th February 1915, the date on which the Respondent obtained possession of the mortgaged property. He concluded as follows :—

"Certainly it would have been much better for the Plaintiff, and an honour to the Defendant himself, if the Defendant could have seen his way to accept the Plaintiff's offer and afford him a chance to redeem the mortgage, but he has, like the implacable banker in Shakespear's play, elected to continue a profitable investment of his money and to avail himself of the conditions of the contract, and there is nothing in the law to deprive him of it."

The Subordinate Judge therefore held that the suit filed by the Appellant for redemption of the mortgage was premature, and he therefore made a decree dismissing it with costs, and from that decree the Appellant appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and the appeal was registered, No. 78 of 1916. The learned Judicial Commissioners delivered judgment on the 19th June 1918, agreeing with the findings of the said Subordinate Judge and dismissing the appeal. They concluded their judgment in the following words :—

"The agreement by which the exercise of the right of redemption is postponed for a period of twelve years cannot by itself be treated as a clog : the parties are allowed to settle the period of redemption by contract between themselves, and to arrange the date after which redemption may be had. Here we have a time for redemption fixed by the parties themselves, and unless the mortgage is, if it legally can be, satisfied from the usufruct meanwhile, there is no ground apparent upon which the Plaintiff shou'd be allowed to depart from his agreement and seek redemption at an earlier date.

"The clause by which the mortgagor is debarred from making payments towards principal during the period of the mortgagee's possession is part and parcel of the arrangement by which the exercise of the right of redemption is postponed : it is not a collateral or independent clause in restriction of the exercise of a right already agreed upon."

Hence these appeals by special leave from the said decrees, dated the 9th February 1915, and the 19th June 1918, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellant.—This was a simple mortgage under the definition of sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and there was a right to redeem under sec. 60 of that Act.

Cl. 5 in the mortgage is bad in that it purports to take away that statutory right of redemption.

The mortgage was not a combination of a simple and usufructuary mortgage but a succession of one to the other and sec. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to it. They referred to Lingam Krishna v. Maharaja of Vizianagram (1).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondent.—Sec. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable or alternatively there is a separate contract added to a simple mortgage which is valid.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C. replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—These are consolidated appeals preferred by special leave of His Majesty in Council from two decrees, dated the 9th February 1915, and the 19th June 1918, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which affirmed two decrees passed by the Subordinate Judge of Kheri on the 7th September 1914, and the 17th April 1916, in suits No. 234 of 1913 and No. 93 of 1915.

The question for determination is whether Mohammad Sher Khan, the mortgagor and Appellant in both appeals, has a present right on payment of the mortgage-money to redeem the mortgaged property. This has been decided adversely to him in both the lower Courts.

The mortgage is dated the 9th of June 1908, and is Ex. A. 36 on the record. The sum of Rs. 82,000 is recited to be due, and the mortgagor declares : "Therefore I . . . . . do hereby mortgage for five years", the immoveable property there described. Then follow the terms.

Cl. 1 provides for the payment of interest half-yearly at the rate of 9½ annas per cent. per month, for compound interest, in the event of default, and that—

"This system of payment of interest and of compound interest by six-monthly instalments will continue during the stipulated period as well as after that till redemption and payment of the entire amount."

Cl. 2 is in these terms :—

"After five years at the end of Jeth 1320 Fasli in the fallow season I shall pay at a time and in a lump sum the entire principal, interest and compound interest and redeem the mortgaged property."

Cl. 3 provides :—

"That if interest for four six-months be not paid in full, or if at the stipulated period, i.e., after five years, I do not get the mortgaged property redeemed on payment of the entire amount of principal interest and compound interest, then in both cases the mortgagee will have the option either to take possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of the principal for a period of twelve years commencing from the date of entering into possession or to let his interest and compound interest run as usual, in which case I shall not raise the objection to the effect that the mortgagee did not take possession in order to let his interest accumulate—the mortgagee having the option to choose one of the two alternatives."

Cl. 4 deals with mutation of names.

Cl. 5 is in these terms :—

"The mortgagee will remain in possession for twelve years from the date on which he takes possession of the mortgaged property and the mortgagor will not have the right of redemption during the period of twelve years."

Cl. 6 stipulates for the appropriation of produce and profits in lieu of interest, and that during the period of possession neither the mortgagee will have any claim to interest nor the mortgagor to profits, and there will be no accounting as to shortage or surplusage of profits at the time of redemption. . . .

Cl. 9 provides :—

"That on the expiry of twelve years at the end of Jeth, i.e., on Puranmashi in the fallow season I shall redeem the mortgaged property on payment of principal, interest and compound interest," and other specified payments.

"Pending the payment of the entire demands due hereunder the mortgagee will as usual remain in possession and occupation of the mortgaged property in accordance with the above-mentioned conditions."

Interest fell into arrear, and at the stipulated time the mortgage-money was not paid. Thereupon suit No. 234 of 1913 was instituted by Raja Seth Swami Dayal, the mortgagee, for possession of the mortgaged property under the terms of the mortgage. He was resisted by the mortgagor, who pleaded that he intended to redeem the property.

On the 7th September 1914, the Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the mortgagee, who obtained possession on the 14th February 1915. An appeal was preferred by the mortgagor to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, but it was dismissed on the 19th February 1915, the Court at the same time declaring that the decree would not affect any right of redemption exercised in the manner provided by law before the delivery of possession. On the 25th February 1915, the mortgagor applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, but his application was dismissed on the 26th April 1915. On the 18th June 1915, the mortgagor instituted suit No. 93 of 1915 for redemption. It was dismissed in the first Court on the 17th April 1916, and this was affirmed on the 19th June 1918 by the Appeal Court on the ground that the suit was premature. On the 23rd August 1918, the mortgagor applied to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, but without success.

tion here, obtained special leave to appeal from the Appellate decrees in both suits on the 30th May 1919.

Many questions were raised in the Courts below which have now disappeared, and all that now remains to be determined is whether the present claim to redeem is premature. Mortgages of immoveable property are governed by the provisions contained in Chap. IV of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. In sec. 58 four kinds of mortgage are described—a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale, a usufructuary mortgage, and an English mortgage. Sec. 98, headed "Anomalous Mortgages," contemplates a mortgage that does not fall under any of the four descriptions contained in sec. 58, and is not a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage or of a mortgage by conditional sale and a usufructuary mortgage. In the case of such a mortgage the rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage-deed and so far as such contract does not extend by local usage.

By sec. 60 of the Act it is provided that at any time after the principal money has become payable the mortgagor has a right to redeem, and a suit to enforce it is called a suit for redemption.

The contest between the parties to this litigation turns upon whether the mortgagor's right to redeem is suspended by the provision in the mortgage which purports to entitle the mortgagee to remain in possession for twelve years from the date on which he took possession.

In the argument there has been considerable discussion as to the category to which this mortgage belongs, and more especially as to whether or not it is an anomalous mortgage. But their Lordships do not think it necessary to pursue this enquiry, for, in the view they take, the rights and liabilities of the litigants must depend on the terms of the instrument as controlled by the Transfer of Property Act, for, even if it were an anomalous mortgage, its provisions offend against the statutory right of redemption conferred by sec. 60, and the provisions of the one section cannot be used to defeat those of another unless it is impossible to effect reconciliation between them. An anomalous mortgage enabling a mortgagee after a lapse of time and in the absence of redemption to enter and take the rents in satisfaction of the interest would be perfectly valid if it did not also hinder an existing right to redeem. But it is this that the present mortgage undoubtedly purports to effect. It is expressly stated to be for five years, and after that period the principal money became payable. This, under sec. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, is the event on which the mortgagor had a right on payment of the mortgage-money to redeem.

The section is unqualified in its terms, and contains no saving provision as other sections do in favour of contracts to the contrary. Their Lordships therefore see no sufficient reason for withholding from the words of the section their full force and effect. In this view the mortgagor's right to redeem must be affirmed, and as both suits are now before the Board there will be no difficulty in passing one decree in both so framed as to give due effect to this right.

Though the Appellant has succeeded in these appeals, by his procedure and dilatoriness, he must be held responsible for this protracted litigation, and the consequent wasted expense; and to mark their disapproval of his conduct their Lordships will not interfere with the orders as to costs made by the lower Courts, nor will they allow him any costs of these appeals.

The decrees of the lower Courts should therefore be discharged except so far as they order payment of costs by the mortgagor.

There should then (in their Lordships' opinion) be one preliminary decree for redemption in both suits in accordance with Or. 34, r. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. But in taking the accounts the period during which the mortgagee may have been in possession under the decree in suit No. 234 of 1913 should be excluded for, though the provisions of the mortgage entitling the mortgagee to possession cannot operate to defeat sec. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, effect should be given to them so far as they provide that the mortgagee is to appropriate in lieu of interest all the produce mal and sewai and profits of the mortgaged villages after payment of the Government revenue. And so, during this period, as in effect provided by the mortgage, neither will the mortgagee be accountable for profits nor the mortgagor for interest.

The decree should further provide that if payment is not made on the fixed day the mortgaged property should be sold.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the case ought to be remitted to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh with directions to pass a decree in accordance with the opinion expressed. There will be no order as to the costs of these appeals.

Receiver, principles regulating the appointment of—Court's discretion in the matter not arbitrary but regulated by well-settled legal principles—Desirability of appointing a disinterested person—Persons entitled to present possession are the only necessary parties in an appeal for the appointment of a Receiver.

power to appoint a Receiver is not to be exercised as a matter of course or for the reason that it can do no harm to appoint one.

The words "just and convenient" in Or. 40, r. 1, of the Code mean that the Court should appoint a Receiver for the protection of property or the prevention of injury according to legal principles, and not that the Court can make such appointment because it thinks convenient to do so. They confer no arbitrary and non-regulated discretion on the Court.

The Receiver appointed by the Court should, as a general rule, be a person wholly disinterested in the subject-matter. But it is competent to the Court upon the consent of the parties, and in a proper case without such consent, to appoint as Receiver a person who is mixed up in the subject-matter of the litigation, if it is satisfied that the appointment will be attended with benefit to the estate.

KALI KUMARI v. BACHUN SINGH (11), RE: LLOYD (13), TAYLOR v. ECKERSLEY (14) and other cases referred to.

Where the object of the appointment of a Receiver is to secure properties during the pendency of a litigation, the parties necessary to an appeal against an order refusing to appoint a Receiver, are only the persons entitled to present possession.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of August 1923, against the order of Babu Saroda Prosad Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Hoogly, dated the 15th of August 1923.

The Appellant Bhupendra Nath Mukherjee instituted a suit for construction of the Will of the founder of an endowment and for determination of a variety of questions in relation to the debuttar estate. The plaint contained a prayer for the appointment of a Receiver, and the Plaintiff made an application in that behalf. There were several Defendants in the suit, but only the first Defendant-Respondent contested the application for the appointment of a Receiver. The Subordinate Judge having dismissed the application for the appointment of a Receiver, the Plaintiff preferred the present appeal to the High Court, making only the first Defendant Respondent in the appeal.

Or. 40, r. 1, C. P. C., in a suit for construction of a Will, for establishment of title to sebaitship of a debuttar estate and for incidental reliefs.

The history of this endowment is set out in the judgment of this Court in Monohar Mukherjee v. Peary Mohon Mukherjee (1), which was confirmed on appeal by the Judicial Committee [Peary Mohon Mukherjee v. Monohar Mukherjee (2)]. It is sufficient to state that the endowment was created by Jagomohan Mukherjee, the common ancestor of the parties to this suit, who made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 11th September 1840. A suit was instituted by the first Defendant Monohar Mukherjee for construction of the Will, for the administration of the trust created thereby, for the removal of Raja Peary Mohon Mukherjee from the shebaitship, for the appointment of a new shebait or a Receiver, and other incidental declarations. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court on the 23rd December 1915. That judgment was reversed by this Court on appeal on the 24th July 1919. The effect of this judgment was to remove Raja Peary Mohon Mukherjee from the shebaitship and to place the debuttar estate in the hands of a Receiver appointed by this Court. Since then, the Receiver has continued in occupation and has discharged his duties under the direction of this Court. Raja Peary Mohon Mukherjee died on the 16th January 1923 and the succession to the shebaitship opened out on his death. In the normal course of events, the Receiver would have been discharged on the death of Raja Peary Mohon Mukherjee. Disputes, however, broke out between Monohar Mukherjee and the representatives in interest of Raja Peary Mohon Mukherjee, and at the desire of all parties, this Court directed the Receiver to continue to hold the estate until further orders. On the 9th February 1923, an application was made to this Court on behalf of Monohar Mukherjee to the effect that the Receiver might be directed to make over possession of the debuttar estate and all the papers in relation thereto to him as the next person entitled to hold the shebaitship under the terms of the Will of the founder. The application was opposed by a representative of Raja Peary Mohon Mukherjee who was a party to the original suit also in his own right. On that occasion, the Court made the following order :—

"Before possession can be taken by the shebait, or in the event of a dispute, before a Receiver can be appointed by a competent Court to take charge of the debuttar estate, it is necessary that the Receiver appointed by this Court should continue. We accordingly authorise the Receiver to continue in occupation till the 1st day of the new Bengali year. If, in the meanwhile, the parties can agree upon a person to take possession of the estate as the new shebait and the matter is reported to us, the Receiver will be authorised to withdraw forthwith. If, on the other hand, the dispute is not ended and the Receiver is appointed by a competent Court where the suit has been instituted, the Receiver will be directed to make over possession to the new Receiver."

We directed the Receiver to continue in occupation till the first day of the new Bengali year, because it was pointed to us by both sides that if the Receiver were to withdraw from the management at an earlier date, considerable difficulties might arise in the way of institution of rent suits, as the period of limitation would expire in ordinary course on the last day of the then current Bengali year. Thereafter, both parties awaited further developments, each anxiously expectant as to what action might be taken by his opponent. At length, on the 14th April 1923, that is, just after the expiry of the date fixed by this Court Bhupendra Nath Mukherjee, the son of Raja Peary Mohon Mukherjee, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hughli for construction of the Will of the founder and for determination of a variety of questions in relation to the debuttar estate. Thirty-eight persons—all of them, except one, members of the Mukherjee family of Uttarparah—were brought on the record as Defendants. The list included the Receiver appointed by this Court. Four other persons were subsequently brought on the record as additional Defendants. 17 of these 42 Defendants entered appearance. The plaint contained a prayer for the appointment of a Receiver, and five days later, an application was made by the Plaintiff in that behalf. The only Defendant who contested the application for the appointment of a Receiver was the first Defendant Monohar Mukherjee. On the 15th August 1923, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the application for the appointment of a Receiver. Five days later, the present appeal was lodged in this Court by the Plaintiff. The only person brought on the record as Respondent in the appeal is the first Defendant Monohar Mukherjee. We have now to consider whether the order of the Subordinate Judge can be supported on the merits.

A preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal should not be heard, until notice has been served upon all the other Defendants, at any rate, upon the Defendants who had entered appearance in the trial Court. We are of opinion that there is no substance in this contention. The object of the appointment of a Receiver in the present case is to secure the properties during the pendency of the litigation. If a Receiver is appointed, the only person materially prejudiced thereby would be the person entitled to present possession as shebait. In this category may be included the Plaintiff as also the first Defendant, as they are rival claimants to the possession of the debuttar estate. There is no allegation that there is a third person amongst the Defendants who is entitled to present possession or has even advanced a claim to that effect. They are necessary parties to the suit, which has been instituted for construction of the Will and for other reliefs, which may affect the endowment wherein they are or their successors-in-interest may become interested either in the present or in the future. But there is no suggestion that any of these Defendants is entitled to present possession, and consequently it is not necessary to have them on the record of this appeal.

We shall now proceed to consider the merits of the order under appeal. We observe that the Subordinate Judge has not only narrated the previous history of the endowment but has also expressed a decisive opinion as to the rights of the parties. The danger of such a course was pointed out by this Court in Ram Sundar Das v. Kamal Jha (3). The Subordinate Judge has also referred to the decisions in Siddheswari Dabi v. Abhoyeswari Dabi (4) and Chandidat Jha v. Padmanand Singh (5). In these cases, the Court considered the principles which should regulate the appointment of Receivers, where the effect of the appointment is to oust a person who is in possession of the property in dispute. The principles applicable in cases of that character were clearly stated by Sir John Woodroffe in his work on Receivers. The appointment as well as the removal of a Receiver is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the Court. In exercising its discretion, the Court should proceed with caution and be governed by a view of the whole circumstances of the case. A Receiver should not be appointed in supersession of a bonâ fide possessor of the property in controversy, unless there is some substantial ground for interference: Mathuria Debya v. Shibdayal Singh (6). The power conferred by the Code of Civil Procedure to appoint a Receiver is not to be exercised as a matter of course, and it is not a reason for allowing an application for the appointment of a Receiver, that it can do no harm to appoint one: Prosannomoyee Debi v. Beni Madhab Roy (7). The words "just and convenient" in Or. 40, r. 1 of the Code mean that the Court should appoint a Receiver for the protection of property or the prevention of injury according to legal principles and not that the Court can make such appointment because it thinks convenient to do so. They confer no arbitrary and non-regulated discretion on the Court.

These are well-settled principles, but the case before us possesses special features which have been overlooked by the Subordinate Judge. Here, as in Khubsurat v. Saroda Charan (8) and Madaneswar v. Mahamaya (9), the subject-matter of litigation is not in the occupation of either the Plaintiff or the contesting Defendant. The property is in the custody of this Court, in the hands of the Receiver appointed by us in connection with the suit previously mentioned. Such a contingency was foreseen by Lord Cranworth in the case of Owen v. Homan (10), when he made the following observations:—

"The Receiver must be appointed on the principle on which the Court of Chancery acts of preserving property pending the litigation which is to decide the rights of the litigant parties. In such cases, the Court must of necessity exercise a discretion as to whether it will or will not take possession of the property by its officer. No positive unvarying rule can be laid down as to whether the Court will or will not interfere by this kind of interim protection of the property. Where, indeed, the property is as it were in medio, in the enjoyment of no one, the Court can hardly do wrong in taking possession. It is the common interest of all the parties that the Court should prevent a scramble. Such is the case when a Receiver of the property of a deceased person is appointed pending a litigation in the ecclesiastical Court as to the right of probate or administration. No one is in the actual lawful enjoyment of property so circumstanced, and no wrong can be done to any one by taking and preserving it for the benefit of the successful litigant. But where the object of the Plaintiff is to assert a right to property of which the Defendant is in the enjoyment, the case is necessarily involved in further questions. The Court by taking possession at the instance of the Plaintiff may be doing a wrong to the Defendant, in some cases an irreparable wrong. If the Plaintiff should eventually fail in establishing his right against the Defendant, the Court may by its interim interference have caused mischief to the Defendant for which the subsequent restoration of the property may afford no adequate compensation. In all cases, therefore, where the Court interferes by appointing a Receiver of property in the possession of the Defendant before the title of the Plaintiff is established by decree, it exercises a discretion to be governed by all the circumstances of the case."

In the case before us, the property is in the hands of a Receiver appointed by this Court. The Defendant urges not only that a Receiver should not be appointed by the Subordinate Judge but that the Receiver previously appointed by this Court should be discharged and the properties made over to him, because, in the opinion of this Court, he is the person entitled to the shebaitship on the death of the last incumbent. In our judgment, it would not be right for this Court to adopt this suggestion. If we were to express an opinion that the first Defendant is entitled to the shebaitship in the events which have happened, we should only prejudge the matter in controversy in the litigation before the Subordinate Judge. We are consequently of opinion that a Receiver should have been appointed in this case by the Subordinate Judge and we proceed to make the order which should have been passed by him.

The view has been pressed on us as well by the Plaintiff as by the first Defendant that if a Receiver is appointed, the Plaintiff or the Defendant should be such Receiver. Each has offered to find funds, if necessary, for the management of the endowment. Each has pointed out that inestimable benefit would accrue if he were appointed Receiver. Each has urged that he will make no charge for management. Each has explained that he has an efficient machinery at his disposal for management of zemindaris and that the debuttar estate would be effectively and economically managed if the estate were placed in his hands. Neither of the litigants, however, has the remotest confidence in the other and neither is prepared to see his opponent appointed as Receiver, notwithstanding the high estimate formed by each of his own capacity for management. In such circumstances, we cannot overlook the principles which have been applied when an application has been made by one of the parties litigants for appointment of himself as Receiver; Kali Kumari v. Bachun Singh (11) and Suprasanna Roy v. Upendra Narain Roy (12). The Receiver appointed in an action should as a general rule be a person wholly disinterested in the subject-matter; Re : Lloyd (13). But it is competent to the Court upon the consent of the parties, and in a proper case, without such consent, to appoint as Receiver a person who is mixed up in the subject-matter of the litigation, if it is satisfied that the appointment will be attended with benefit to the estate; Taylor v. Eckersley (14), Hyde v. Warden (15), Fuggle v. Bland (16), Boyle v. Bettws L. C. Co. (17), Blakeway v. Blakeway (18) and Cookes v. Cookes (19). We regret that we have not been able to satisfy ourselves that benefit would accrue to the debuttar estate if either of the rival claimants were appointed Receiver. We are of opinion that the Receiver previously appointed should be appointed Receiver in this suit. The fact that he has been able to manage the estate efficiently notwithstanding the conflicting interests of powerful litigants, justifies the expectation that he will continue to be successful in the discharge of his difficult and responsible duties as Receiver. We accordingly appoint Babu Ramtaran Chatterjee, a Vakil of this Court and one of its officers on the Appellate Side, to be the Receiver in the suit. He will continue to perform his duties under the orders of this Court. This arrangement possesses the manifest advantage that there will be no change in the management. We are convinced that a change of management or policy at this stage would be detrimental to the interest of the endowment.

The Appellant will have costs both of this Court and of the Court below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at ten gold mohurs.

We direct the Subordinate Judge to take up the suit for final disposal in accordance with law as early as practicable.

GANGADAS v. JOGENDRA NATH (9) distinguished.

This was an appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah (Babu Bejoy Gopal Chatterjee), dated the 26th June 1919, modifying a decree of the Munsif of Uluberiah (Babu Sashi Jiban Sen), dated the 17th January 1918.

The material facts of this case are as follows :—Two brothers, Akhoy and Abhoy, mortgaged their joint ancestral property to one Jiban in 1297 (1890). Subsequently, one Abinash obtained a decree against Abhoy alone and bought the interest of Abhoy in execution sale in 1894. He took kabuliyat from the tenants on the land and continued in possession through the tenants for about 20 years till the institution of the present suit. After the said purchase by Abinash, Jiban sued on his mortgage, without making Abinash a party to the suit and in 1896 obtained a mortgage decree and bought the mortgaged property in execution in 1897. After the institution of Jiban's mortgage suit Akhoy too sold his share by separate kobalas to two persons Ishan and Hem Chandra, who took kabuliyats from the tenants on the land and continued in possession by receipt of rent from the tenants. In a rent suit brought by Jiban against some of the tenants in 1913, the tenants denied that he was their landlord. Jiban's successors consequently brought the present suit (1) for a declaration of their title against the successors of Abinash and of Ishan and Hem Chandra, the purchasers respectively of the shares of Akhoy and Abhoy, and (2) for khas possession against the tenant Defendants on the ground that in consequence of their denial of the landlord's title the tenants had forfeited their right to remain as tenants on the land. The lower Court gave the Plaintiffs a decree in respect of Akhoy's half but did not give them khas possession. The Plaintiffs therefore preferred the present second appeal to the High Court for a declaration in regard to Abhoy's share against the successors of Abinash, and for recovery of khas possession as against the tenant Defendants in regard to the whole area.

Babus Hur Coomar Mitter and Rupendra Coomar Mitter for the Appellants.

Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WALMSLEY, J.—The Plaintiffs are the Appellants. Their suit was for establishment of their title as against Defendants Nos. 6 to 11, and for recovery of khas possession as against the tenant Defendants, Nos. 1 to 5. They lost in the first Court, and on appeal they succeeded in part: they now prefer this appeal in regard to the part of their claim that has been disallowed.

The property in suit is two-thirds of a plot measuring 10 bighas 16 kattas. This portion was bought by one Syama Charan Mukerjee in 1273 B. S., he died leaving two sons, Akhoy and Abhoy. They together, mortgaged it to Jiban Krishna Ray, father of Plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and of Defendant No. 12, and grandfather of Plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5. The mortgage was dated 1297. Jiban got a decree on the mortgage in 1896, and bought the mortgaged property in execution on 12th January 1897.

Meanwhile Abinash, the predecessor of Defendants Nos. 8 to 11, had obtained a decree against Abhoy alone, and bought the interest of Abhoy in an execution sale on 9th June 1894. At that time the tenants under Akhoy and Abhoy, namely, Chaitanya, Defendant No. 1, Sridhar, Defendant No. 5, and Krishna, the father of Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, were in occupation of the land. Abinash took a kabuliyat from Krishna and Sridhar. Although Abinash had bought Abhoy's interest before Jiban brought his suit, he was not made a party to that suit.

Akhoy also dealt with his share, but after the institution of the suit by Jiban; he sold it on Falgun 2 and 3, 1304 by separate kobalas to Ishan, predecessor of Defendant No. 6, and Hem Chandra Defendant No. 7. On 28th Agrahan 1306, Chaitanya and Sridhar executed a kabuliyat in favour of Ishan and Hem Chandra.

The case for the Plaintiffs is that Jiban obtained possession of the property after his purchase at the auction sale, and that he received rent from the tenants amicably and by suit; but when he brought a suit in 1913 (No. 885 of 1913) for recovery of the rents of 1317 to 1320 the tenants denied that he was their landlord, and in consequence the Plaintiffs assert that the tenant Defendants have forfeited their right to remain as tenants of the land.

The claim of the Plaintiffs is therefore two-fold; for a declaration of their title as against Defendants Nos. 6 to 11, and for khas possession as against the tenant Defendants Nos. 1 to 5.

The decree which they have obtained is in respect of Akhoy's half, but it does not give them khas possession. The objects of the appeal therefore are firstly a declaration of title in regard to Abhoy's share against the successors of Abinash and secondly recovery of khas possession as against tenant Defendants in regard to the whole area.

I will deal first with the claim to title as regards Abhoy's share. The first argument on this subject is that granting that Abinash was not bound by Jiban's mortgage decree, the right which he held was no more than it would have been if he had been made a party, that is to say, he had a right to redeem and he and his successors cannot retain possession without redeeming the Plaintiffs' mortgage. Reliance is placed on two Bombay decisions Mohan Manor v. Togu Uka (1) and Dadoba Arjunji v. Damodar Raghu Nath (2). In the first case the lower Court held that as Plaintiff would not satisfy the Defendant's mortgage, the suit must be dismissed. The High Court held that it was not for the Plaintiff to satisfy the Defendant, but for the Defendant to have an opportunity of satisfying the Plaintiff, and so Plaintiff was given a conditional decree. In the second case a conditional decree was granted by the lower Court, and when the Plaintiff appealed, the High Court said that the Defendant was clearly entitled to an opportunity of redemption, and then proceeded to examine the terms. The question under consideration, therefore, was different from the one before us, and it is not necessary to examine the decision further, or to refer to the comments upon it in the case of Entholi Kizkakkikandy Kanaram v. Vallath Koylil Unnooli (3).

KRISTOPADA RAY v. CHAITANYA CHARAN MONDAL.

Another case quoted to us was that of Pratap Chandra Mandal v. Ishan Chandra Choudhury (4), but that was a case in which the Plaintiff was the purchaser of the equity of redemption, and the decision is of no assistance in the present case. Another case—that of Murugaser Marimuttu v. Charles Henry de Loysu (5) is complicated by some of the facts, and it is also a case in which the parties stand in the reverse position.

(5) [1891] App. Cas 69.

On the other hand, there are two Full Bench decisions of the Allahabad Court, in which the facts appear to be exactly similar to those of the present case. They are Hargulal Singh v. Gobind Rai (6) and Mandanlal v. Bhagwan Das (7). In the former case the learned Judges said: "The Plaintiff can only succeed in this suit for possession on proof of title to a present possession at the date of his suit. His simple mortgage did not entitle him to possession as against any one, his decree for sale, being in a suit to which these Defendants were not parties, had no effect as against them, and his purchase at the sale held under the decree conferred on him no title as against these Defendants. The result is that the Plaintiff had no title to possession at the commencement of the suit against these Defendants, and his suit was properly dismissed." These remarks were amplified in the later case. In the present case too, the mortgage was a simple one, and the Plaintiffs asked for an absolute decree and not a conditional one. My learned brother has dealt with the decisions in this Court, and it is not necessary for me to add to what he has said. I admit that the earlier of the Bombay cases appears to be in favour of the Plaintiffs' contention, but I think we should accept the principle laid down in the Allahabad cases, more especially because in the present case twenty years were allowed to pass between Jiban's purchase and the institution of the suit.

As against the successors of Abinash it is also said that Plaintiffs have acquired title by adverse possession. The learned Judge's remarks on this subject are rather confused, but as I understand them he ends by accepting the finding of the Munsif, at least to the extent that the

Plaintiffs had not proved possession for the statutory period.

Another argument put forward was that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in treating possession as coming to an end when rent ceased to be paid : it is said that he should have held that the possession ceased when in the suit for the rent that was not paid the tenants denied the Plaintiffs' title. This argument however was not set out in the grounds of appeal, so we did not allow it to be pressed.

The one question that remains is whether in regard to Akhoy's share the Plaintiffs should be given khas possession. The learned Judge refused the prayer because Sridhar was not a party to the rent suit in which the tenants denied the Plaintiffs' rights. He clearly should have been made a party to that suit, for he is and was one of the tenants on the land. It is argued that the disclaimer by one of the joint tenants is operative as against all if the making of it was within the scope of his authority. Such an argument involves an investigation into the scope of the authority and no investigation has been made because the argument was not put forward in either of the lower Courts. I think it is too late for the Plaintiffs to ask us now to order such an enquiry to be made.

The result is that the Plaintiffs' appeal fails and it must be dismissed with costs.

SUHRAWARDY, J.—The only substantial question raised in this appeal is "whether a mortgagee who has purchased the mortgaged property in execution of his mortgage decree is entitled to recover possession of it from a transferee of the equity of redemption subsequent to the mortgage who was not a party to the mortgage suit, subject to the right of the latter to redeem the mortgage."

The High Courts in India are not in agreement on this point. The Bombay and Allahabad High Courts have taken diametrically opposite views and the Madras High Court has sided with Allahabad. See Dadoba v. Damodar (2), Madanlal v. Bhagwan Das (7) and Entholi v. Vallath (3).

On an examination of the cases it appears that the divergence of opinion is due to the question whether the purchaser in the above circumstances purchases the equity of redemption as it stood at the date of the mortgage which is the ratio decidendi of the Bombay cases or whether in view of sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act and the general law regarding a decree of no value against one not a party to it, he purchases only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor mortgagor at the date of the auction sale by Court, which seems to be the point of view of the Allahabad cases.

In this Court also there is a conflict of opinion and some of the cases cannot be reconciled. I will not attempt to notice all the cases bearing on the point but refer to only some of recent date that lay down opposite views.

In the case of Aghore Nath v. Deb Narain (8), Rampini and Woodroffe, JJ., following the Allahabad cases above noticed held that a purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree cannot recover possession from a transferee of the equity of redemption who was not a party to the mortgage decree. In the same volume at p. 403, Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ., held in the case of Gangadas v. Jogendra Nath (9) that such a purchaser is entitled to recover such possession subject to the Defendants' right to redeem [see also Pratap v. Ishan (4) and Girish Chandra v. Iswar Chandra (10)].

In the case of Habibullah v. Jugdeo (11), Rampini and Brett, JJ., held that a purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree has no right to retain possession of the property obtained through civil Court against a purchaser of the equity of redemption who was not a party in the suit on the mortgage. In the same volume at p. 612 in the case of Jugdeo v. Habibullah (12) the dispute between the same parties again came for consideration and Brett and Mookerjee, JJ., held that the purchaser at the mortgage sale is entitled to recover possession of the property subject to the exercise of the right of redemption by the purchaser of the equity of redemption. It is to be noted that Brett, J., was a party to both these decisions which apparently do not appear to be in unison on principle and similarly O'Kinealy, J., was one of the Judges who decided the two cases reported in the 4th volume of the Calcutta Weekly Notes above referred to. It seems logically fallacious to attempt to reconcile cases which lay down that such a transferee is entitled to recover possession from a purchaser under a mortgage decree dispossessing the former from the mortgaged property and the cases which allow the purchaser to recover possession of such property from the transferee subject to the latter's right to redeem. The views consistently expressed by Rampini, J., find support in an earlier case, Radha Pershad v. Monohar Das (13), where Garth, C. J., expressly laid down that the purchaser at a mortgage sale has no right to sue for the khas possession of the property as against a transferee of the equity of redemption who was not a party to the suit on the mortgage, but his only remedy is to bring a suit against such transferee to have his right declared to sell the property to satisfy his mortgage debts.

In this unsettled state of law, if it were incumbent upon us to come to a decision on this question, it would have been necessary to refer the matter to a Full Bench, but we are relieved of this necessity by the special facts of this case. The equity of redemption of one of the mortgagors Abhoy was purchased by one Abinash, the predecessor-in-interest of Defendants Nos. 8 to 11 in this case, in 1894 in a Court sale, and Abinash was in possession of Abhoy's share in 1897 when the Plaintiff purchased the property in execution of the mortgage decree. Abinash and his successors continued in possession through Defendants Nos. 1 to 5, until the date of the present suit, and the Plaintiffs did not take any steps, for twenty years to recover possession from him. In this state of things it may be safe to presume, and it is deducible from the findings of the lower Appellate Court that Jiban Krishna, the predecessor of the Plaintiff, was aware when he brought the suit on his mortgage that Abinash was in possession of a part of the property and still he did not make him a party in the suit. That being so, the case of Aghore Nath v. Deb Narain (8) is an authority for the proposition that in such circumstances the Plaintiff cannot sue for recovery of possession. The case of Gangadas v. Jogendra Nath (9) which holds the contrary view has for its special feature the fact that the mortgagee at the time of the suit had no notice of the interest of the transferee of the equity of redemption. The present case therefore seems to be covered by the former decision, and the Plaintiff's claim must fail. It was found by the first Court that the Plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation inasmuch as he was never in possession of this half share of Abhoy since his purchases in 1897. The lower Appellate Court has not reversed that finding, but assuming the Plaintiff's case to be true has held that the Plaintiff is not entitled to khas possession. In this view also, the Plaintiff's suit is liable to be dismissed.

As regards the other points urged in this appeal, I concur with my learned brother in the conclusions he has arrived at. In the result I agree in dismissing this appeal with costs.

[APPEAL FROM PATNA.]

LORD BUCKMASTER. SIR JOHN EDGE. SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS. LORD SALVESEN. 1922, Heard, 24 and 26, October. Judgment, 20, December.	RANI JAGADAMBA KUMARI, Appellant, v. THAKUR WAZIR NARAIN SINGH, Respondent.

Impartible estate—Income of estate, if necessarily an accretion thereto—Income and properties purchased therefrom treated in the accounts as parts of zemindari—Intention to treat them as part of impartible estate, if to be presumed—Moveables, if can be accretions of impartible estate—Ordinary joint family property and impartible estate, incomes of, how differ—Separation, question of, whether of fact or law.

Where the question whether a member of a Mitakshara joint family has separated or not was concurrently determined by two Courts in India, the argument open before the Judicial Committee to the party adversely affected is not upon the facts found but that those facts, when accepted, do not establish the conclusion arrived at.

The cases of GIRJA BAI v. SADASHIV DHUNDIRAJ (1) and KAWAL NAIN v. PRABHU LAL (2) are clear decisions that it is competent to a member of a joint family to separate himself from the family by a clear and unequivocal intimation of his intention to sever, and this is also true with regard to an impartible estate; but as in that case the person separating forfeits his chance of inheriting the whole of the estate by survivorship, it requires strong evidence to establish such separation.

The produce of an impartible estate does not naturally belong to and form an accretion to the original property. The income when received is the absolute property of the owner of the estate and could not be used for the purpose of acquiring or endowing an impartible estate.

In the case of an ordinary joint family estate, the income, equally with the corpus, forms part of the family property, and if the owner of the estate mixes his own monies with the monies of the family—as for example, by putting the whole into one account at the bank or by treating them in his accounts as indistinguishable—his own earnings share with the property with which they are mingled the character of joint family property. No such considerations necessarily apply to the income from impartible property.

Where the evidence was that the savings from the income of an impartible estate were utilised by the owner in giving loans and purchasing other properties and the monies lent and the income of the zemindaries purchased were treated by him as parts of the income of his estate:

Held—That these facts did not establish a sufficient intention to treat the acquired properties—whether the mouzahs, mortgages or other personal estate—as part of the original Raj.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Patna, dated the 31st January 1917, modifying a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hazâribagh, dated the 18th September 1911.

The suit was instituted by the predecessor in title of the Respondent to establish his claim to the estate of Raja Saroda Narain, the late Raja of Serampore.

The property in dispute consisted of (1) the impartible estate of Serampore, (2) immoveable properties acquired by the Raja, (3) moveable properties, particularly Government promissory notes, acquired by the Raja.

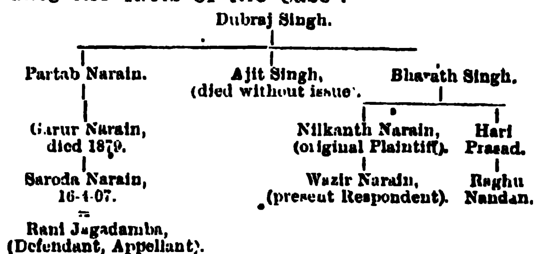
(6) L. R. 43 I. A. 269, 281: s. c. 21 C. W. N. 410 (1916).

The parties were governed by the Mitakshara law.



The Appellant was the widow of Raja Saroda Narain and on his death she took possession of the estate under the protection of the Court of Wards.

The Respondent alleged that he was entitled to succeed (1) by virtue of a custom under which females were excluded from the succession, and (2) by virtue of the rule that in such estates so long as the family remained united the order of succession was the same as if the estate had been partible.

The Appellant denied the custom and alleged that the Plaintiff had separated from the family and so the rule regulating succession to impartible estates no longer operated for his benefit.

She further contended that in any event only the ancestral Raj was joint property, and that all property acquired by the late Raja himself, on his death, passed to his widow.

The following pedigree serves to elucidate the facts of the case:—

Dubraj Singh granted the villages of Chowrah and Nawadih to Bharath Singh, a grant which the Plaintiff said was for khorposh or maintenance. The Plaintiff resided there and in consequence separated from the family in food. The defence alleged that there was a complete separation by Bharath Singh in food, worship and estate.

The Subordinate Judge held that there was no separation but that the custom excluding females had been proved, and in regard to the property acquired by the late Raja, he decided that it was an accretion to the impartible estate, and he passed a decree accordingly.

On appeal, the High Court (Chapman and Roe, JJ.) held that the custom had not been proved, and that the defence had failed to prove a complete separation in interest.

With regard to most of the properties claimed to be accretions the learned Judges agreed with the Subordinate Judge, but they held that the Government promissory notes which the late Raja had bought had not been incorporated by him with the estate and to that extent they modified the decree of the Subordinate Court.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., E. B. Raikes and Palat for the Appellant.—The High Court have decided the question of custom in my favour and I do not propose to deal with that. From the facts proved the proper inference is that Saroda Narain separated from the joint family. Parbati v. Chaudhuri Naunihal Singh (7).

There is no express declaration of intention either way, but the facts are sufficient to enable the Court to infer that there was an intention to separate. There was an undoubted separation in food and mess and the establishment of a separate idol and separate purohit shows a separation in worship.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The mere fact of going away and living separately is not sufficient to show an intention to separate, especially as there is evidence that the Respondent's family returned to the Raj on ceremonial occasions and lived there for months.]

It is not the law that a khorposhdar must renounce all claim to the Raj before he can determine to separate. He merely asks for a grant, leaves the joint family and sets up on his own.

Thakurain Tara Kumari v. Chaturbuj Narain Singh (8).

The facts there are similar to those in the present case. The Subordinate Judge has based his findings on the judgments of the High Court.

It is immaterial whether the estate is partible or impartible and Laliteshwar Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (9) was wrongly decided.

Reference was also made to Rani Surtaj Kuari v. Rani Deoraj Kuari (10), Sri Raja Rao Venkata S. M. R. Krishna Rao v. Court of Wards (11), Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (1), Kawal Nain v. Prabhu Lal (2) and Baijnath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh (12) as to the properties acquired from the income of the estate.

The Respondent has failed to discharge the onus which is upon him of proving that accretions became part of the Raj. Ekradeshwar Singh v. Janeshwari Bahuasin (13).

The view expressed in Sarabjit Partap v. Indarjit Partap (3) that although you cannot create an impartible estate, yet you can add to it, was erroneous and was not accepted by the Judicial Committee in Parbati Kumari Dibi v. Jagadis Chunder Dhabal (4).

If it is contended that accretions become part of the Raj, there must be clear proof of the intention to incorporate.

Janki Pershad Singh v. Dwarka Pershad Singh (5) and Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan (6).

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondent were asked to confine their argument to the question of accretion. It is clearly established that an impartible estate can be increased by the incorporation of acquired property, and both Indian Courts have found an intention so to incorporate, except as to the Government promissory notes.

The evidence is stronger than in Parbati Kumari Dibi v. Jagadis Chunder Dhabal (4).

There is evidence here that the moneys collected were entered in the estate accounts.

It is further significant that the owner died without making a Will from which it may be reasonably inferred that he never intended to separate the superfluous income from the property of the impartible Raj.

The same view prevails in the analogous case of purchases by a Hindu widow. Isri Dut Koer v. Hansbutti Koerin (14) and Sheo Lochan Singh v. Saheb Babu Singh (15).

Reference was also made to Lal Bahadur v. Kanhya Lal (16) and Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (17).

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. in reply contended that the considerations applicable to a Hindu widow's estate were dissimilar and referred to Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 629.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The Appellant in this case is the widow of Raja Saroda Narain. The Respondent is the nearest male agnate of the deceased, being the son of one Nilkantha Narain, the original Plaintiff in the suit, who was the son of Bharath Singh. The proceedings were instituted for the purpose of establishing the title of the Plaintiff to an estate known as the Serampore Raj or Gadi and certain moveable and immoveable property, cash and securities which had been purchased out of the income of that estate. The questions with regard to the estate and the monies and property representing the investments from this income are distinct, and need to be separately considered. They have both been decided adversely to the Appellant, with the exception of the claim to certain Government securities which will be more specially referred to hereafter. Serampore Raj or Gadi is impartible, and the family is governed by the Mitakshara law. If there had been no division of the family the property would have passed to the Plaintiff, but it is asserted that Bharath Singh separated from his father in his life-time, and that consequently neither he nor the Plaintiff was joint in estate with Raja Saroda Narain.

Now, the facts upon which this alleged separation is based have been concurrently found by the two Courts, and are no longer the subject of dispute. The argument properly open to the Appellant is not upon the facts themselves, but that these facts, when accepted, do establish separation. The facts are these :—The village of Chowrah was granted, at a date not precisely ascertained but many years ago, by the then Raja to the Plaintiff's father Bharath Singh by way of maintenance on a mokurari grant at a nominal rent. The Plaintiff's father, who died in 1879, does not appear to have gone to reside at Chowrah, but the Plaintiff went there about 1885, when the then Raja was a minor and his estate was under the management of the Court of Wards. The effect of this change of residence necessarily effected a separation in food and mess. The High Court hold distinctly that there was no separation in religion, and the learned Subordinate Judge holds that there was no separation beyond the separate living in the maintenance village and the consequent separate messing.

The cases of Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (1) and Kawal Nain v. Prabhu Lal (2) are clear decisions that it is competent to a member of a joint family to separate himself from the family by a clear and unequivocal intimation of his intention to sever, and this is also true with regard to an impartible estate; but as in that case the person separating forfeits his chance of inheriting the whole of the estate by survivorship, it requires strong evidence to establish such separation.

The case of Kawal Nain v. Prabhu Lal (2) illustrates this. It was there found that the separation relied on was a complete separation in worship, in food, and in estate; and, further, there was good reason for the complete separation, and that consequently the requisite evidence was forthcoming. In this case these conditions are lacking, and their Lordships are unable to think that there has been any mis-application of the principles of law which regulate this question, and the findings of fact are sufficient to defeat the Appellant's claim. • •

The second question gives rise to greater difficulty. It appears that Raja Saroda Narain, when he inherited the estate, was a minor. The estate was then placed under the custody of the Court of Wards. On his obtaining majority the Raja entered into possession and appears to have managed the estate with care and skill. Towards the end of his life misfortune overtook him and he became insane. His estate was once more placed under the custody of the Court of Wards, and so remained until his death in 1907.

Originally the estate was in debt, and as there is no evidence of any acquisition of property from other sources, it follows that all the estate possessed by the Raja other than the impartible Raj was derived from the income of the Raj itself. In the end this income produced very considerable property. There were certain villages, certain mortgages—usufructuary and otherwise—sums due on bonds and decrees, Government promissory notes to the extent of two lacs, and other moveable and immoveable properties. With the exception of the Government promissory notes the whole of these have been awarded to the Plaintiff upon the ground that they represented an accretion to the estate and descended with it. Their Lordships think that this conclusion is wrong, and that its error is due to the idea that the produce of the impartible estate naturally belongs to and forms an accretion to the original property. In fact, when the true position is considered there is no accretion at all. The income when received is the absolute property of the owner of the impartible estate. It differs in no way from property that he might have gained by his own effort, or that had come to him in circumstances entirely disassociated from the ownership of the Raj. Nor could the monies have been used by him for the purpose of acquiring or endowing an impartible estate. It is, therefore, a strong assumption to make that the income of the property of this nature is so affected by the source from which it came that it still retains its original character.

It is possible that this confusion is due to the consideration of the position with regard to an ordinary joint family estate. In such a case the income, equally with the corpus, forms part of the family property, and if the owner of the estate mixes his own monies with the monies of the family—as, for example, by putting the whole into one account at the bank, or by treating them in his accounts as indistinguishable—his own earnings share with the property with which they are mingled the character of joint family property; but no such considerations necessarily apply to the income from impartible property. The whole of the evidence on the matter in the present case, as stated by the High Court, is as follows :—

"Some new properties were acquired out of the savings of Serampore Gadi. When there were savings in my hand I used to send the money to the Raja and take receipts from him. The money was utilised by the Raja by giving loans and purchasing other properties. On some occasions the Raja used to lend the money himself, and these sums are not entered in our books. When the loan was given through us, then we used to keep accounts of such money. I can't give the sums that passed through our hands or their probable amount. The moneys that passed through our hands were invested in loan and also in purchasing zemindaris. The incomes of zemindaris purchased were also entered in our books. It was treated as part of the income of the estate. Loans with interest repaid were also entered in our books. That money was also treated as part of the estate. All this was done at the instance of the Raja. Loans advanced by the Raja personally and not through our hands, and those that were not entered in the estate account at the time of the advance, the money when repaid used sometimes to come to our hands and sometimes paid to the Raja direct. Those that came to our hands were entered in our book. What was so entered into the estate account was considered as estate money with the Raja's consent. I can't say if the Raja purchased any landed estate out of the money advanced by him personally."

For the reasons already given such a statement is insufficient to affect the property with the character of impartibility. Whether it be possible in any circumstances to treat moveable property as an accretion to a landed estate of this character is a matter not arising for decision.

It is true that in Sarabjit Partap Bahadur Sahi v. Indarjit Partap Bahadur Sahi (3), it was decided that moveable property could be so regarded, but as the point does not arise here their Lordships need only say that they must not be regarded as accepting the soundness of that decision. The facts here are not very different from those in Srimati Rani Parbati

RANI JAGADAMBA KUMARI v. THAKUR WAZIR NARAIN SINGH.

Kumari Dibi v. Jagadis Chunder Dhabal (4), where it was held that the evidence was inadequate to show that certain mouzahs bought out of the savings of the zemindar were attached to the zemindary. In both Janki Pershad Singh v. Dwarka Pershad Singh (5) and Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan (6), the addition of family property to the original Raj is considered. Both these cases dealt with property other than moveable property. In the present case their Lordships can see no evidence in the facts stated of any sufficient intention to treat the acquired properties—whether the mouzahs, mortgages or other personal estate—as part of the original Raj. The consequence is that to that extent the Appellant succeeds, and the decree of the High Court must be varied by declaring that the decree for possession made in favour of the Respondent be further varied by providing that it shall not include items 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 and 9 in Sch. A to the plaint. The Respondent will pay the costs of the appeal.

They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 150 OF 1922.

SANDERSON, C. J. RICHARDSON, J. 1923, Heard, 11, 12 and 13, June. Judgment, 27, June.	BURN & CO., LTD., Defendants, Appellants, v. H. H. THAKUR SHAHEB SHREE LOKHDIRJEE, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Payment of instalment, time fixed for, when essence of contract — What amounts to refusal to perform contract entitling the other party to cancel —Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), secs 39 and 55— Damages, obligation to minimise.

By a contract the Defendant Company undertook to manufacture and deliver fifty wagons to the Plaintiff. The terms of the payment were that the Plaintiff should advance one-third of the price with the order, one-third was to be paid when the wheels were attached to the under-frames, and the remaining one-third on receipt of the wagons. The Plaintiff paid the first instalment. On the 25th of October 1916, the Defendant Company demanded payment of the second instalment, representing that the under-frames were being wheeled. In February 1917, the Defendant Company delivered to the Plaintiff eight wagons, and again demanded payment of the second instalment as also of another sum in respect of the third instalment for the eight wagons delivered. Repeated demands were made by the Defendant Company for the payment of these two sums of which the Plaintiff took no notice. On the 4th of July 1917, the Defendant Company's solicitor intimated to the Plaintiff that "unless the full amount of the original contract price is paid" within ten days, "the undelivered wagons will be disposed of" by them:

Held, per curium.—That in view of the conduct of the Defendant Company in delivering the eight wagons, the time fixed for payment of the second instalment was not of the essence of the contract, nor did the Defendant Company give any notice to the Plaintiff demanding payment of the instalment within a reasonable time, thereby making time of the essence of the contract.

Per SANDERSON, C. J.—The Plaintiff was not bound to minimise his damages by accepting the offer made in the Defendant Company's letter, dated the 4th of July 1917, inasmuch as on the pleadings their own case was that they did not cancel the contract till the 18th of July 1917 when the offer was no longer open to the Plaintiff.

This was an appeal preferred on the 28th November 1922 against the judgment of Mr. Justice Rankin, dated the 25th April 1922, passed in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON C. J.—This is an appeal by the Defendants from the judgment of my learned brother Rankin, J., whereby he made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff for damages for breach of contract.

My learned brother, in the judgment which he is about to deliver, has set out the material facts, which in this case are to be gathered from the correspondence, and it is therefore not necessary for me to deal with them in detail.

By the contract the Defendants undertook to manufacture and deliver 50 wagons. The terms of payment were that the Plaintiff should advance ⅓ of the price with the order; ⅓ was to be paid when the wheels were attached to the under-frames and the remaining ⅓ on receipt of the wagons and after their erection.

In accordance with these terms a cheque for Rs. 30,833, representing the first instalment, was sent by the Plaintiff to the Defendants on the 20th February 1915.

By a letter, dated the 25th October 1916, the Defendants submitted a bill for Rs. 30,833, representing the second instalment under the contract "being ⅓ value due when under-frames are wheeled."

Inspite of many applications this sum was not paid by the Plaintiff. Amongst other things he alleged that he feared that the second instalment would remain locked up as the first and asked that he should be informed definitely when the wagons would be completed and despatched.

The Defendants explained that they could not give such definite information. War conditions were prevailing, and there was a difficulty in obtaining various parts of the wagons, which had to be imported from England.

In February 1917 the Defendants despatched eight wagons to the Plaintiff.

After these eight wagons had been accepted by the Plaintiff, the Defendants again demanded the payment of the bill for the second instalment, viz., Rs. 30,833 and they added a demand for Rs. 5,000 in respect of a further bill, which represented the amount due in respect of the third instalment for the eight wagons, which had been delivered.

On the 5th March 1917, the Defendants wrote a letter to the Plaintiff's manager, which is an important one, as follows :—

"5th March 1917"

"The Manager,
Morvi Railway,
Hill Buildings,
Morvi.

Dear Sir,

Regarding our Bill No. 5014W/7786 of 24th October 1916 for Rs. 30,833 we are in receipt of your telegrams of 19th and 28th ultimo informing us that you had referred our requests for payment to the proprietor of the Railway but we have to say that we are most dissatisfied with the delay in payment and with the treatment meted out to us, and have decided not to despatch any more wagons till your proprietor has paid the bill before mentioned and also that for Rs. 5,000 sent you with our letter of the 27th ultimo.

If it is a matter of finance and your proprietor cannot at the present time further finance this order we are willing to cancel it, and sell the remaining wagons as soon as we can secure a buyer, refunding the cash already paid or as much of it as may be realised by sale of the material and wagons thereafter.

Please state by return which course you propose to take and if you want us to proceed with the order send us a cheque for Rs. 35,833."

This letter contained a demand not only for the Rs. 30,833 which the Defendants were fully entitled to make, but also a demand for the Rs. 5,000 which ... judgment, they were not entitled to make. The Defendants stated that if the Plaintiff wanted them to proceed with the order he was to send a cheque for Rs. 35,833. The Rs. 5,000 was not payable until all the wagons, the subject-matter of the contract, had been completed in accordance with the terms of the contract.

No answer was received to this letter, and the Defendants wrote again on the 11th April 1917 as follows :—

"11th April 1917."

"The Manager,
Morvi Railway,
Hill Buildings,
Morvi.

Re : Wagons.

As we have neither received a cheque for the money due to us nor any reply to our letter, dated the 5th of March, we find it necessary to address you again upon this matter and we desire to point out to you that by not paying our bills when they become due for payment you have broken the contract and we shall therefore take whatever action appears to us to be necessary for our own interests if we do not receive a satisfactory reply to this letter before the date specified below.

The wagons could be delivered as soon as we could obtain trucks from the Railway to carry them but we regret we cannot now permit another of your wagons to leave our Works until you pay us in full for the whole order. Your action has put us to very considerable expense and very great inconvenience and at the present time your wagons are occupying much valuable space in our Works. If we do not receive a satisfactory reply on or before April 20th we shall take whatever action appears to us to be necessary to prevent further loss to ourselves."

It is to be noted that in this letter the Defendants asserted that they would not permit another of the wagons to leave the Works until the Plaintiff paid the Defendants in full for the whole order. The reply to this was a telegram, dated 21st April 1917, as follows:—

"To Burn, Howrah.

Your letter though dated eleventh reached here yesterday matter referred to proprietor who now in Bombay.

Manager M. Ry."

On the 7th May 1917 the Defendants wrote:—

"7th May 1917."

"The Manager,
Morvi Railway, Hill Buildings,
Morvi.

We desire to call your special attention to our letter, dated the 11th ultimo, and to inform you that it is now imperative that we receive a satisfactory reply to this letter at once, otherwise we shall have no option but to settle the matter without further reference to you. Kindly favour us with a reply by return.

Yours faithfully,
Managing Agents."

The reply was to the effect that the Plaintiff had gone to a hill station for the hot weather, and that an answer would be sent when the Plaintiff's manager heard from him.

On the 4th July 1917, the Defendants' solicitors wrote:—

"4th July 1917."

"The Manager and Executive
Engineer, Morvi Railway, Hill Buildings, Morvi.

Our clients Messrs. Burn & Co., Ld. have instructed us to address you with reference to the contract for the purchase by your Railway of 50 goods wagons from them. The terms of the contract were:—Payment as to ⅓ with the order, ⅓ when the under-frame was wheeled and the balance on delivery. The first instalment was duly paid but the second instalment has not yet been paid, inspite of repeated demands, and inspite of the fact that our clients have actually delivered eight wagons. In the existing circumstances of the trade, it is obvious that our clients cannot keep the undelivered balance of the wagons locked up indefinitely and, as you have failed to carry out your part of the contract the only course now open to them is to dispose of the wagons elsewhere as best they can but before doing so they are prepared to give you the opportunity of purchasing these wagons outright by paying the total amount of the original contract price outstanding and we are accordingly instructed to give you notice, as we hereby do, that unless the full amount of the original contract price is paid to our clients or to us as their Agents within 10 days from the date hereof the undelivered wagons will be disposed of by our clients as they may think fit.

Yours faithfully,
(Sd.) Orr, Dignam & Co."

Having received no reply to the letter the Defendants' solicitors wrote again on the 18th July 1917 as follows:—

"The Manager and Executive
Engineer,
Morvi Railway,
Hill Buildings, P. O. Morvi.

Sir,

As neither our clients nor ourselves have received any reply to our letter to you of the 4th instant our clients have now taken steps to dispose of the undeli-vered wagons elsewhere and have made up an account showing the balance due to the Railway after deducting the costs of the wagons delivered from the deposit made to be Rs. 15,833. We enclose you herewith copy of this account together with our cheque for Rs. 15,833 and shall be obliged if you will let us have a formal receipt for this amount by return.

Yours faithfully,
Orr, Dignam & Co."

I should have thought that the Defendants' letters from the 5th March to the 4th July 1917 involved definite intimation that the Defendants were not prepared to carry out the contract according to the terms thereof. For in these letters they were making demands which were not justified by the terms of the contract and in the letter of the 4th July 1917 they stated that the only course then open to the Defendants was to dispose of the wagons elsewhere, but that before doing so they were willing to give the Plaintiff the opportunity of purchasing the wagons outright by paying the total amount of the contract price within 10 days, otherwise the wagons would be disposed of as the Defendants thought fit. This was obviously not in accordance with the terms of the contract.

The learned Advocate-General, however, for the Plaintiff argued that these letters were merely threats, and were not intended to put an end to the contract.

The terms of the letters seem to me to be plain and definite and I should not have been prepared to accept the learned Advocate-General's argument but for the fact that the Defendants themselves in para. 18 of the written statement stated that it was on or about the 18th July '17 that they put an end to the contract. [illegible]estion, therefore, which remains [illegible]se, is whether the Defendants were entitled to treat the contract as at an end on the 18th July 1917.

The learned Judge dealt with the case on the footing that one question only arose, viz., whether the provision that the second instalment of the price should be paid when the under-frames were put on the wheels was a provision as to which time was of the essence of the contract. He held, with some difficulty, that it was not; and he held further that the Defendants did not at any time give a sufficient or adequate notice to pay the second instalment within a reasonable time, so as to make time of the essence of the contract.

But for the conduct of the Defendants, I should have thought that with regard to the payment of the second instalment, time was of the essence of the contract.

The Defendants were under contract to build 50 wagons. In my judgment they were not bound to proceed with the work, after the wheels were attached to under-frames, until the Plaintiff paid the second instalment. They surely could not be expected to keep the wagons, partly built, standing in their Works, for an indefinite time, or for so long as the Plaintiff chose to keep them waiting for the second instalment. Having regard to the terms of the contract and the nature of the work to be done by the Defendants, in my opinion, primâ facie time would be of the essence of the contract.

The Defendants, however, for some reason known to themselves, did not treat it as of the essence of the contract.

They actually delivered eight wagons in February 1917 although the second instalment which had been demanded in October 1916 had not been paid, and although as far as could be seen in February 1917 there was no immediate prospect of the second instalment being paid.

In the face of such conduct, it seems to me impossible to hold that the Defendants regarded time as of the essence of the contract with respect to the second instalment.

I agree with the learned Judge's further decision that no sufficient or adequate notice was given to make time the essence of the contract, and with the reasons which he gave for such decision.

There remains, however, a further question, which, to my mind, is a more difficult one.

The learned Counsel for the Defendants contended that the Plaintiff's repeated failure to pay the second instalment inspite of the Defendants' demands, showed that the Plaintiff never intended to perform his part of the contract, and that consequently under the provisions of sec. 39 of the Contract Act, the Defendants were entitled to put an end to the contract as they did on the 18th July 1917.

The question is whether the Plaintiff had refused to perform his promise in its entirety within the meaning of the section. As stated in Freeth v. Burr (1): "The true question is whether the acts and conduct of the parties evince an intention no longer to be bound by the contract."

And as stated by Lord Selborne in Mersey Steel & Iron Coy. v. Naylor (2):

"You must look at the actual circumstances of the case in order to see whether the one party to the contract is relieved from its future performance by the conduct of the other; you must examine what that conduct is, so as to see whether it amounts to a renunciation, to an absolute refusal to perform the contract, such as would amount to a rescission if he had the power to rescind, and whether the other party may accept it as a reason for not performing his part."

(2) 9 A. C. 434 at p. 438 (1884).

The letter of the 22nd July 1917, written on behalf of the Plaintiff, in my judgment, is not inconsistent with the Plaintiff's intention to carry out his part of the contract. I read it as a complaint about the delay and a proposal to vary the provisions as to the payment of the second instalment. The letter, however, concluded with a protest against the Defendants' alleged right to put an end to the contract, and stated that if the Defendants disposed of the wagons they would do so at their risk and responsibility as to the consequences.

Although written on the 22nd July 1917, the writer apparently was not dealing with the Defendants' solicitors' letter of the 18th July 1917, for that letter is dealt with in a subsequent letter of the 24th July 1917 in which the Plaintiff's representative refused to accept the cheque for Rs. 15,833.

The market-price of the wagons had increased considerably; there was no suggestion that the Plaintiff was in any difficulty as regards finance; it was alleged that the Plaintiff required the wagons; and on the 22nd September 1917 the Plaintiff's solicitors tendered a cheque for the second instalment, no doubt with a view to this suit being brought.

It is true that the Plaintiff was suggesting that he was entitled to compensation for the Defendants' delay, but it is not made clear in any of the letters written on behalf of the Plaintiff that he was insisting on compensation being paid as a condition of his performance of the contract. Although there was great delay on the part of the Plaintiff in paying the second instalment, in my judgment, the conduct of the Plaintiff was not such as amounted to an absolute refusal to perform the contract. The Defendants were not, in my opinion, entitled to assume that the Plaintiff was not going to perform the contract, and consequently they were not entitled to put an end to the contract on the 18th July 1917.

The remaining question relates to the measure of damages.

The learned Counsel for the Defendants argued that the amount of damages awarded should be materially reduced. He urged that the Defendants had offered in April 1917 and again in the solicitors' letter of 4th July 1917 to let the Plaintiff have the wagons at the contract price provided he paid the total amount outstanding: that the Plaintiff should have accepted the offer, and that his damages should be limited to the amount of interest which he would have lost, by reason of his being obliged to pay the contract price at a date earlier than that provided by the contract, and reliance was placed on the case of Payzu, Ld. v. Saunders (3).

In my judgment the decision in that case is not applicable to the present case.

The offer, made in the letter of 4th July 1917, was by the terms thereof open to the Plaintiff for 10 days from that date: the Defendants' own case was that they did not put an end to the contract until the 18th July 1917.

The Defendants, having so pleaded, cannot now be allowed to say that the breach of the contract by them occurred at an earlier date, and the 18th July must be taken as the date when they definitely put an end to the contract. At that time the offer contained in the letter of 4th July 1917 was no longer open to the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff, it is true, was bound to take all reasonable steps to minimise the damages, but he was not bound to do so, until a breach of the contract had occurred. And having regard to the Defendants' pleading, to which I have already referred, it is not now open to them to say that the breach occurred before the 18th July 1917.

The learned Judge has found that after the 18th July 1917 the Defendants were no longer willing to let the Plaintiff have the wagons at the contract price on any terms.

In my opinion this finding by the learned Judge is correct having regard to the evidence in the case: the letter of the 26th July 1917 from the Defendants' solicitors is inconsistent with any other interpretation of the position after the 18th July 1917.

For these reasons, in my judgment, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—Under this contract, one-third of the price of the fifty railway wagons was to be paid with the order for their supply, one-third when the underframes were wheeled, and the remaining third on the receipt of the wagons. The official or formal order for the wagons was given either on the 7th February or on the 20th February 1915, when a cheque for Rs. 30,833 in payment of the first instalment was forwarded. In the course of the previous correspondence, the Defendants in their letter of 17th November 1914, had promised "delivery of the 50 wagons in six months from date of receipt of order."

The plans for the wagons were not finally approved till the 18th June 1915 when the Manager of the Railway telegraphed to the Defendants to "commence building of the wagons as per your original plans plus minor alterations suggested by our Loco-Superintendent." Meanwhile by letter, dated 28th April 1915, the Defendants had plainly intimated to the Morvi Railway "that our promised delivery cannot now be adhered to."

In October 1915 the Morvi Railway began complaining of delay in delivery and suggesting a right to compensation. The Defendants' letter of 8th November 1915 attributed the delay in delivery partly to the delay in the approval of the plans but mainly to causes arising out of the War.

There was further correspondence on the subject in May 1916, closing for the time with the Defendants' letter of 27th May 1916, in which they referred to their letter of 28th April 1915.

By letter dated 25th October 1916, the Defendants forwarded their bill for the second instalment of the price on the footing, as to which no question arose, that the under-frames had been wheeled. In answer, the Morvi Railway on the 19th November, again complained of the delay in delivery. "We fear," they concluded, "the payment of second instalment will remain locked up as the first and shall therefore be glad to know definitely when the wagons will be completed and despatched."

The Defendants replied on the 23rd November stating that the delay was entirely due to conditions brought about by the War and regretting that information could not be given when delivery would be made.

On the 14th December 1916, and the 25th January and 14th February 1917, the Defendants reminded the Morvi Railway by letter or telegram of their bill for the second instalment. They were told by telegram, dated 19th February, that the matter had been referred to the proprietor of the Railway, that is, the present Plaintiff.

On the 20th February 1917, the Defendants wrote advising the despatching of eight completed high-sided wagons, which were accepted (subject to certain minor objections dealt with by the Defendants in their letter of 27th June 1917) without reference to delay in delivery.

On the 27th February the Defendants again telegraphed about the non-payment of their October bill. By letter of the same date they submitted a further bill claiming payment of Rs. 5,000 as the proportionate amount of the third or last instalment due in respect of the eight wagons (at Rs. 1,875 each). They thus imparted into the discussion an element of difficulty inasmuch as under the contract the last instalment was not due till all the wagons had been delivered.

To the telegram of the 27th the Morvi Railway replied, as they had done on the 19th February, that the matter had been referred to the proprietor.

We then come to the Defendants' letters of the 5th March and 11th April, on which the discussion before us has largely turned. The letters have already been read and I will not read them again. I will only observe, in favour to some extent of the Defendants, that the offer contained in the second paragraph of their letter of 5th March was apparently made before the Defendants got into touch on the 23rd March with the Mysore State Railways to whom the remaining 42 wagons were ultimately sold at a price considerably higher than that due under the contract with the Morvi Railway.

To the letter of 11th April the Morvi Railway gave the reply, by this time stereotyped, that the matter had been referred to the proprietor, who was then in Bombay.

On the 7th May the Defendants wrote again: "It is now imperative," they said, "that we receive a satisfactory reply to this letter at once, otherwise we shall have no option but to settle the matter without further reference to you." To this the Morvi Railway answered that the proprietor had gone to a hill station and that the correspondence would be forwarded to him.

On the 4th July, the Defendants wrote through their solicitors, Messrs. Orr, Dignam & Co., that they were prepared to give the Morvi Railway "the opportunity of purchasing these wagons outright by paying the total amount of the original contract price outstanding." The solicitors concluded: "We are accordingly instructed to give you notice, as we hereby do, that unless the full amount of the original contract price is paid to our clients or to us as their agents within 10 days from the date hereof, the undelivered wagons will be disposed of by our clients as they may think fit."

No reply was received to this letter and on the 18th July the solicitors wrote enclosing a cheque for Rs. 15,833 the balance of the first instalment after deducting the price of the eight wagons and finally purporting to put an end to the contract.

Then came, first the long letter of the 22nd July written under the instructions of the proprietor by one of his officers, the letter of 24th July from the Morvi Railway returning the cheque for Rs. 15,833 and in reply to these two letters, the letter of the Defendants' solicitors, dated 26th July, stating that it was impossible for the Defendants to reconsider the matter. The Morvi Railway was subsequently advised to tender the second instalment. The tender, made by letter dated 22nd September, was refused, the goods having been meanwhile sold to the Mysore State Railways.

The sole point in the case is whether on the 18th July 1917, the Defendants were entitled to cancel the contract.

Now, as it seems to me, to ask whether the time fixed for the payment of the second instalment was in the circumstances of the essence of the contract, or whether the failure to pay the instalment when due went to the root of the contract, or whether the agreement of the Plaintiff to pay the instalment and the agreement of the Defendants to supply the wagons, were or were not interdependent agreements is to put the same question in different ways. The learned Judge, Rankin, J., who tried the suit, has found, as he says, with some difficulty that time was not of the essence. I agree with that conclusion which in my opinion is fortified by the consideration that the despatch of the eight wagons in February 1917 shows that the Defendants themselves did not treat the punctual payment of the second instalment as being of the essence of the contract.

Then, the learned Judge turned to the method of notice by which time, if not originally of the essence, might have been made of the essence. The position, he says, "was that if the Plaintiff did not pay promptly, the Defendants were entitled to give him a reasonable notice, fixing a time within which he must pay and warning him that unless he paid within that time they would rescind." Such notices are not expressly mentioned in sec. 55 of the Contract Act, but they are well known in relation to contracts between vendors and purchasers of land [Stickney v. Keeble (4)] and are no doubt equally available in relation to mercantile contracts. Under the Contract Act refusal by a party to comply with a reasonable notice would probably be regarded as refusal to perform his contract in its entirety within the meaning of sec. 39. But, however that may be, I agree again with the learned Judge that the Defendants never gave the Plaintiff a proper notice demanding payment simply of the second instalment within a limited time and making time of the essence. From the 5th March onwards they suggested or demanded payment of an amount exceeding that then due and were themselves in fault.

It has, however, been further contended before us that under sec. 39 of the Act, apart from the question of notice making time of the essence, the conduct of the Plaintiff was such as to evince an intention not to be bound by the contract and amounted to a refusal to perform his promise in its entirety. The learned Advocate-General appearing for the Plaintiff says that this contention was not advanced before the learned Judge, but as it is open on the issues and turns entirely on the correspondence on the record, I shall deal with it.

For the principle involved we have been referred to the case of Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor (2). I quite appreciate Mr. Pugh's argument that as an illustration of the principle this case must be treated with caution, because the facts there were of a very special character. The facts of the present case are doubtless very different. Nevertheless I am unable to say that the Plaintiff's conduct, however reprehensible his delay may have been, amounted in the words of Lord Selborne, L. C. "to a renunciation, to an absolute refusal to perform the contract, such as would amount to a rescission if he had the power to rescind," or in the words of Lord Blackburn, "to an absolute refusal to pay." Doubtless again there is a limiting point at which prolonged delay will amount to refusal. In my opinion, however, that point had not been reached at any time before the Defendants purported to cancel the contract on the 18th July.

As I apprehend, the Plaintiff considered, rightly or wrongly, that he was entitled to some compensation for delay in delivery. He wanted to parley but he did not want to break off the contract and he never made the payment of compensation a condition precedent to the payment of the second instalment. The Defendants, on the other hand, it may well be, were tired of dilatory methods resembling those of diplomacy rather than those ordinarily employed in business, and having found an opportunity to get rid of the remaining wagons at a profit, they took the risk of breaking off negotiations with the Plaintiff. As things had turned out, the contract with the Plaintiff was a losing one. The Defendants may well have been uncertain as to the legal consequences. They may have thought that they had the right to cancel. But, as I regard the matter, they accepted the risk of having to pay damages in preference to continuing an unsatisfactory contract, attended by troublesome correspondence.

The rise in the price of railway wagons between 1915 and 1917 makes it unlikely that the Plaintiff would not intend to fulfil the contract. Nor can such an intention be gathered from the Plaintiff's letter of 22nd July. The letter was written after the cancellation by the Defendants and is only relevant for the purpose of throwing light on the Plaintiff's intention. The letter does not import that the Plaintiff was absolutely refusing to carry out the contract.

The result is that I agree with the conclusion of the learned Judge that the Plaintiff is entitled to damages.

(2) 9 A. C. 434; at p. 438 (1884).

As to the quantum of damages, the learned Counsel for the Appellants has not satisfied me that the learned Judge is wrong in refusing to apply to the facts of the present case the principle of Payzu, Ld. v. Saunders (3).

Accordingly in my opinion the appeal should be dismissed.

These were appeals preferred on the 27th of April 1920 against the decree of S. C. Mallik, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 24th of January 1920, affirming the decree of Babu Hem Chandra Bose, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of that District, dated the 20th of September 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

These three appeals arise out of three suits for recovery of possession of certain chaukidari chakran lands after establishment of the Plaintiff's title thereto. It is alleged that the putni mahal known as lot Udaynarayanpore was originally held by one Ramnarayan Mookerjee under the zemindar, the Maharajadhiraj of Burdwan, and that the Plaintiff Srimati Nagendrabala Chowdhurani purchased on the 8th April 1905 the putni tenure in respect of the said lot Udaynarayanpore comprising 13 Mouzas at a sale held by a Receiver appointed by this Court on its Original Side in a suit for partition of certain joint properties among the representatives of the said Ramnarayan Mookerjee, and that thereafter the Plaintiff tried to obtain possession of certain chaukidari chakran lands comprised in the said Mouzas which had been resumed by the Government under Bengal Act, VI of 1870, and which had been settled during the years 1896 to 1899 with the zemindar, the Maharajadhiraj of Burdwan. The main defence of the zemindar was that the suits were barred by limitation. As regards the Defendant, Provash Chandra Chatterjee, who was made a party in one of the said three suits and who, it appeared, had taken settlement of some of the said lands from the Maharajadhiraj of Burdwan, it was alleged on the latter's behalf that he was merely the benamidar of the Plaintiff Nagendrabala Chowdhurani. The three suits referred to above were suits Nos. 29, 30 and 54 of 1916. Suit No. 29 in which Provash Chandra Chatterjee was a Defendant related to the lands of six Mouzas comprised in the said putni and the two other suits related to the lands of three other Mouzas. The learned Subordinate Judge decided the question of limitation in favour of the Plaintiff and the question of benami in favour of the Defendant Maharajadhiraj of Burdwan. Accordingly on those findings, the Subordinate Judge gave a decree to the Plaintiff in all the three suits declaring her title to the said chaukidari chakran lands and directing that she should get khas possession of the same except the lands settled with Provash Chandra Chatterjee who was found to be the benamidar of the Plaintiff.

As regards the question of limitation, the learned District Judge, agreeing with the learned Subordinate Judge held that Art. 144 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act was the article applicable in the circumstances of these cases, but while the Subordinate Judge held that the Defendant zemindar had not succeeded in establishing that he had held the lands adversely to the Plaintiff for more than 12 years before the institution of these suits on the ground that the zemindar had not within a period of over 12 years prior to the suit taken direct possession of the land, after the resumption thereof under the Chaukidari Act and the settlement of the same with him by the Collector, the learned District Judge was of opinion that time ran against the putnidar from the date of the settlement of the lands by Government with the zemindar.

On behalf of the Plaintiff-Appellant it has been argued before us that having regard to the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the cases of Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dasi Debi (1) and Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (2) respectively, there can arise no question now as to the right of the Plaintiff to the lands in question, nor can the recovery of possession of these lands by her be barred unless for more than 12 years prior to the dates of the institution of these suits, the possession of the zemindar had become adverse to the Plaintiff. This argument is no doubt correct; the real question is to ascertain when the possession of the zemindar in a case like this became adverse to the Plaintiff. Does the possession of the zemindar become adverse to the putnidar at the moment the lands are settled with the zemindar by the Government without more or does the possession of the zemindar become adverse only at the moment when some act is done by him indicative of a hostile attitude on his part towards the putnidar?

No doubt it has been held in the case of Runglal Mandal v. Kamola Ranjan Roy (3) that in cases of this description, time runs against the putnidar from the date of the settlement of the lands with the zemindar by the Government. That decision may be reconcilable with the facts of that case and with the pleadings therein; we think, however, having regard to the language of Art. 144 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, that, in each case, the Court must ascertain on the facts on record when the possession of the Defendant who is usually the zemindar, became adverse to the Plaintiff. The possession of the zemindar may become adverse to the putnidar in a variety of ways, e.g., when the lands are settled by the zemindar with tenants or when the putnidar after being invited to come and take the lands does nothing and the zemindar thereafter makes other arrangements whether for holding the lands in khas or for settling the same with ijaradars or the like. In each case, the facts, in our opinion, have got to be investigated having regard to the language of Art. 144 of the Limitation Act. In the cases before us, there is no finding by the lower Appellate Court as to when on the facts in these cases the possession of the zemindar became adverse to the Plaintiff and we are therefore of opinion that the matter should go back to the lower Appellate Court for clear and specific findings on that point in the cases out of which these appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 1032, 1137 and 1138 have arisen in respect of all the lands other than the lands settled with Provash Chandra Chatterjee. Either party may adduce further evidence upon the question of possession and such evidence may be taken by the lower Appellate Court itself or under its direction by the Court of first instance. Costs of the Appeals Nos. 1032, 1137 and 1138 will abide by the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the point indicated above.

(2) I. L. R. 48 Cal. 173; s. c. 23 C. W. N. 198 (1918).

SM. NAGENDRABALA CHOWDHURANI v. BEJOY CHAND MAHATAB BAHADUR.

The rule in question (No. 2254F published in the Gazette of India, dated the 10th August 1921) must be read with para. 63, cl. The material facts are set out in the Reference of the Taxing Officer, which was as follows :—

"In this case the Stamp Reporter reports that the court-fee is insufficient by Rs. 1-8. The appeal arises out of a proceeding under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under sec. 105 (3) of that Act, every application under sub-sec. (1) or sub-sec. (3), shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Court Fees Act, 1870, bear such stamp as the Government of India may, from time to time, prescribe by notification in the Gazette of India. It appears that in the notification No. 2254F published in the Gazette of India, dated 10th August 1921, Pt. I, p. 1253, which superseded a previous notification No. 322 S. R., dated 19th January 1899, it was provided that a stamp of 8 as. should be paid for each tenant making, joining or joined in the application. As regards the application in question, four tenants have been joined. The vakil for the Appellants submits that these four tenants are tenants of one tenancy. Whether this be so or not, it seems to me that inasmuch as the rule framed by Government requires a stamp of 8 as. for each tenant, it is still necessary, on a literal construction of the rule framed by Government, for the vakil to put in deficit court-fee of Rs. 1-8. As, however, this is a matter of general importance, I submit the case to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice under sec. 5 of the Court Fees Act."

The matter was laid before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mookerjee by order of the Hon'ble Chief Justice.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta for the Appellants.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Surendra Nath Guha for the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MOOKERJEE, J.—The question which has been referred for decision under sec. 5 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, relates to the true construction of a rule framed by the Governor-General in Council with reference to sec. 105, sub-sec. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. The rule directs that an application made under the section for a settlement of rent, during the preparation of a record-of-rights, in the Presidency of Bengal, under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, shall bear a stamp of eight annas for each tenant making or joining or joined in the application. The Stamp Reporter has held that if the application relates to a single tenancy, which is held by a number of joint tenants, a stamp of eight annas must be levied in respect of each of such joint tenants. This novel interpretation of a rule which has been in existence for a quarter of a century is, in my opinion, clearly erroneous.

The rule in question must be read with para. 63, cl. (4) of the rules framed by the Governor-General in Council on the 7th December 1914. That rule is in these terms:—"With the consent of the Revenue Officer, any number of tenants occupying land under the same landlord, in the same village, may make a joint application for the settlement of rent, or may be joined as Defendants in the same proceeding or a similar application by the landlord, provided that, if at any time it appears to the Revenue Officer that the question between any two of the parties, of whom one is so joined with others, cannot conveniently be so jointly tried, he may order a separate trial to be held of that question, or he may pass such orders, in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure, for the joint or separate disposal of the application, as he may think fit."

This rule leaves no room for controversy that the case contemplated is that of joinder of matters relating to distinct tenancies in the same application; otherwise, no special permission would have been necessary, because if the application relates to one tenancy, which is held by a number of joint tenants, all the joint tenants would be necessary parties to the application. The history of this matter is set out in the judgment of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Upadhya Thakur v. Persidh Singh (1). The rule for the levying of stamp duty which I have previously mentioned was framed with a view to modify the effect of the Full Bench decision. In my opinion, the only construction which can be legitimately put upon the rule is that a stamp of eight annas is to be levied in respect of each tenancy, not in respect of each tenant who may be one of a group of tenants holding a particular tenancy. The conclusion follows that adequate court-fees have been paid on the memorandum of appeal which must be registered accordingly.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Code of Criminal Procedure, dated the 25th November 1922, from the Additional Sessions Judge of Sylhet (Mr. P. N. Roy Chowdhury), recommending that the order of Moulavi Md. Choudhuri, Extra Assistant Commissioner of Karimganj, dated the 30th August 1922, convicting the accused under sec. 342 of the Indian Penal Code and sentencing them each to pay a fine of rupees forty (Rs. 40) or, in default, one month's rigorous imprisonment, may be set aside for reasons set forth in the Letter of Reference.

The facts will fully appear from the Letter of Reference which was as follows :—

"On the evening of 7th Baisakh last while complainant Hamid Ali was passing by the Local Board road by the front of Chatradhari's house he was called there. He refused. The accused Sri Kissen and Gonesh Sonar with two others thereupon came up and seized and carried him to Chatradhari's house by force where he was horse-whipped and kicked by Chatradhari causing injuries. Complainant was, under Chatradhari's order, tied in the waist with a rope and kept confined in his bunglow for the whole night. On the following day at noon he was released by Udoy Chand Sarpanch and with Arif Choukidar he went to Patharkandi Police Station and lodged ezahar. The police, after enquiry, submitted charge-sheet and the Petitioners with two others were convicted for offence under sec. 342, I. P. C. and each sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 40, in default one month's rigorous imprisonment.

The conviction and sentence by the trial Court have become vitiated and liable to be set aside inasmuch as requirements of sec. 342, Cr. P. C. have not been complied with. The trial Court after recording the deposition of prosecution witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 recorded the statements of the accused persons on 12th July 1922. Prosecution witnesses Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 were examined on the 27th July 1922 and charge framed on that date; but since then no further statements of the accused persons were recorded. It has been repeatedly ruled by the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court that this omission is an irregularity which cannot be cured by sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is contrary to the provisions of sec. 342, Cr. P. C. and according to the recent ruling of the Calcutta High Court in revision case No. 569 of 1922 (Sylhet), it has been clearly laid down by Hon'ble Mr. Justice Walmsley and Justice Ghosh on the 31st of August last that all the proceedings after the statements of the accused persons had been recorded were vitiated in law and the case came on remand to be taken up after the examination-in-chief of these witnesses have been over. [The cases of Mitrajit Singh v. King-Emperor (1) and Kishan Lal v. Emperor (2) are also to the point.]

The provisions of sec. 342, Cr. P. C., are mandatory. The explanation of the trial Court that "the accused when examined made . . . . definite statements" cannot alter the plain words of the law [Jyotish Chandra v. Emperor (3) and Queen v. Issur Raut (4)]. This is an error in law which prejudiced the accused persons in the trial.

I therefore consider that the convictions and sentences of the Petitioners cannot stand and should be set aside."

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We have no alternative but to accept this Reference in view of the recent rulings of this Court.

The finding and sentence must therefore be set aside and the trial resumed from the point where the Court examined the accused person after the examination of the prosecution witnesses was concluded. We would impress on the learned Magistrates the necessity for a strict observation of the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and where the terms of the Code are perfectly clear there is no excuse whatever for a deliberate disregard of them.

and the finding and sentence must therefore be set aside.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Code of Criminal Procedure, dated the 21st November 1922, from the Additional Sessions Judge of Sylhet (Mr. P. N. Roy Chowdhry), recommending that the order of Babu Suresh Chandra Das, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sunamganj, dated the 8th August 1922, convicting the accused under sec. 147, I. P. C. and sentencing them each to pay a fine of Rs. 25, or, in default, to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months each, may be set aside for the reasons set forth in his Letter of Reference.

The facts will fully appear from the Letter of Reference which was as follows :—

"On 4th February 1921 the complainant Haro Nath Malo went to fish in Sonakani Fishery. At that time the accused and some other people of Gouripur and Bhatipara assembled near the fishery and forbade him to fish. As the complainant did not listen, the accused broke down his houses with the help of an elephant and on his opposition assaulted him and looted his property. The case was reported by the police as one of mistake of law. It ultimately came to the trial Court and the three Petitioners were summoned under sec. 147, I. P. C. and they have been convicted and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 25 each, or, in default, rigorous imprisonment for three months each.

The conviction and sentence of the trial Court has become vitiated and liable to be set aside inasmuch as requirements of sec. 342, Cr. P. Code and of sec. 360, Cr. P. C. have not been complied with. The trial Court after recording the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses on 28th April 1922 framed charge and on the same date recorded the statements of the accused persons. These witnesses have been cross-examined on 20th May 1922 but since then no further statements of the accused persons have been recorded. It has been repeatedly ruled by Hon'ble High Courts that, this omission is not an irregularity which can be cured by sec. 537 of the Code. It is contrary to the provisions of sec. 342, Cr. P. C. and according to recent ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Revision Case No. 569 of 1922 (Sylhet), it has been clearly laid down by Hon'ble Justice Walmsley and Justice Ghosh on 31st August last that all the proceedings after the statements of the accused have been recorded were vitiated in law and the case came on remand to be taken up after the examination-in-chief of these witnesses have been over. [The cases of Mitrajit Singh v. King-Emperor (1) and Kishan Lal v. Emperor (2) are also to the point.]

The trial in the lower Court also seems to have been vitiated inasmuch as requirements of sec. 360, Cr. P. C. have not been complied with with respect to any of the witnesses. In the explanation submitted by the Magistrate, the Magistrate seems to say that provisions of sec. 342, Cr. P. C. have not been complied with, but then what has been done in this case has been sufficient compliance with sec. 360, Cr. P. C. It seems from a slip that the trial Court referred the matter for information to his peskar and the peskar made a report to the following effect that 'it is not the practice to read out the depositions in all cases except sessions triable cases' and after some correspondence the trial Court admitted that peskar's report was correct In fact there is no certificate appended to the depositions of any witnesses showing that the requirements of sec. 360, Cr. P. C. have been complied with. This is an error in law which prejudiced the accused persons in the trial and I consider that the provisions of both the secs. 342 and 360, Cr. P. C. are mandatory and no practice to the contrary can alter the plain words of the law [Jyotish Chandra v. Emperor (3) and Queen v. Issur Raut (4)].

The trial also seems to be bad in law inasmuch as the occurrence having taken place on 4th February 1921 the charge has been framed showing that the occurrence took place on 22nd February 1921.

I therefore consider that the conviction and sentence cannot stand for these defects and it should be set aside."

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We must accept the Reference for the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge. The omission to comply with the provisions of secs. 342 and 360, Cr. P. C. is an illegality which is not curable by the provisions of sec. 537. The finding and sentence must therefore be set aside. In the circumstances of the case we do not think any retrial is called for and the three accused persons, Ala Box, Shaik Bolai and Sonai Mia Chowdhury are therefore acquitted.

NARAYAN DAS AURORA, since deceased, and ors., Respondents.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts 134, 142, 144—Suit by mutwalli to recover wakf property from mortgagee, from previous mutwalli—Wakf partially containing provision for settlor's family—Property whether wholly dedicated or only charged with trusts.

Art. 134 of the 1st Schedule of the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit brought by a mutwalli of a mosque to recover wakf property from persons in possession thereof under mortgages executed by his predecessor in office.

Quære :—If Art. 142 or 144 applies to such a suit.

The property in respect of which a valid wakf is created by the settlor is not merely charged with the several trusts he may declare while remaining his property and in his hands. It becomes God's property, and as such is inalienable except for the purposes of the wakf; and this is so even where there is in the wakfnama a provision intended to benefit the family of the settlor, as there may be without prejudice to the validity of the wakf if such provision is not the preponderating feature of the settlement.

of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 26th March 1920, which reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah, dated the 5th December 1918 and made in Suit No. 1 of 1918.

The suit was brought by the mutwalli of a wakf to recover possession of the lands described in the plaint which had passed into the possession of the Defendant under a decree obtained on a mortgage executed by a previous mutwalli. It was common ground that the mortgage was not executed for the purposes of the wakf. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree as prayed, but the suit was dismissed on appeal by the High Court as barred by limitation. The Plaintiff preferred the present appeal.

On the 5th February 1894, one Abdur Rahim executed and had registered a deed whereby he made a wakf of the property in question, constituting himself the first mutwalli and providing that in the events which happened his sister Naziran-nessa Bibi should succeed him as such. He began and on his death his said sister as mutwalli continued the administration of the proceeds of the land for the purposes of the wakf. But on the 7th February 1899 she and her surviving brother mortgaged the property by way of conditional sale to one Kedar Nath for purposes unconnected with the wakf. On the death of the mortgagee which took place soon afterwards, litigation arose as to who was entitled to his property. Ultimately Sheo Prasad was found to be entitled and in 1904 he brought a suit on the mortgage. On the 23rd January 1905 he obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure and possession as prayed, and a final decree was passed in January 1906. Meanwhile, on the 4th February 1905 Sheo Prasad executed an assignment of the mortgage to the father of Narayan Das, the present first Respondent, to whom formal possession was delivered by the Court in March 1906. The first Respondent then endeavoured to collect rents from the tenants on the land and was met by opposition. Soon afterwards persons interested in the wakf, having procured the sanction of the Advocate-General, brought a suit under Civil Procedure Code, sec. 92, in the Court of the District Judge of Hooghly, for the removal of Nazirannessa Bibi from her office and for the appointment of a new mutwalli. The said suit resulted in a decree appointing the Appellant as mutwalli in her place.

On the 2nd May 1913, the Appellant instituted the suit which gave rise to this appeal praying for the relief stated above in para. 2, joining as Defendants besides the first Respondent Nazirannessa Bibi and her brother and others.

The said suit was defended by the present first Respondent only. He raised numerous pleas as to the validity of the wakf deed and the legality of the Plaintiff's appointment, etc., which were overruled, and also contended that the suit was barred by limitation.

The suit having come on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge he delivered judgment therein on the 3rd December 1918, and holding that the suit was not barred by limitation passed a decree as prayed by the Plaintiff. The argument as to limitation before the Subordinate Judge was founded on Art. 134 of the Limitation Act, 1908. In dealing with this argument the learned Judge analyses the evidence as to the attempts of Sheo Prasad, the first Respondent, to secure possession, and he decided "to accept the evidence on the Plaintiff's side that the mortgagee did not enter into possession and that, at any rate, Nazirannessa had been in possession within twelve years of this suit which was instituted in May 1913." In view of the case, he thought the suit was not barred under Art. 134 of the Limitation Act and he held that this suit was within time. The findings on the other issues were likewise in favour of the Plaintiff.

Against the said decree an appeal was preferred by the present first Respondent and the same having come on for hearing judgment was delivered on the 26th March 1920 in pursuance of which a decree was passed allowing the appeal and dismissing the suit with costs.

The leading judgment was delivered by Mr. Justice Richardson who held that the suit was barred by limitation under Art. 134 being of opinion on the authorities cited by him that that article was applicable to the case and that the twelve years' period thereunder was to be computed from the date of the mortgage. But he concurred in the Subordinate Judge's finding as to possession quoted above, as to which he said :—

"Before concluding I ought to add that if it be relevant to consider at what point of time Kedar Nath or any person claiming under or through him first obtained possession, I see no good ground for differing on that issue of fact from the conclusion arrived at by the trial Court. There is no satisfactory evidence that either Kedar Nath or any successor of his entered into possession before possession was delivered by the Court to the assignee of the mortgage decree in March 1906. It is said that the probabilities are that Kedar Nath took possession under an instrument which entitled him to possession and purported to give him possession. But Kedar Nath died. His immediate successor was compelled to take legal proceedings to establish his title as such after which he foreclosed the mortgage by suit. As I have said I do not feel justified in differing from the Subordinate Judge's findings. That being so, the suit was brought within twelve years of the date on which possession was taken by the mortgagee from the trustee."

The other learned Judge, Mr. Justice Syed Shamsul Huda, differed on the last-mentioned question. He observed that there was no question of any khas possession being delivered to the mortgagee. The question of possession resolved itself into a question as to who was in receipt of the rents and profits. He did not, however, discuss the evidence bearing on this question, but said he considered the burden of proof was on the Plaintiff to negative the prescriptive title which the Defendants set up and that this burden had not been discharged.

Hence this appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant.—The wakf property was mortgaged by a former mutwalli in 1899 and the mortgagee entered into possession in 1906.

The Appellant, the present mutwalli, in 1913 filed this suit to recover the properties. The High Court has held that the suit is barred by limitation under Art. 134 of the Limitation Act.

That finding is wrong in view of the later decision of this Board in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (1), which decided that a transfer by a mutwalli does not fall within Art. 134.

The trial Judge and Richardson, J. in the High Court are agreed that the late mutwalli was in possession within 12 years of the suit, and that finding is supported by the evidence. Huda, J. in High Court held that the onus was on the Appellant to prove that the suit was within time, but the onus is really on the Defendant to prove that he had been in possession adversely. Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (3) and Krishnanrav v. Peringati Kunharankutty (4).

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.—The Subordinate Judge found the issue of possession a necessary one under Art. 134 and decided it in the Appellant's favour.

Richardson, J. found the issue as to possession was immaterial.

It is admitted that Art. 134 cannot apply. The finding of Huda, J. on the issue of possession was that the onus lay on the Appellant.

The contention that in lieu of Art. 134 Art. 144 must apply is erroneous. The article applicable is Art. 142 and under that article the onus is on the Appellant. This was an ordinary suit in ejectment. The dedication was not a valid wakf. Part of it was admittedly wakf but the deed contained also secular interests of the mortgagor which the mortgagee is entitled to hold charged. The property is only charged with certain trusts in favour of the deity, the remainder being still for the benefit of the family and therefore invalid.

Mutu Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (5).

In considering whether the settlement was charitable or not a determining factor is the consideration that no trusts were declared during the settlor's own life-time.

Md. Munawar Ali v. Razia Bibi (6) and Md. Ahsanulla Chowdhury v. Amarchand Kundu (7).

The secular interests are severable from the religious and they at any rate are subject to a charge.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., in reply.—The test is, was the dedication in substance charitable or not.

In Mutu Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (5), the dedication was held to be charitable though in substance it only comprised one-third of the property.

The wakf is not severable; it is either wholly good or wholly bad.

All that the Appellant must show is possession of part of the property within 12 years of suit and that is established by the evidence.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SUMNER.—This was a suit brought by the mutwalli of a mosque to recover possession of property, alleged to have been settled as a valid wakf, from the Defendants, whose title arose under incumbrances created by his predecessors in that office.

The principal issue tried in India was whether or not the claim was statute-barred, and, relying on Art. 134 of the first Schedule of Act No. IX of 1908, the High Court gave judgment in favour of the Defendants. This was before the decision of their Lordships' Board in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (1), which held that Art. 134 does not apply to a wakf, and accordingly their conclusion is admitted to be no longer sustainable. There has further been much discussion on the present appeal whether the case is governed by Art. 142 or by Art. 144, since Art. 134 is inapplicable; but again it is common ground that, if the Plaintiff's evidence established that his predecessor in office remained in possession of the property in question until after the year 1901, then his claim is not statute-barred. As to this, oral evidence, relating to the receipt of the rents and profits, was called on both sides. The learned trial Judge, after criticising adversely the evidence given on this point by the Defendants' witnesses, accepted the Plaintiff's case, and held that the mortgagors had remained in possession until less than twelve years before the present suit was begun. With this finding of fact one of the learned Judges in the High Court, Richardson, J., agreed. His colleague Syed Shamsul Huda, J., dissenting, drew attention to the burden of proof, which he said rested on the Plaintiff and had not been discharged, the probabilities being in favour of the Defendants. If the learned Judge meant, as his reference to the onus of proof seems to indicate, that the Plaintiff had given no evidence, that the mortgagee had not received possession at the time when the mortgage was executed and in accordance with its terms, he overlooked the fact that several of his witnesses gave positive and precise evidence on the subject, and so far as the burden of proof goes, there was enough to call for an answer. If, on the other hand, as his allusion to the probabilities of the case seems to show, he only meant that, weighing the Plaintiff's evidence against that of the Defendants', he rejected the former and accepted the latter, his opinion is not fortified by any detailed examination or comparison of the evidence, which the respective witnesses gave. Their Lordships do not think that under these circumstances the opinion of Syed Shamsul Huda, J., ought to prevail against the concurrent opinions of Richardson, J. and of the learned trial Judge; nor does their own examination of the evidence, which need not be set out in detail, lead them to discredit the Plaintiff's case in this respect.

The affirmation of the finding that the mortgagors retained possession down to a date, which defeats the plea of the Statute of Limitations, would dispose of this appeal, but for the following point. The original settlement was undoubtedly a valid creation of a wakf, for the provision intended to benefit the family of the settlor was not the preponderating feature of the settlement, nor was the provision made for the perpetuation of religious ceremonies and charitable gifts by any means, illusory or unsubstantial; but, equally undoubtedly, the two provisions—that for the upkeep of the mosque and celebration of worship there on the one hand, and that for the benefit of the settlor's family on the other—are, as a matter of drafting, separate and severable dispositions. Indeed, it could not have been otherwise. The new contention for the Respondents was that a mortgagee, who had parted with his money to the persons, members of the Plaintiff's and of the settlor's family, who were then in the position of mutwalli, ought not to lose his money altogether, and that too at the Plaintiff's instance, but was at least entitled to have a charge declared in his favour over the portion of the property, which was settled for the benefit of the settlor's family.

This point was not taken below, or even in the Respondents' case, unless it can be brought within the third reason, "because the trusts created were not those of a valid wakf—at any rate as to the half of the property settled on the founder's heirs." Their Lordships would not in any event have declared that the Respondents were entitled to the suggested charge, for they are by no means sure that all necessary parties are before them or that all necessary matters have been proved, and the case would have to be remitted to India, even if the contention be sound.

In the present case there is a dedication, which has already taken effect, and it is so substantial that one half of the net income has to be devoted to specified pious purposes. It is impossible to say that this gift is only a veil to cover arrangements for the aggrandisement of the settlor's family and a device to make the property inalienable. There is nothing illusory about it. The most that can be said is that the provision for the settlor's family is considerable, for the mere provision itself is clearly permissible, as is the provision that the settlor's heirs shall be the mutwallis of the wakf in their order. In delivering the judgment of their Lordships' Board in Mujibunissa v. Abdul Rahim (2), Lord Robertson says, at p. 23: "It will be so" (that is, it will be a valid deed of wakf) "if the effect of the deed is to give the property in substance to charitable uses. It will not be so, if the effect is to give the property in substance to the testator's family." In view of the fact that this deed has been taken as creating a valid wakf in both Courts in India, and that effect has been given to it as creating a valid wakf in separate proceedings by the decree appointing the Appellant to be mutwalli, their Lordships think it needless to discuss further the genuine character of the wakf. Its dominating purpose is to make adequate provision for the pious uses mentioned.

In Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (1), it was explained that the idea conveyed by the word "trust" is foreign to the religious conception involved in the word wakf:—

"'When once it is declared that a particular property is wakf or any such expression is used as implies wakf . . . . the right of the wakif is extinguished and the ownership is transferred to the Almighty,' says Mr. Ameer Ali in delivering judgment. 'The manager of the wakf is the mutwalli, the governor, superintendent, or curator.' In the case of khankhas the head is called a sajjadanishin. 'But neither the sajjadanishin nor the mutwalli has any right in the property belonging to the wakf; the property is not vested in him, and he is not a trustee in the technical sense. . . . The wakfnama does not transfer property to trustees. . . .' Under the Mohamedan Law the moment a wakf is created all rights of property pass out of the wakif and vest in God Almighty. 'The curator, whether called mutwalli or sajjadanishin, or by any other name, is merely a manager.'"

The principle of the Respondents' contention, accordingly, appears to their Lordships to be fallacious. The property, in respect of which a wakf is created by the settlor, is not merely charged with such several trusts as he may declare, while remaining his property and in his hands. It is in very deed "God's acre," and this is the basis of the settled rule that such property as is held in wakf is inalienable, except for the purposes of the wakf. A similar view forms the basis of the inalienability of a Hindu math and, if the settlor declares himself, as he is entitled to do, to be the first mutwalli or the first shebait, that does not affect the fundamental principle, that the whole property is considered as having passed from him for the purposes which he has declared, and not merely such portion of it as will suffice to produce the part of the income which he has expressly dedicated to pious and charitable uses. From this it follows that where an attempt is made to grant a mortgage for purposes foreign to the necessary purposes of the wakf, which is therefore as such unsustainable, the whole mortgage fails. It cannot, for purposes of enforcement, be severed into two distinct charges, one declared for pious uses on one part of the property, and another and separate charge declared on another part for the uses of the mortgagor only. The property itself is not to be regarded as severable and chargeable according to the measure of the interest, which the settlor's family may have in the rents and profits of the whole. The contention now advanced is inconsistent with the character of a wakf, as fully explained in the above-mentioned and many other decisions of their Lordships' Board. Their Lordships are of opinion that, for an advance of money, otherwise than to satisfy the legitimate needs and purposes of the wakf, no part of the property held in wakf is chargeable either by the settlor or by the Court. In such a case any claim by the person who advances the money must be in the nature of a claim in personam, and cannot be secured by holding liable the wakf property itself. For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and the judgment of the High Court set aside and that of the trial Judge restored with costs here and below.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 151 OF 1923.

SANDERSON, C. J. RICHARDSON, J. 1923, 12, November.

S. N. HALDER, Appellant, v. S. N. MALLIK and anr., Respondents.

Elections to the Bengal Legislative Council—Returning officer's decision as to the validity of nomination papers of candidates—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 45, Court's jurisdiction under, to interfere with such decision—Provisos (d), (e) and (h) to sec. 45 considered—Bengal Electoral Rules and Regulations—R. 31, if takes away Civil Court's power to question elections.

The nomination paper of S. H., a candidate for election to the Bengal Legislative Council, was rejected by the Returning Officer on the ground, that not being dated, it was not in the form prescribed in Sch. III of Bengal Electoral Rules and Regulations. The nomination paper of S. M., the rival candidate, was accepted by the Returning Officer, overruling S. H.'s objection that S. M., being a whole-time Government servant, was not eligible for election. S. H. applied under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act to the High Court for an order requiring the Returning Officer to accept his nomination paper and reject S. M.'s nomination paper. The High Court refused the application and, S. H. appealed. Pending the appeal, the Returning Officer declared S. M. to be duly elected under r. 14 (2) of the Bengal Electoral Rules:

S. N. HALDER v. S. N. MALLIK.

Held by the Court of Appeal—That the jurisdiction which is given to the High Court under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act is a discretionary jurisdiction and that such jurisdiction is limited by the provisos (d), (e) and (h).

Held also—That it had no jurisdiction to interfere in the present case inasmuch as (1) the Court having no power to set aside S. M.'s election, any remedy which it might give under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act would be incomplete; (2) the Appellant had a specific and adequate legal remedy by an election petition; and (3) r. 31 of the Bengal Electoral Rules and Regulations provides that "no election shall be called in question except by an election petition in accordance with the provisions of this part."

This was an appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Page, dated the 2nd November 1923, passed in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case were as follows:— On the 8th of October 1923, the Appellant Mr. S. N. Halder presented three nomination papers to the Returning Officer of the Calcutta South Non-Mahomedan Constituency purporting to be in the form prescribed in Sch. III of the Bengal Electoral Rules. The Appellant in the presence of the Returning Officer signed the declaration at the foot of the nomination paper and the Returning Officer in the presence of Mr. Halder on the same day filled in and signed the certificate of delivery. On the 11th of October, being the date fixed for the scrutiny of the nomination papers, objection was made on behalf of the rival candidate, Mr. S. N. Mallik, to Mr. Halder's nomination paper on the ground that the date had not been inserted by Mr. Halder in the declaration. Objection was also taken by Mr. Halder to Mr. Mallik's nomination paper on the ground that Mr. Mallik being the Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta, was a whole-time Government servant and was therefore ineligible for election to the Council. The Returning Officer rejected Mr. Halder's nomination paper on the grounds stated below.

"The Papers Nos. 4, 5, 6, are undated and therefore have not been completed in the form prescribed in Sch. III, vide r. 2 (3), Bengal Electoral Rules. This is admittedly a mere irregularity of a technical nature. They were in fact signed by the candidate in my presence on the 8th October 1923. But I interpret Rules strictly as is intended I think, vide Reg. XXI (iii)."

The Returning Officer overruled Mr. Halder's objection to Mr. Mallik's nomination paper and gave his reasons as follows: "Mr. Halder objects that Mr. Mallik is a whole-time Government servant. But this point does not come under Reg. XXI and is outside my province." On the 15th of October, the Appellant obtained a rule nisi in the following terms:—

"It is ordered that the said Surendra Nath Mallik and the said Returning Officer do this day forthwith show cause before this Court why the said Returning Officer should not accept the nomination paper of the said Surendra Nath Halder and include the name of the said Surendra Nath Halder in the list of valid nomination papers he is preparing and why he should not reject the nomination paper of the said Surendra Nath Mallik and exclude his name from the list of valid nominations . . . ." On the same day the hearing of the rule was adjourned until the 29th of October and an injunction was granted restraining the persons concerned from "reporting the result of the election . . . . to the Secretary to the Council or from taking any further steps in the matter of election of the said (South Non-Mahommedan) Constituency." On the 2nd of November, the rule nisi was heard by Mr. Justice Page who discharged the same as also the injunction. Immediately after judgment was given, the Returning Officer notified the Secretary to the Bengal Legislative Council that he had declared Mr. S. N. Mallik to be duly elected to the Council. Mr. Halder appealed and applied for an injunction pending appeal which was refused. A notice appeared in the Calcutta Gazette under date the 5th of November, relevant portions of which are as follows: It is hereby notified in pursuance of r. 14 (9) of the rules . . . . . that Mr. Surendra Nath Mallik has been declared elected under r. 11 (2) of the aforesaid rules . . . . to be a member of the Bengal Legislative Council."

Mr. S. C. Roy (with him Mr. D. N. Sen) for the Appellant.—The Court may make an order restoring the Appellant to his original position and he can execute it as a decree under sec. 48 of the Act.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Page.

I need not deal with the first rule which was issued, because, as I understand, that was discharged by my learned brother Mr. Justice Cuming, who thereupon issued another rule. That rule was issued on the 15th of October 1923. The rule called upon Mr. S. N. Mallik and the Returning Officer to show cause why the Returning Officer should not accept the nomination paper of Surendra Nath Halder and include the name of the said Surendra Nath Halder in the list of valid nominations which he was preparing and why he should not reject the nomination paper of the said S. N. Mallik and exclude his name from the list of valid nominations and why they should not pay to the said Surendra Nath Halder his costs.

Mr. Justice Cuming, as we have been informed, made an ad interim injunction restraining the Returning Officer from preparing the list or from taking any further steps in the election.

The rule was heard by my learned brother Mr. Justice Page on the 29th of October. He reserved judgment and continued the ad interim injunction until the date of delivery of his judgment. On the 2nd of November by his judgment, he discharged the rule and set aside the ad interim injunction.

This is an appeal from that judgment. The facts which it is necessary for me to state for the purpose of my judgment are as follows: These two gentlemen Mr. S. N. Halder and Mr. S. N. Mallik desired to be candidates for a particular seat in the election for the Bengal Legislative Council. Mr. Halder presented his nomination paper on the 8th of October 1923. The nomination paper contains a paragraph which is to be filled in by the Returning Officer as follows: "This nomination paper was delivered to me in my office at (date and hour. . . . .)." The Returning Officer filled in the date and hour and signed his own name. In the presence of the Returning Officer Mr. Halder signed what is called "declaration by candidate" which runs as follows: "I hereby declare that I agree to this nomination." Mr. Halder signed that declaration on the 8th of October last in the presence of the Returning Officer. He did not fill in the date upon which he signed the declaration. When the time came for investigating the validity of the nomination papers, namely, on the 11th of October 1923, a point was taken by or on behalf of Mr. Mallik that the nomination paper of Mr. Halder was not valid because the declaration signed by Mr. Halder did not bear a date, though, as I have said, he signed it on the 8th October actually in the presence of the Returning Officer. The Returning Officer decided that the ground that the declaration of Mr. Halder did not bear a date, was sufficient to invalidate the nomination paper and he rejected the nomination paper of Mr. Halder.

It is not necessary for me to express any opinion as to whether the Returning Officer's decision on this point was a correct decision or not and I express no opinion in respect thereof. The point has not been argued before us and it would not be right for me in any shape or form to express an opinion thereon.

Mr. Halder apparently took an objection to Mr. Mallik's nomination paper. The argument in respect of that objection has not been elaborated in this Court but I understand that the ground was that Mr. Mallik was a Government official. The Returning Officer, as I have been informed, came to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to decide that question and accepted Mr. Mallik's nomination paper.

After the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Page was delivered on the 2nd of November by which, as I have already stated, he discharged the rule and dissolved the injunction, the Returning Officer under r. 14 (2) of the Bengal Electoral Rules declared Mr. Mallik to be elected. R. 14 (2) runs as follows: "If the number of such candidates is equal to the number of vacancies, all such candidates shall be declared to be duly elected." The result of the Returning Officer's rejecting Mr. Halder's nomination paper and accepting Mr. Mallik's nomination paper was that there was one vacancy and one candidate; and therefore on the 2nd November, after Mr. Justice Page's judgment had been delivered, he declared Mr. Mallik to be elected. Under date the 5th November this notice appears in the Gazette: "It is hereby notified in pursuance of r. 14 (9) of the rules for the election and nomination of members to the Bengal Legislative Council that Mr. Surendra Nath Mallik has been declared under r. 14 (2) of the aforesaid rules to have been duly elected by the Calcutta South (Non-Mahommedan) Constituency to be a member of the Bengal Legislative Council."

These are the facts which, in my judgment, it is necessary for me to state.

In my judgment this appeal must be dismissed on the following grounds:—

The application, upon which the rule was founded, was made under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. It is not necessary for me to refer at any length to the provisions of that section as they are all well known and there have been many decisions in this Court in respect thereof. It is sufficient for me to say, in the first place, that the jurisdiction which is given to the Court under that section is a discretionary jurisdiction: and, in the second place, that jurisdiction is limited by the provisos and exemptions which are set out in the section. I desire to refer to three of these, viz., (d), (e) and (h). The section provides that the Court may "make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forborne . . . . by any person holding a public office . . . . . provided (d) that the applicant has no other specific

(h) "Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise any High Court to make any order which is otherwise expressly excluded by any law for the time being in force." It has been admitted by the learned Counsel, who argued this case, that it will be open to his client to present an election petition based upon the allegations upon which he now relies. It seems to me, therefore, that the applicant has another specific and adequate legal remedy.

Further, it seems to me that if we were to allow this appeal and make the order, which my learned brother was asked to make and direct that the Returning Officer should accept Mr. Halder's nomination paper, the remedy, which we should be able to give would not be complete because we have no power in these proceedings to set aside the election which has been declared and the result might be to reduce these proceedings to an absurdity inasmuch as we should be directing the Returning Officer to receive the nomination paper of Mr. Halder after he has declared Mr. Mallik to be duly elected—a declaration, with which this Court in these proceedings has no jurisdiction to interfere.

There is a further ground, namely, that by r. 31 of the Bengal Electoral Rules and Regulations it is provided that "no election shall be called in question except by an election petition presented in accordance with the provisions of this part." The learned Counsel has admitted that that rule may be said to be "a law for the time being in force" and one of the exemptions from the provisions of sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, as I have stated, is that "Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise any High Court to make any order which is otherwise expressly excluded by any law for the time being in force."

For these reasons, in my judgment, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

There is no presumption that a property standing in the name of a Hindu female, who is a member of a joint Hindu family, belongs to the joint family and is not her stridhan *property. The most important test to be applied in these cases is the source whence the consideration came. In cases, however, where a husband, or a father pays the money and the purchase is taken in the name of a wife, or a child, there is under the general law in India, no presumption of an intended advancement in favour of wife or child as there is in England.

alternative. But the litigant who avails himself of the right to press inconsistent cases before the Court and endeavours to establish both the alternatives by contradictory oral testimony, plainly places himself in peril and may find himself entangled in inextricable difficulty, for evidence adduced in support of two absolutely inconsistent cases, which are mutually destructive, can hardly be expected to secure confidence.

Narendra Nath v. Abhay Charan (37) and other cases referred to.

An Appellant cannot be allowed to put forward a case which was not urged in the trial Court and which his opponent had no opportunity to controvert.

Although co-owners cannot enforce a partition of a part only of the common lands, leaving the rest undivided, and although the entire property must be included in the partition, yet if, by mistake, fraud or like reason, or by consent of these co-owners acting innocently and fairly, a partition of a portion only of their estate has been made, whether by order of the Court or otherwise, there is no reason why the Court should not subsequently grant a division of the remainder at the instance of one or more of the co-owners. But it is to the interest of all the parties that all the joint properties should be ascertained and included in a suit for partition.

The Court can, while passing a preliminary decree, order discovery of further joint property, for the Court has ample authority to direct successive trials of different issues and even to record interlocutory judgments thereon, to be made the basis of the final judgment at the conclusion of the trial of the whole case. It is therefore open to the Court to make a supplemental preliminary decree in respect of such additional joint properties as the parties may be compelled to discover in pursuance of its order.

Annapurna v. Golapmani (51) and other cases referred to.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Babu Nalinikanta Basu, Subordinate Judge , 24-Pergunahs, dated the 16th February 1922.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows :—One Nabin died leaving a widow Bhubanmohini, and six sons. One of them died leaving two sons and another died leaving a widow Kumudbala. The sons of Nabin formed a joint Hindu family governed by the Dayabhaga law. Kumudbala instituted the present suit for partition of the joint family estate, joining her mother-in-law Bhubanmohini as the first Defendant. Some of the properties stood in the name of Bhubanmohini, which, she maintained, were purchased with her private funds and accordingly formed her exclusive stridhan. Kumudbala, on the other hand, claimed them as belonging to the family estate in the benami of Bhubanmohini. The Subordinate Judge held that the properties were not self-acquisitions of Bhubanmohini. He decreed the suit and made a preliminary decree awarding Kumudbala a share and giving directions inter alia for discovery of further joint property. Against this decree the present appeal to the High Court was preferred.

BHUBANMOHINI DASI v. KUMUDBALA DASI.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the third, fourth and fifth Defendants in a suit for partition of joint family properties. The relationship of the parties may be gathered from the following genealogical table :—

The founder of the family, Digambar Kasyapi, left two sons, Nabin and Rasik. Nabin amassed a considerable fortune and died on the 21st November 1899. He left a widow Bhubanmohini and six sons. One of them, Behari, died leaving two sons, Rajani and Sajani. Another son, Makhan, died on the 20th September 1918, leaving a widow, Kumudbala, who had been married to him for thirty years. It is common ground that the sons of Nabin formed a joint Hindu family governed by the Dayabhaga law. On the 31st March 1919, Kumudbala, the widow of Makhan, instituted the present suit for partition of the joint family estate. Her mother-in-law Bhubanmohini was joined as the first Defendant; her surviving brothers-in-law were the next four Defendants; and the sons of her deceased brother-in-law were two other Defendants. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit on the 16th February 1922 and made a preliminary decree, awarding the Plaintiff a share of specified properties and giving various incidental directions. The present appeal was lodged in this Court by three of the Defendants on the 7th June 1922. During the pendency of the appeal, the first Defendant Bhubanmohini died on the 24th December 1922. We have heard the appeal on the record and without a printed paper-book, because the parties found themselves in a position of considerable embarrassment, owing to the inability of the Receiver in charge of the estate to collect sufficient funds for the conduct of the litigation. The facts have been placed before us in detail by Mr. Sarbadhikari who has argued the case on behalf of the Appellants very fully and we have also looked into the record for ourselves.

The preliminary decree made by the Subordinate Judge has been assailed substantially on three grounds, namely, first, that the properties which stand in the name of Bhubanmohini should have been regarded as her self-acquisition and not as part of the family estate liable to be partitioned; secondly, that if the properties which stand in the name of Bhubanmohini are found to have been acquired, not from her own funds but with the money of her husband, they should have been regarded as given to her in absolute right; and, thirdly, that the Subordinate Judge should not have made an order on the Defendants for discovery of joint properties other than those included in the suit.

As regards the first point, reference has been made to eight conveyances, dated 26th January 1873 for Rs. 50, 1st May 1887 for Rs. 400, 5th November 1888 for Rs. 150, 15th September 1891 for Rs. 300, 9th November 1892 for Rs. 475, 27th July 1898 for Rs. 112, 14th August 1898 for Rs. 16 and 1st October 1898 for Rs. 200. The properties acquired under these documents are claimed by the Plaintiff as included in the family estate though they all stand in the name of Bhubanmohini. Bhubanmohini, on the other hand, maintained that the consideration in each instance was paid by her, and the properties formed her exclusive stridhan. In this, she was supported by three of her sons, the present Appellants. Another son, however, the second Defendant and the two grandsons, the sixth and seventh Defendants, disputed her allegation, and supported the Plaintiff. It may be observed in passing that originally one written statement was filed on behalf of all the Defendants jointly; but, later on, the second, sixth and seventh Defendants stated that they had no knowledge of the written statement and took up a position hostile to that maintained by the third, fourth and fifth Defendants. This dissension among the Defendants has undoubtedly tended to weaken their opposition to the claim put forward by the Plaintiff.

Before the evidence is examined, we may usefully recall that as pointed out by the Judicial Committee more than once, there is no presumption that a property standing in the name of a Hindu female, who is a member of a joint Hindu family, belongs to the joint family and is not her stridhan property; Dewan Rai Bejay Bahadur Singh v. Indrapal (1), Dharanikant v. Krishtokumari (2) reversing Chaudhrani v. Tarini Kanth (3), which had disapproved of Bindu v. Peary (4) and Thakro v. Ganga Parsad (5). The same principle will be found recognised and applied in Narayana v. Krishna (6), Narasimma Ammal v. Srinivasaragava (7), Bai Mativahoo v. Purshottam Dayal (8), Durgaprasad v. Prankrishna (9) and Pratap Chandra v. Sarat Chandra (10). The rule thus enunciated must be coupled with the elementary principle that the burden of proof lies upon the person who asserts that the apparent is not the real state of things. It is important to bear in mind in this class of cases that, as pointed out by Lord Phillimore in Seth Maniklal v. Raja Bijoy Singh (11), the decision of the Court should rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. This recalls the earlier pronouncements to the same effect by Lord Westbury in Sreeman Chunder v. Gopaul Chunder (12) and by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Minakumari v. Bijay Singh (13). But we are not unmindful that, in the words of Lord Hobhouse in Uma Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (14) and of Lord Shaw in Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (15) as benami transactions are very familiar in Indian practice, even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction may suffice for the purpose. The person who impugns its apparent character must not rely, however, solely on probabilities, as Lord Buckmaster observed in Irshad Ali v. Musstt. Kariman (16). He must show something definite to establish that it is a sham transaction, on the principle that the burden of proof lies upon the person, who claims contrary to the tenor of a deed and alleges that the apparent is not the real state of things: Azimut Ali v. Hurdwaree Mull (17), Faez Buksh v. Fukeerooden (18), Suleiman Kader v. Mehdi Asfur Bahu (19), Nirmal v. Mahomed Siddiq (20) and Moti Lal v. Kundan Lal (21). The most important test to be applied in these cases is, as observed by Mr. Ameer Ali in Nrityamoni v. Lakhan Chandra (22), the source whence the consideration came. Sir George Farwell formulated the same test in different language, when he observed in Bilas Koer v. Deoraj Ranjit Singh (23), that where it is asserted that an assignment in the name of one person is really for the benefit of another person, the principle applies that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase money. To the same effect is the decision of the Judicial Committee in Parbati v. Baikuntha (24), which recalls the earlier pronouncements by Lord Campbell in Dhurum Das v. Shama Soondari (25) and by Knight Bruce, L. J., in Gopeekristo v. Gungapersad (26). Where, however, from the lapse of time, direct evidence of a conclusive or reliable character is not forthcoming, as to the payment of consideration, the case must be dealt with on reasonable probabilities and legal inferences arising from proved or admitted facts. Sir Arthur Wilson emphasised this when he observed in Dalip v. Chaudhrian Nawul Kunwar (27), that if the evidence on neither side is wholly convincing as to the fundamental criterion, namely, the source of the purchase money, if the evidence given and withheld is open to adverse criticism, the Court must rely on the surrounding circumstances, the position of the parties and their relation to one another, the motives which could govern their actions and their subsequent conduct, including their dealings with or enjoyment of the disputed property; see Upendra Nath v. Purendra Nath (28). We must further look to the substance of the transaction as evidenced in the deeds of the parties, not permitting the real question to be obscured by what Knight Bruce, L. J., calls in Hanooman Pershad v. Baboee Munraj (29), the form of expression, the literal sense, nor by what Lord Macnaghten describes in Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Hossein (30), as exhibitions of the art of the conveyancer in the shape of recitals of obviously untrue statements introduced to impart some additional solemnity to an instrument; Promode Kumar Ray v. Madan Mohan Saha (31), Lalit Mohan v. Monoranjan (32) and Jasoda Lal v. Balaram (33). The same view was recently emphasised by Lord Atkinson in Arab Ali v. Mahmud Ali (34) and by Lord Phillimore in Rai Radha- krishna v. Bisheswar Sahay (35). In the case before us, it was asserted by Bhubanmohini that she had her own private funds which enabled her to purchase the disputed and other properties. She alleged that she had received Rs. 100 from her father and Rs. 500 from her maternal grand-mother and that she used to carry on a money-lending business. She was eighty years old when her deposition was taken in 1921. She could give no indication as to the time or occasion of the alleged gifts; nor were any accounts produced of the alleged money-lending business. No independent witness was brought forward to corroborate her story. On the other hand, witnesses for the Plaintiff asserted that neither the paternal nor the maternal relations of Bhubanmohini were well-to-do people who were likely to have made gifts of money to her; this much is plain that those families and their properties, if any, have completely disappeared. As against this, we have the undisputed fact that Nabin, the husband of Bhubanmohini, prospered in life and acquired considerable sums of money; and there is no question that during the period of acquisition of the disputed properties in the name of Bhubanmohini, the requisite funds could have been provided by her husband. On this state of the evidence, the Subordinate Judge declined to believe the story that Bhubanmohini possessed any stridhan obtained from her paternal and maternal relations and provided the requisite sum from such separate fund. The Subordinate Judge has also pointed out that on the 8th March 1910 and 2nd May 1917, the third Defendant, Amrita, who now supports the story of his mother, executed mortgages of the disputed properties on the allegation that they belonged to his father. This Defendant, at any rate, has not treated the property as the stridhan of his mother; although it is not clear that she was aware of these transactions. We may add that upon the question of possession, the evidence is ambiguous. The properties were managed by Nabin, and, after his death, by his sons. This, however, would not necessarily militate against the theory that they belonged to Bhubanmohini; for in the case of a pardanashin lady her estate might, in the normal course of events, be looked after by her husband or her sons. But it is important to bear in mind that there is no reliable evidence to show that the income was actually enjoyed by Bhubanmohini. On the whole, we are of opinion that the evidence as to the source of the consideration money and the treatment and possession of the disputed properties amply justifies the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that they were not self-acquisitions of Bhubanmohini. In this connection, we may recall the observations of Lord Buckmaster in Nabakisor Mandal v. Upendrakissor Mandal (36): "In appeals, the burden of showing that the judgment appealed from is wrong lies upon the Appellant. If all he can show is nicely balanced calculations which lead to the equal possibility of the judgment of either the one side or the other being right, he has not succeeded." It is not necessary to invoke this doctrine against the Appellant, because, for reasons that have already been stated, the case set up by them fails; nevertheless, the fact that the trial Judge has disbelieved the story narrated by the first Defendant, is a factor which cannot altogether be ignored. The first point urged by the Appellants must consequently fail.

BHUBANMOHINI DASI v. KUMUDBALA DASI.

As regards the second point, the Plaintiff-Respondent has urged that the theory of advancement was not put forward in the trial Court and should not be entertained here. It cannot be seriously disputed that the alternative position taken up by the Appellants contradicts the case attempted to be established by evidence before the Subordinate Judge. The contesting Defendants have hitherto maintained that the disputed properties were purchased by the lady with her own money. They now turn round and contend that the properties were acquired by her husband with his own money but in her name, because he intended to make an absolute gift of them in her favour. It may be conceded that the Code of Civil Procedure does not prohibit inconsistent pleadings, and that there is nothing to prevent either party from setting up two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claiming relief thereunder in the alternative. A Plaintiff may rely upon several different rights alternatively, although they may be inconsistent; so, a Defendant may raise, by his statement of defence, without leave, as many distinct and separate, and, therefore, inconsistent, defences as he may think proper. This is fully established by the decision of the Full Bench in Narendra Nath v. Abhay Charan (37), and illustrations of the application of this doctrine to inconsistent claims by the Plaintiff may be found in Matilal v. Judhistir (38) and Official Assignee v. Bidyasundari (39) and to conflicting defences by the Defendant may be gathered from Purnendu v. Dwijendra (40) and Rang Behari v. Rachia Lal (41). But, as was emphasised in some of these cases, the litigant who avails himself of the right to press inconsistent cases before the Court and endeavours to establish both the alternatives by contradictory oral testimony, plainly places himself in peril and may find himself entangled in inextricable difficulty; for evidence adduced in support of two absolutely inconsistent cases, which are mutually destructive, can hardly be expected to secure confidence. Apart from this, there is no valid answer to the objection of the Plaintiff-Respondent that she cannot now be called upon to meet a case which was not put forward in the trial Court. Whether the husband of the first Defendant intended to make a gift of the properties to her or took the conveyances in her name so as to make her only the ostensible owner, is largely a question of intention. The facts relevant for the determination of this question of intention have not been explored. We cannot overlook that there are numerous instances of cases in the reports where purchases in the name of female members have led to controversies—whether the acquisition was for the benefit of the lady or of the person who found the money; see Ramnarain v. Muhammad Hadi (42), Muhammad Mahbub v. Bharat Indu (15), Basar Khan v. Leakat Hossain (43) and Nrityamoni v. Lakhan Chandra (22). In this connection, it is important to bear in mind that, as emphasised by Sir George Farwell in Bilas Koer v. Deoraj Ranjit Singh (23),

BHUBANMOHINI DASI v. KUMUDBALA DASI.

the doctrine of advancement in favour of wife or child does not apply in India [Gopeekristo v. Gungapersad (26)], but the relationship is a circumstance which is taken into consideration in India in determining whether the transaction is benami or not. This was apparently overlooked in Abdul Rahim v. Mirathayar (44). But, the true position was clearly recapitulated by Lord Atkinson in Kerwick v. Kerwick (45), where he observed as follows :—

"It has been established by the decisions in the cases of Gopeekristo Gosain v. Gungapersad Gosain (26) and Moulvi Sayyud Uthur Ali v. Bebee Ultaf Fatima (46), that owing to the wide-spread and persistent practice which prevails amongst the natives of India, whether Mahomedan or Hindu, for owners of property to make grants and transfers of it benami for no obvious reason or apparent purpose, without the slightest intention of vesting in the donee any beneficial interest in the property granted or transferred, as well as the usages which these natives have adopted and which have been protected by statute, no exception has ever been engrafted on the general law of India negativing the presumption of the resulting trust in favour of the person providing the purchase money, such as has, by the Courts of Chancery in the exercise of their equitable jurisdiction, been engrafted on the corresponding law in England in those cases where a husband or father pays the money and the purchase is taken in the name of a wife or child. In such a case there is, under the general law in India, no presumption of an intended advancement as there is in England."

We are consequently of opinion Appellants cannot possibly succeed on second point, which was not urged in the trial Court and which the Plaintiff hitherto had no opportunity to controvert.

As regards the third point, there can be no doubt that the Subordinate Judge has properly made an order for discovery. All the joint properties, which belong to the family, must be included in the suit. The contesting Defendants can gain no permanent advantage by the exclusion of any of the joint properties from this litigation. It is well-established that although co-owners cannot enforce a partition of a part only of the common lands, leaving the rest undivided, and although the entire property must be included in the partition, yet if, by mistake, fraud or like reason, or by consent of the co-owners acting innocently and fairly, a partition of a portion only of their estate has been made, whether by order of the Court or otherwise, there is no reason why the Court should not subsequently grant a division of the remainder at the instance of one or more of the co-owners. The substance of the matter is that the effect of a decree in a partition suit leaves untouched the joint title and possession of the parties in the remainder; Jogendra Nath Ray v. Baldeo Das (47). Consequently, it is to the interest of all parties concerned that all the joint properties should be ascertained and included in this suit, and any controversy as to whether a particular property alleged to be joint really possesses that character or not, must be determined before the preliminary decree is made. As was pointed out in Upendra Nath v. Umes Chunder (48), Satyakumar v. Satyakripal (49) and Tincouri v. Satyadayal

(49) 10 C. L. J. 503 (1909).

(50), all questions involving the title of the parties and their right to any relief within the issues, are judicial in character, and must be determined by the Court, such determination to be made ordinarily by the Court and incorporated in the interlocutory decree before any partition is made or directed. From this standpoint, the order for discovery made by the Subordinate Judge may be open to the criticism that it should have been made and carried out before the preliminary decree was passed. Such an objection, if taken, must be deemed unsubstantial; because, as explained in Annapurna v. Golapmani (51), the Court has ample authority to direct successive trials of different issues and even to record interlocutory judgments thereon, to be made the basis of the final judgment at the conclusion of the trial of the whole case. There is thus no reason why we should not confirm the preliminary decree as made by the Subordinate Judge, and leave it open to him to make a supplemental preliminary decree in respect of such additional joint properties as the Defendants may be compelled to discover on oath in pursuance of his order. The third point, like the first and the second, must consequently fail.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at fifteen gold mohurs.

The Receiver now in charge of the estate will continue (until otherwise directed by the Subordinate Judge) till the final decree for partition has been made.

The question of distribution of money in the hands of the Receiver will be dealt with by the Subordinate Judge.

BAIDYANATH CHATTOPADHYA v. SM. PANCHANANI DASI.

Lal Behari Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Hoogly, dated the 16th July 1920, modifying that of M. Lutfar Rahman, Munsif, 3rd Court, Serampore, dated the 18th July 1919.

The facts are briefly these:—On the 9th September 1916 the first two Defendants made a reference to arbitration in respect of the property in suit. On the 24th September 1916, the arbitrator made his award declaring the property to be the property of the first Defendant alone. On the 29th September 1916, the second Defendant conveyed the property to the Plaintiff on the basis of an alleged agreement made eight days earlier. The first Defendant thereafter applied to the Court to make a decree in accordance with the award, and the decree was made on the 16th December 1916. The Plaintiff brought the present action for recovery of possession of the property on establishment of title by purchase. The trial Court held that the Plaintiff had acquired no valid title by the purchase and dismissed the suit as against the first Defendant but made a decree for Rs. 175 against the second Defendant who had obtained that sum from the Plaintiff as consideration for the conveyance. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that title to the property was vested in the first two Defendants and consequently Plaintiff had acquired a good title to a moiety of the property. Against this judgment the present second appeal was preferred to the High Court.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal for the Appellant.

Babus Satindra Nath Mukerjee and Narendra Kumar Das for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the first Defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land on establishment of title by purchase. The case for the Plaintiff is that the property belonged to the second Defendant who conveyed it to her on the 29th September 1916 pursuant to an agreement made eight days earlier. The case for the first Defendant is that the claim is unfounded inasmuch as he had become entitled to the property by virtue of an award made on the 24th September 1916 in an arbitration proceeding between himself and his brother, the second Defendant. The Court of first instance held that the Plaintiff had acquired no valid title by her purchase from the second Defendant and dismissed the suit as against the first Defendant. The Court, however, made a decree for Rs. 175 against the second Defendant who, it was found, had obtained that sum from the Plaintiff as consideration for the conveyance. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has held that the title to the property was vested in the first two Defendants, and that the Plaintiff had consequently acquired a good title to one-half share of the property. On this basis a decree has been made in favour of the Plaintiffs for one-half share of the property and also for mesne profits.

On the present appeal, the first Defendant has contended that the conveyance executed by the second Defendant in favour of the Plaintiff could not transfer a good title to the property inasmuch as the vendor had no title thereto. We are of opinion that this contention is well-founded.

It appears that on the 9th September 1916, the first two Defendants made a reference to arbitration in respect of this property. On the 24th September 1916, the arbitrator made his award whereby this property was declared to be the property of the first Defendant alone. On the 29th September 1916, that is, after the award had been made, the second Defendant conveyed the property to the Plaintiff on the basis of the alleged agreement made eight days earlier. The first Defendant thereafter applied to the Court to make a decree in accordance with the award. That proceeding was instituted only against the second Defendant who was a party to the arbitration proceedings. The consequence was that a decree was made on the 16th December 1916. On these facts, it has been urged that as this decree was made long after the conveyance, the title of the Plaintiff was not affected thereby. In our opinion this view is manifestly erroneous.

The effect of the award of the arbitrator was to vest the title to the property in the first Defendant. From that date, the second Defendant could not set up a claim to that property. The consequence was that on the date when the second Defendant purported to transfer his interest in the property to the Plaintiff he had no interest to convey. The effect of an award was considered by the Judicial Committee in the case of Muhammed Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan (1). In that case A and B had referred certain matter in difference between them to X. X made his award in favour of A. A made an application under sec. 525 of the Code of 1882 to file the award and it was dismissed. B then brought a suit to recover the property which had formed the subject-matter of arbitration. A set up the award in answer to the claim. The Judicial Committee held that the award was valid and was binding upon B; and that although the application under sec. 525 was refused, that merely left the award to have its ordinary legal validity. It could not be successfully contended that an award was not valid because the party in whose favour it was had never applied to have it filed in Court. The refusal to file an award or an application made to do so would not have the effect that the award could never be relied upon in any suit relating to the subject-matter dealt with by it. The Judicial Committee then examined the grounds upon which the validity of the award was sought to be impeached and found them to be unsustainable, with the consequence that the Plaintiff, who had asked for recovery of the property in contravention of the title created by the award, failed. It was pointed out by this Court in the case of Bhajahari Saha Banikya v. Beharylal Basak (2) that this decision of the Judicial Committee clearly shows that if an award is valid, it is operative, even though neither party has sought to enforce it by a regular suit or by the summary procedure. This conclusion is based upon the elementary principle that, as between the parties and their privies an award is entitled to that respect, which is due to the judgment of a Court of last resort. The award is in fact a final adjudication by a Court of the parties' own choice and until impeached upon sufficient grounds in an appropriate proceeding, an award, which is on the face of it regular, is binding. The position consequently is that on the 24th September 1916 the title of the second Defendant, if any, to the property in suit was extinguished and under the award the property vested finally in the first Defendant. The result follows that the Plaintiff did not acquire any title to the property by her conveyance taken from the second Defendant. In the present suit, no grounds have been made out to establish the invalidity of the award. We hold accordingly that the

The facts are these :—Plaintiff bought the residuary share of an estate at a sale under the provisions of Act XI, B. C., of 1859. Being prevented by the Defendants from taking possession of a tank, the Plaintiff brought the present suit to obtain khas possession of the tank. The Defendants pleaded that the tank did not appertain to the estate of the Plaintiff and that they had lakheraj right to it. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit on the ground that the Plaintiff failed to prove that the tank formed part of the mal assets of his estate. The Plaintiff thereupon preferred the present second appeal to the High Court.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is preferred by the Plaintiff who has been unsuccessful in both Courts.

On 26th June 1914, he bought the residuary share of Estate No. 1273 of the Burdwan Collectorate at a sale held under the provisions of Act XI (B. C.) of 1859. After his purchase he says that he obtained possession of all the land in the estate, but he was prevented by the Defendants from taking possession of a tank known as the Rowta tank, and it was to obtain khas possession of this tank that the suit was instituted.

The Defendants pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, and that it was bad for defect of parties, and on the merits that the tank did not appertain to the estate bought by the Plaintiff, and that they had a lakheraj right to it.

It was conceded in the first Court that the plea of limitation could not be sustained. On other points the learned Munsif found that the whole of the western bank and part of the northern bank were not included within the estate bought by the Plaintiff, and that therefore the persons who own the western bank were not necessary parties. The remainder of the tank and the other banks he found to be included within the ambit of the Plaintiff's estate. Then he came to the main question of the case, the question on which part lay the burden of proof, and he held that it lay upon the Plaintiff, and that he had failed to discharge it. This was the question which was argued on appeal, and the learned Subordinate Judge gave the same answer.

It has been urged before us on behalf of the Plaintiff that the Courts below are wrong and that the onus of proof really lay upon the Defendants.

There is no dispute now about the provision of Act XI which defines the Plaintiff's rights: it is sec. 54, and according to that section "the purchaser shall acquire the share, subject to all encumbrances and shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner or owners."

The question as to whether the onus lies on the Appellant Plaintiff or on the Defendants has been argued before us with reference to two decisions by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

For the Plaintiff it is urged that the decision in the case of Jagdeo Narain v. Baldeo Singh (1) shows that the burden lies upon the Defendants and attention is drawn in particular to the sentences: "In the present case, the lands in dispute lie within the ambit of the estate, which admittedly belongs to the Plaintiffs and the pro formâ Defendants and for which they pay the revenue assessed on the Mouza. In these circumstances it lies upon those who claim to hold the land free of the obligation to pay rent to show by satisfactory evidence that they have been relieved of this obligation either by contract or by some old grant recognised by Government." Thus detached from their context the sentences seem to support the Appellant. But when the judgment as a whole is studied, it is clear that the Plaintiffs were not relieved of their obligation, for the earlier part was devoted to an exhaustive examination of the proceedings taken in 1838 under Reg. II of 1819. Particular stress was laid on the fact that at that time no one claimed the malikanadari right claimed by the Defendants, although there was an "investigation into the titles of all persons occupying lands on the allegation that they were not liable to the payment of rent." Then in referring to the presumption arising from the record-of-rights, their Lordships said just before the sentences quoted: "Once the landlord has proved that the land which is sought to be held rent-free lies within his regularly assessed estate or mehal, the onus is shifted." It seems clear therefore that mere proof of geographical situation was not regarded as enough: the landlord had also to show that the land had been assessed, and it was only after he had done so that the burden was passed to the Defendants.

In my opinion, this decision does not help the Plaintiff: on the contrary, it supports the Defendants, and it is not in conflict with the decision on which their learned vakil relies, namely, the case of Hurryhar

SASHI BHUSAN HAZRA v. KAZI ABDULLA.

Mookhopadhya v. Madub Chunder Baboo (2). That decision reviews the legislation on the subject of invalid lakheraj grants, and touches on points with which we are not here concerned; towards the close it deals with the question of what the Plaintiff has to prove, and it lays down that he must prove not merely that the land is within the ambit of his estate but also that it formed part of the mal assets at the time of the decennial settlement. Not till he has proved both these points does the onus shift to the shoulders of the Defendants.

It has not been urged that the Judge is wrong in his conclusions if he is right in laying the onus upon the Plaintiff.

The result is that the appeal fails, and it is dismissed with costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL

[APPEAL FROM PATNA.]

LORD SUMNER
LORD PHILLIMORE.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
Heard, 12, 14 and 15, June.
Judgment, 25, July.

SRINATH RAI and ors., Appellants,
v.
PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO, Respondent.

Putra-poutradik—Service jagir in Chota Nagpur—Resumability on failure of direct male line of grantee—"Resumption," meaning of—Zemindar bound to make new settlement with the consent of Government.

Held, on the evidence—That Pargana Bundu in Chota Nagpur was a service tenure defeasible on failure of the male line of the grantee and "resumable" by the Zemindar, the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur.

"Resumption" in this connection does not mean that on failure of the direct male line, it "escheats" to the Zemindar and becomes what is called his sir or khas property; the jagir retains its character, but the Zemindar becomes entitled to make a new settlement with the knowledge and sanction of the authorities.

(2) 14 M. I. A. 152 (1871).

This was an appeal against a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, dated the 29th March 1920, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi, dated the 11th September 1916 and made in Suit No. 205 of 1908.

The suit was instituted by the Appellants, who were auction-purchasers of a valuable estate known as Pargana Bundu, for a declaration that the estate was not subject to resumption by the Respondent, the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur, on failure of heirs male of the original grantee.

The question for determination in this appeal was whether Pargana Bundu is an independent estate held subject to the sole condition of the annual payment of a fixed rent, or whether it is a "putra putradik" jagir granted as such to a predecessor-in-title of the Appellants, and resumable by the Respondent, on failure of heirs male of the body of the original grantee.

On the 2nd of August 1895, Tikait Jagannath Roy, the then Rajah of Bundu, mortgaged his "ancestral Zemindari with all rights and appurtenances in Pargana Bundu . . . ." to the first Appellant Srinath Roy, who with his brothers Appellant No. 2 and the father of Appellants Nos. 3 and 4 were members of a Hindu joint family and are hereinafter referred to as "the Roys."

Tikait Jagannath Roy defaulted in payment of the mortgage money, a decree was obtained by the mortgagee and the estate was sold in execution and was purchased by the Roys on the 15th September 1899.

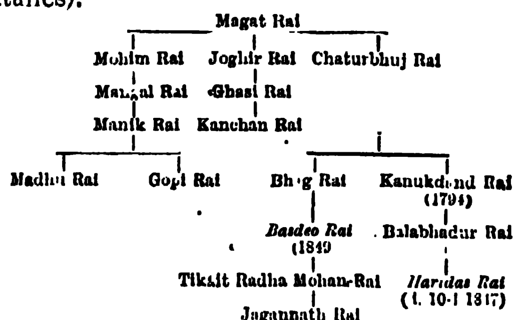
Two years later the Roys paid to the Respondent the sum of Rs. 26,000 to redeem a prior zurpeshgi lease of the estate and they entered into possession in 1902.

In 1903-4 survey and settlement operations were commenced in Pargana Bundu and the nature of its tenure became a subject of inquiry. On the 14th September 1904 the Settlement Officer (Mr. Lister) decided that the tenure was resumed by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur on the death of a former Raja of Bundu (Haridas Rai) and that a fresh tenure was created in favour of Basdeo Rai who was a predecessor-in-title of Tikait Jagannath Rai. In his opinion the new tenure so created was a jagir resumable by the Maharaja on default of legitimate heirs male in the male line from Basdeo and he directed entries to be made in the record-of-rights accordingly.

An application by the Appellant for a review of this decision was unsuccessful and the findings of the Settlement Officer were confirmed on appeal by the Board of Revenue.



On the 20th July 1908 the Roys and the Appellant Ashutosh Dhur (who had purchased a half-share of their interest in 1905) instituted the present suit against the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur claiming the declarations above mentioned.

In their plaint they stated that Bundu with other neighbouring Parganas had originally been held by independent Rajas until conquered by the British and incorporated in Chota Nagpur by special treaty, that the revenue payable by these Rajas had been fixed by Major Crawford in 1793 and made payable through the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur, who had no rights over the Parganas other than to a contribution of revenue.

With regard to the alleged break in the succession and the new grant, they maintained that on the death of Raja Haridas Rai sonless, the succession devolved on Basdeo Rai as his uncle and nearest heir but that owing to his poverty the latter was unable to pay the customary "Nazarana" or fee on succession, to the Raj, and in lieu thereof he agreed to pay an enhanced rent and to accept a smaller estate but that the nature of the estate remained unaltered.

The Respondent by his written statement inter alia asserted that Bundu had from time immemorial formed a part of the Chota Nagpur Raj, that the Rajas or Tikaits of Bundu were jagirdars under it, their jagir being like all other jagirs in the estate resumable. That on the death of Haridas Rai without issue in 1848 the estate had been attached by the agent of the Governor-General and that the attachment had only been removed at the instigation of the then Maharaja of Chota Nagpur who filed a petition stating that he had made a grant to Basdeo Rai and that the said grant was a "putra putradik" tenure and resumable.

The pedigree of the family is set out below and from this it would appear that Basdeo Rai was the nearest male heir of Haridas Rai—(The names of these two persons are for convenience printed in italics).

SRINATH RAI v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO.

The suit was tried by the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi who decided in favour of the Plaintiffs but on appeal the High Court were of opinion that the judgment of the trial Court was of no assistance in deciding the main question of fact and on the 31st March 1915 they remanded the case under sec. 107 of the Civil Procedure Code for a complete re-trial on the issues of law as well as of fact.

The suit was thereupon re-heard by a different Subordinate Judge who framed the following issues :—

(1) Are the Plaintiffs entitled to a declaration that Pargana Bundu is not a resumable jagir?

(2) Whether Pargana Bundu was held as an independent estate by the ancestors of Tikait Jagannath Roy before the Permanent Settlement and was it incorporated in the Permanent Settlement with the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur as a "Shikmi" Taluk with its revenue payable through the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur?

(3) Whether the estate was created by a grant by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur. If so, was the grant permanent or resumable on failure of heirs in the male line?

(4) Whether Plaintiffs' ancestors' predecessor Basdeo Rai was the heir to Raja Haridas Rai and holding as such and not under a fresh grant made to him in 1819. What was the nature of the tenure held by him?

(5) To what relief, if any, are the Plaintiffs entitled in this suit. Can they get the declarations prayed for from the Court in the exercise of its discretion?

The Subordinate Judge pointed out the difficulty, owing to lack of materials, of tracing the origin of Bundu but found that there could be no question that before the advent of the British the Rajas of Bundu were independent of the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur, that Pargana Bundu never formed part of the Chota Nagpur Raj estate and that the Raja of Bundu was never jagirdar under it. "There is," he said, "no evidence on the record to support the theory of grant by the ancestor of the Maharaja."

He next considered whether Bundu had lost its original character and become a resumable jagir. He found on the evidence that, subsequent to the conquest by the British, Major Farmer in 1793 compelled the rulers of Bundu to execute a kabuliyat in favour of the Maharaja but that "the Raja of Bundu did not lose his proprietary right merely by executing a kabuliyat and paying his quota of the Government revenue through the Raja of Chota Nagpur."

The actual kabuliyat was not produced by the Defendant and the Subordinate Judge, after considering the rest of the evidence adduced with regard to these tenures, was of opinion that, if produced, the kabuliyat would not have supported the Defendant's contention of a resumable grant and that it had been deliberately withheld.

In regard to the alleged resumption and re-grant of the Pargana in 1818 the Subordinate Judge stated :—"There is nothing in the record to warrant the conclusion that Pargana Bundu was ever resumed by Raja Jagarnath Sahi after the demise of Raja Haridas Rai of Bundu . . . . ." "I find that Raja Basdeo Rai inherited this property from Raja Haridas Rai as his nearest agnate and Bundu Raj's estate devolved on him by succession." In the event he decided that the Plaintiffs were the maliks of Pargana Bundu and rightful owners of the property, and he passed a decree in their favour and made the declarations prayed for.

It was the case of the Respondent that an actual re-grant was made to Basdeo in 1849 and that the latter at that time executed another kabuliyat in favour of the then Maharaja of Chota Nagpur. This kabuliyat also was not produced at the trial and the Subordinate Judge held that the Defendant had failed to account for its non-production.

From the decree of the Subordinate Judge the Appellants appealed to the High Court of Patna and their appeal was heard by a Bench composed of the Chief Justice, Sir Dawson-Miller and Jwala Prosad, J. On the 29th March 1920 the judgment of the Court was delivered by the Chief Justice. He agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the origin of the estate was lost in obscurity, but he was of opinion that the onus was on the Plaintiffs to prove that since 1794 (the alleged date of the first kabuliyat) Bundu was a dependent Taluk paying revenue to Government through the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur and that that onus had not been discharged. He stated that: "In the documentary evidence produced in the case of a date antecedent to Basdeo's time (1847) there is little or nothing from which any definite conclusion can be arrived at as to the exact nature and incidents of the estate in dispute." But in his view the events subsequent to 1847 showed that a new grant was made to Basdeo of a service jagir resumable by the Maharaja. The learned Chief Justice thought that the inference of the Subordinate Judge that the kabuliyat of 1793-4 had been deliberately withheld by the Defendant was not legitimate; but although he refers in his judgment to the second kabuliyat of 1849 he makes no comment on its non-production by the Defendant. Jawala Prasad, J., agreed to the order proposed by the Chief Justice and the appeal was accordingly allowed and the decree of the lower Court set aside.

From this decree the Appellants (Plaintiffs) appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. G. Douglas McNair for the Appellants.—Pargana Bundu was the absolute estate of Tikait Jagannath Roy the predecessor-in-title of the Appellant. From earliest times the records show Bundu as an independent Raj owing no fealty and it was out of the 5 Parganas excluded from the settlements with Chota Nagpur until 1794.

There is no evidence of rent paid by Bundu or of services rendered between 1773 and 1794, a period during which there was no Government compulsion.

The Respondent has failed to produce the kabuliyats of 1793 and 1849 which if his contention is correct would show that the tenure was "putra putradik."

The Respondent must show that the tenure was putra putradik either by grant or by custom. No grant has been produced and there is no secondary evidence of its terms.

The old Revenue Reports in each case show that the 5 Parganas, of which Bundu was one, were non-resumable.

[They referred to Hunter's Statistical Account of Bengal, Vol. XVI, p. 362 and foll. Ram Narayan Singh v. Ram Saran Lal (1) and Ram Ranjan Chuckerbutty v. Ram Narain Singh (2).]

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Ramsay for the Respondent.—The Settlement Officer has decided that the tenure is "putra putradik" and has made an entry in the khewat accordingly, the onus is therefore on the Respondent to show that the entry is erroneous, Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 103 (b) and to prove the affirmative title that he sets up.

SRINATH RAI v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO.

There is evidence that his rent has been raised and that negatives his claim to be a dependent Talukdar. Even if the origin of Bundu is veiled in obscurity the evidence is clear that it was in fact resumed in 1847-1849 and then re-granted on a putra putradik tenure.

Some of the settlement reports show that in modern times Bundu did form part of the Chota Nagpur Raj, even though originally independent.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. in reply.—The Raja of Bundu was a dependent Talukdar only as regards payment of revenue, not according to the definition in Reg. VIII of 1793.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the Plaintiffs on the 28th July 1908, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi under the following circumstances. The Plaintiff Srinath Roy purchased on the 15th September 1899, in execution of a mortgage decree, Pargana Bundu, a property lying within the estate of Chota Nagpur. The second and third Plaintiffs are Srinath Roy's brothers and interested in the purchase whilst the fourth is an assignee of a share in the property in question. It appears that in 1895 the first three Plaintiffs advanced a large sum of money to one Tikait Jagannath Roy, since deceased, who was then in possession of the property, on a mortgage of the same. The document of mortgage bears date the 2nd of August 1895. In default of payment a suit was brought, and a decree obtained upon it in October 1898.

The sale proclamation was issued on the 20th of July 1899, and the sale held, as already stated, on the 15th of September 1899. The Plaintiff Srinath Roy obtained the sale certificate on the 20th of January 1900. He claims that Pargana Bundu was the absolute estate of his mortgagor and that he is entitled to it by virtue of his purchase.

The Defendant is the Zemindar of the Chota Nagpur estate, and his contention is that the property in question was a jagir tenure held by Jagannath defeasible on failure of the lineal male line of the grantee, and the Plaintiffs' mortgagor having died without leaving any male issue, he has resumed the same, as he was lawfully entitled to do.

In 1903 the Bengal Government directed, under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the preparation of a record-of-rights in respect of the Chota Nagpur estate. The Settlement Officer, Mr. Lister, in pursuance of the instructions of the Government, and in accordance with the provisions of the Tenancy Act, instituted a careful and minute enquiry relating to the tenures and other subordinate tenancies within the Chota Nagpur estate. Sec. 102, cl. X, requires the Settlement Officer to include among other particulars "the special conditions and incidents, if any, of the tenancy" regarding which the enquiry is being held. Mr. Lister, accordingly, made in the Register of tenancies, technically called the Khewat, the following entry against Pargana Bundu:—

"Col. 4.—Nature of rights—Jagir Khidmat (that is, service tenure resumable).

"Col. 5—Resumable or not—Kabil-zabti.

"Col. 11.—Remarks—'Yeh Jagir Tekait Basdeo Rai, hasil kiya is shart par ke Putra Putradik bhog kare.'

"The entry in the column of remarks is intended to mean that the tenure is Putra Putradik and derived from Basdeo Rai."

Basdeo was the grandfather of the mortgagor. It is to be noted that the words Putra Putradik denote descent in the direct male line. The entry rendered into English runs thus:—"This jagir was obtained by Tekait Basdeo Rai on condition of enjoyment in the direct male line."

Sec. 103 (b) of the Tenancy Act provided that:—

"A certificate, signed by the Revenue Officer, stating that a record-of-rights has been finally published under this chapter, shall be conclusive evidence of such publication; and every entry in a record-of-rights so published shall be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved."

The Plaintiff accordingly brought this suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi to set aside the order of the Settlement Officer referred to above, and to obtain a declaration that Pargana Bundu was held as an independent estate by the ancestors of his mortgagor from a time previous to the Permanent Settlement made by the Government with the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur, that it was incorporated as a Shikmi or dependent Taluk in such settlement with the Maharaja merely for the payment of the revenue through him, that the subsequent grant made by the Maharaja to Basdeo Roy referred to in the Settlement Officer's entry was not consequent upon a resumption or fresh settlement but was a mere continuance of the old status. The Defendant, the Maharaja, pleaded that Pargana Bundu was never an independent estate; that it was a mere jagir or tenure resumable on failure of the direct male line, and that the last holder in the direct line having died in 1817 without leaving any male issue, he (the Maharaja) made a new grant to Basdeo Roy, by which Basdeo clearly acknowledged that the tenure was resumable on failure of the lineal male line of the grantee.

A number of issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge, all of which relate to the nature of the property in suit, viz., whether it was a resumable jagir, or was an independent estate held by the ancestors of the Plaintiffs' mortgagor and was incorporated in the Zemindari of the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur as a Shikmi or dependent taluk, with its revenue payable through the Maharaja. The fourth issue related to the character of the grant made to Basdeo Roy. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge who first tried the case was reversed on appeal by the High Court and the case was remanded for a fresh trial. The Subordinate Judge before whom the case came for hearing the second time rests his judgment almost entirely on the non-production by the Defendant of the kabuliyat, which it was alleged was executed in 1791 by the holder of the jagir at the time. The Subordinate Judge held that Pargana Bundu was the absolute estate of the jagirdar when it was incorporated in the Maharaja's estate, and that since its incorporation its revenue only is payable to Government through the Zemindar. Had it been otherwise, says the learned Judge, the Maharaja would have produced the kabuliyat given to him by the jagirdar. He also accepted the contention of the Plaintiffs that the grant made by the Maharaja to Basdeo in 1819 was not a new settlement but only a continuance of the old jagir. He accordingly decreed the Plaintiffs' claim.

The following passage in the Subordinate Judge's judgment shows the trend of his mind in dealing with the case. He says:—

"Taking the broad facts of this case, it appears that the Bundu Raj Estate existed from time before the accession of the British Government. This estate was gained by conquest and the Raja was made to execute kabuliyat in favour of the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur agreeing to pay Government Revenue through him. This estate is heritable as well as transferable. The Plaintiffs obtained this property by mortgage and afterwards at a sale purchased it in execution of the decree obtained on this bond. The origin of the Bundu Estate is unknown. The Defendant has not produced the kabuliyat executed by these Rajas in favour of his ancestors. Under these circumstances, it is not unreasonable to hold that the Bundu Raj Estate is a permanent tenure and is not resumable. The Maharaja has failed to prove that he ever had any right or title to this Pargana. I therefore find Issues Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in Plaintiffs' favour. I find that Bundu Raj Estate is not a resumable tenure.

And in the decree he declared as follows :--

"Pargana Bundu was held as an independent estate by the ancestors of Raja Haridas Roy prior to the Permanent Settlement, and that Raja Basudeo Roy succeeded Raja Haridas Roy as his nearest heir and agnate and that the status of Bundu Raj Estate was not affected by the Permanent Settlement."

The Defendant appealed to the High Court of Patna, which, on the 29th March 1920, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge, dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit. The learned Judges of the Appellate Court remarked, not without reason, that the trial Judge in his treatment of the case had placed on the Defendant the burden of showing that the entry in the record-of-rights was correct, whereas it lay on the Plaintiffs to show that it was erroneous. And after a close and detailed examination of the respective contentions and of the evidence they came to the conclusion that the Plaintiffs had failed to establish that the entry made by the Settlement Officer in the record-of-rights was wrong. They further held that the grant by the Zemindar in 1849 was not a continuation of the old tenure, which came to an end on the death of Haridas Roy in 1847 without leaving any male issue, and that the subsequent grant to Basdeo Roy was a new settlement and that the tenure was a resumable tenure. They accordingly, as already stated, allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

The present appeal to His Majesty in Council is by the Plaintiffs. The contentions on their behalf have proceeded on the same lines as those which found acceptance with the Subordinate Judge. It is contended in the first place that the jagirdar or Raja of Bundu was an independent chief; and that although on its conquest by the British, Bundu was incorporated with the Zemindary of Chota Nagpur and its revenue was made payable through the Zemindar, it never lost its character of an independent estate, and that it has always retained that character. Consequently, it is urged, the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur has no right to resume it and that the Plaintiffs are entitled to a decree by setting aside the revenue entry.

It is impossible to ascertain at this distance of time with any approach to precision the status of the chiefs of Bundu in relation to the Maharajas of Chota Nagpur before the establishment of British rule. The Chota Nagpur estate appears from the evidence on the record to extend over an area of several thousand square miles, situated in a tract of country more or less covered with jungle. It further appears from the evidence of Mr. Peppe, the Manager of the Chota Nagpur Estate, that within the ambit of this vast estate there lie some 1,000 jagirs. Beyond the statements contained in the Report of Mr. Webster, who was at one time in charge, on behalf of Government of the Chota Nagpur Estate, and in other reports made by other officers in the course of their official duties, there is no record of the earlier history of these jagirs, when or how they came into existence and in what relation they stood to the Maharajas. In 1765, with the grant of the Dewani by the Emperor of Delhi to the East India Company, Chota Nagpur, as a part of Behar, came into British hands. It appears that in 1771 or 1772 a temporary settlement of revenue was made by the East India Company with the Zemindar of Chota Nagpur. The last settlement with him was contemporaneous with the well-known Decennial Settlement in 1789, and this settlement, under the provisions of Bengal Reg. VIII of 1793, was made permanent. The Maharaja's Zemindary is now, accordingly, a permanently settled estate. About this time Chota Nagpur appears to have been in a very disturbed condition; whether the jagirdars were refractory subordinates of the Maharaja or rebellious independent chiefs, it is beyond dispute that the holder of Pargana Bundu, along with other pargana chiefs, was reduced to subjection by British forces and his jagir was incorporated with the Zemindary of Chota Nagpur, and he was made liable to pay his rent to the Chota Nagpur Zemindar. This is said to have happened in 1791, and this rent, which appears to have been slightly increased in later times, has been regularly paid to the Zemindar.

It is urged on behalf of the Plaintiffs that as the jagirdar of Pargana Bundu never paid revenue to the Maharaja before its incorporation in his Zemindary, his contribution towards the revenue cannot be treated as rent. And it has been strenuously contended before the Board that his status was that of an independent Talukdar under sec. 5 of the Bengal Reg. VIII of 1793. This contention seems to be based upon a clear misapprehension of the provisions of the Regulation. Sec. 5 describes the classes of Talukdars who were entitled, under its provisions, to obtain separation of their jama from the Zemindary jama. The Regulation defined the procedure for the purpose of obtaining the separation. All independent Talukdars occupying the position described in cls. 1 to 5, sec. 5, who had been heretofore paying their quota of the Government dues through the Zemindar, became entitled to obtain a separation of their jama by adopting the procedure laid down in the Regulation. There is not an iota of evidence to show that the jagirdar of Pargana Bundu ever took any step for the separation of his jama. Had he been paying revenue, making use only of the Zemindar's serishta for its transmission to the Government Treasury, or had he occupied the status which is claimed for him, there would have been an undoubted record of the fact in the Government Revenue Register.

The Plaintiffs in their plaint had claimed to be only "dependent Talukdars." The Regulation draws a wide distinction between "independent Talukdars" and "dependent Talukdars." The former come within the category of "actual proprietors of land," whereas the latter do not; "they are considered as lease-holders only" (sec. 7). It was evidently owing to the difficulty presented by sec. 7 that the contention advanced in the first Court has been abandoned before the Board, and the Plaintiffs have taken their stand on sec. 5.

It is contended that when Major Farmer brought the jagirdar of Bundu into subjection he made him execute a kabuliyat in favour of the Zemindar of Chota Nagpur, and it has been vehemently urged, both by the Subordinate Judge and learned Counsel on behalf of the Plaintiffs, that that kabuliyat, if produced, would disprove the Defendant's case, and that it has been deliberately withheld by the Maharaja because it would have supported the Plaintiffs' contention. There are two clear answers to this argument. In the first place, a kabuliyat predicates a patta. A patta is granted by the Zemindar as a title-deed to the tenant. The kabuliyat, as its name implies, is a mere acknowledgment, an engagement by the tenant to carry out the terms of the patta. If the jagirdar of Bundu entered into a kabuliyat it may be inferred with certainty that there was also a patta; and that patta, as the title-deed of the grantee, would be in the hands of the grantee's heirs and successors, and would, it may safely be presumed, come into the hands of the mortgagee, who derives his title from the mortgagor. On behalf of the Plaintiffs it has been urged that he was on bad terms with the mortgagor and could not consequently obtain the necessary documents from him. Considering the nature of the jungle-mahal and the uncertainty of title in those Districts, it is somewhat remarkable that the mortgagee should not have endeavoured to obtain from the mortgagor, who at the time of the mortgage was in possession of Bundu, documents of title relating thereto. Much criticism has been passed by the Subordinate Judge, which has to a certain extent been adopted by Plaintiffs' Counsel before the Board, on the non-production by the Zemindar of the kabuliyat. The explanation given by the Defendant for its non-production has been accepted by the High Court, and their Lordships do not find sufficient reason to take a different view. The Defendant's manager, Mr. Peppe, who has been in that office from 1900 to the date he gave his evidence in August 1916, states :—

"I searched for copy of Bundu Pottah. I could not find out any copy of Bundu Pottah. All the ancient records of the Maharaja are not in existence. These documents were kept in the custody of Gunpat Ray, who was Maharaja's Record-keeper. He was called upon to make over all these records to the Maharaja. He did not choose to do so. Thereupon he was convicted."

[It is in evidence that this Gunpat Ray was subsequently hanged for mutiny.] In cross-examination Mr. Peppe states as follows :—

"There is practically no paper in the record room prior to the time when the Court of Wards took over charge."

The Court of Wards were in charge of the Zemindary of Chota Nagpur from 1868 or 1869 to 1887. Apparently, it was then that an effort was made to overhaul the record room of the Maharaja and obtain copies of the pattas that had been given to the various jagirdars. The numerous documents that were forthcoming in the earlier proceedings lend support to the story that important papers were purloined or abstracted from the Zemindar's record room about the time of the mutiny.

In 1826 Mr. Cuthbert, who was appointed by the Government to make a report on the Chota Nagpur District, submitted a report on the 21st of April and 14th of June 1827, in which occurs the following passage on which considerable reliance has been placed on behalf of the Plaintiffs :—

In para. 20 he states :—

"Six subordinate Parganas are incorporated with Chota Nagpur, viz., Tamar, Buroda, Raie, Boondoo, Silee and Burwa. How or when these Parganas became dependent on the Raja of Chota Nagpur I cannot ascertain, but it would appear that for a long time the dependence was little more than nominal. It was not until the country came into our possession that these Rajas were permanently and actually incorporated with Chota Nagpur."

And continuing, he adds in the same paragraph :—

"These Rajas may be considered in the light of Talukdars. The Rajas, however, still acknowledge the Rajas of Chota Nagpur as their feudal chief, and on the death of a Raja his successor waits on the Raja of Nagpur, pays homage and presents a considerable Nazar—generally 1,000 rupees—and receives the Tilluc (sic) from him."

SRINATH RAI v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO.

What follows, however, is important :—

24. "Although from the nature of these feudal tenures Jageers were originally granted solely in consideration of military services, yet services of a civil and religious nature were afterwards similarly rewarded at the pleasure of the superior."

25 "The number of larger Jageers is 16, consisting of about 2538 villages These Jageers have invariably descended from father to son, and both the custom of the Pargana and the practice of the courts hold them as hereditary in the direct male line. On a Jageerdar dying without male issue his Jageer generally reverts to the Raja, as females in this country do not succeed to real property."

The italics are their Lordships'.

Mr. Cuthbert's statement in this paragraph clearly goes to support the Defendant's contention that the Bundu Jagir was, like others, descendible in the direct male line resumable on failure of such line.

To this report Mr. Cuthbert attached a list of Parganas prepared in 1827. It is headed thus :—

"List of Parganas of Nagpur, being the Zemirdari of Maharaja Jagarnath Sahi Deo on condition of rendering service."

And then comes :—

"Ghatwals Jagirdars on condition of rendering service"

One of the Jagirdars there mentioned is "Bundu—Raja Balamdar Rai."

Pargana Bundu thus remained in the hands of the lineal descendants of Kanukdand Rai, who was found to be in possession in 1791, until it devolved on Haridas Rai. He is stated to have died on the 10th January 1817. On his death his widows applied for possession of the jagir; at the same time two of his collaterals (Kanchan Lal and Basdeo Rai) advanced a claim in respect to the succession. At this time Jagannath Sahi Deo was the Maharaja and Zemindar of Chota Nagpur. Arrears of rent had fallen due in respect of Bundu, and he appears to have instituted proceedings in the Collectorate for recovery of his rent. In the course of these proceedings a sazawal or curator was appointed to take charge of the property. The order relating to the attachment of Pargana Bundu and the appointment of the Tahsildar as curator bears date of the 23rd of August 1847.

On the 26th July 1848, Kanchan Lal applied to the Civil Court presided over by the Agent of the Governor-General, complaining that the sazawal had ousted the Petitioner from some lands granted by a former jagirdar of Bundu for maintenance. The order of the Civil Court on this petition is important. It shows the exact nature of Pargana Bundu in relation to the Zemindar :—

"The Rajah of Pargana Bundu died without issue; and now a sazawal is appointed by Government in the said Pargana and it is not known what settlement the Maharaja of Palkot [Chota Nagpur] has made with respect to Pargana Bundu; because in accordance with the Sanad and Pottah of the said Maharaja, the Maharaja can make over the Pargana to any body who may be found entitled after the death of Rajah Haridas Ray, Zemindar of Bundu, and with respect thereto the Maharaja has power to resume the said Pargana if he finds no body entitled to Pargana Bundu, upon giving notice, and with the sanction of the Assistant Agent at Lohardaga. Thereafter any person who may think himself entitled is at liberty to institute a civil suit. Therefore it is ordered that a Parwana be issued to Maharaja Jagannath Sahi Deo, Zemindar of the Parganas of Chota Nagpur, containing the matters above-mentioned, with a request to forward a receipt of the Parwana to His Honour and a copy of this proceeding be forwarded for information to the Personal Assistant of District Lohardaga."

SRINATH RAI v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO.

Three years earlier, in a proceeding of the 26th of December 1845, the Agent to the Governor-General, acting as the Civil Court, had, in connection with Pargana Rahi, pointed out that the Maharaja "could resume the jagir by giving information to and receiving permission from the authorities in the event of the lessee dying without issue." The adoption of this procedure was re-affirmed on the 26th July 1848. The Zemindar was debarred from acting capriciously or arbitrarily; he could only exercise his right with the knowledge and sanction of the authorities. And Jagannath Sahi appears to have adhered to the procedure prescribed by the Government officers.

Out of the two claimants, who had come forward for the possession of Pargana Bundu, he selected Basdeo, and installed him as Raja or jagirdar. To mark Basdeo's installation the Maharaja affixed the Tilak on his forehead. This was the undisputed right of the over-lord.

On the 28th of February 1849, Basdeo reported to the District Officers the fact of his installation and of receiving the Tilak.

On the 29th of May 1849, the Maharaja filed by his mukhtars (agents) an application in the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner for the discharge of the sazawal and the issue of the usual Parwana (warrant) to Basdeo to take possession of the jagir.

This document, Ex. I, is headed thus:—Application for issue of Parwana to Raja Basudev Ray.

After stating that Raja Haridas Ray, "Elaqadar of the villages of Bundu," had died "without leaving any male issue and leaving him surviving his widows," it proceeds thus:—

"Your Petitioner's client [meaning the Maharaja] wanted, in accordance with the custom and practice in his Zemindari, to resume direct possession of the villages of the deceased Raja. Then unexpectedly the Ranis of the deceased Raja reported to the Agent to the Governor-General and to the Commissioner and the former Assistant Agent of District Lohardaga and to your Petitioner's client that the senior Rani was pregnant, and prayed that in expectation of a child being born the property might be left in their possession. In accordance with their prayer, the settlement of the Pargana, possessed by the deceased Raja, was kept in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a child of the said Rani"

It then mentions the fact of attachment and the appointment of the sazawal and gives the substance of the Parwana to the Maharaja issued by the Agent to the Governor-General enquiring as to what settlement he had made "in respect of the said pargana because in accordance with your Sanad and Patta if after the death of Raja Haridas Ray, Zemindar of Bundu, the title devolves on no one, you can resume direct possession thereof."

It then goes on to state that although Basdeo had no title,

"'in accordance with Patta and the usage of the Zemindari,' still your Petitioner's client being pleased with the service of the said Lal, with a view to promote cultivation and happiness of the people, on approving the application of the said Lal for the grant of Tilak of Raj of the entire Pargana Bundu, excluding four Mauzas, viz., Kanchi. etc., retained by him for Khalsa Bhandar, granted the rest of the Mauzas of the said Pargana, fixing an annual rent of cash Rs. 1,000 exclusive of Abwabs, subject to service, and then gave him the Rajgi Tilak of the said Pargana, and after taking Kabuliat Ekrarnama for the maintenance of the Ranis which the said Raja has undertaken, and then a Patta of Jagir, conditional upon service, was granted to him by your Petitioner's client."

The Maharaja's application then continues:—

"as it is not now necessary for the sazawal to remain in Pargana Bundu, because the said Raja will from 1906 Sambat, under the terms of the Kabuliat and Ekrarnama, render services, pay the fixed rent and maintain the Ranis, it is prayed that in accordance with the proceedings of the Agent to the Governor-General and of the Commissioner, dated the 26th July, 1848, an order may be passed for the removal of the sazawal; in view of the order of release, a Parwana may be issued to Basdeo Rai, directing him to proceed to the villages."

As already stated, the petition on behalf of the Maharaja was presented on the 29th of May 1849. On the 6th of June 1849, Basdeo's agent filed a similar petition stating that he (Basdeo) had obtained a settlement from the Maharaja and received from him the Tilak of installation. It then goes on to state that the Maharaja :—

"upon fixing a rent of Co.'s Rs. 1,000 per annum, granted to him a Nagbast Patta conferring upon him the title of Raja, on the 11th Phagun, 1905 Sambat, and granted to him Patta and Amalnama, which are forthcoming. At present Pargana Bundu, being attached on account of arrears of rent due, the Maharaja Saheb collections are made therefrom through the Government sazawal. Whereas the Maharaja Saheb's rent has been wholly and fully paid, and so a petition on the part of the Maharaja has been submitted to Your Honour praying for the discharge of the sazawal and for the release of Pargana Bundu, attached on account of rent, and stating that he had invested (my client) with the Rajgi Tilak."

He also prayed for the release of the Pargana from attachment.

The settlement with Basdeo shows that the rent was increased from Rs. 735 to Rs. 1,000, four villages were taken out of the Pargana and set apart for the maintenance of Haridas' widows and a new patta was granted to him by the Maharaja and a new Parwana was issued to him at the Zemindar's instance for possession of the jagir. In face of these facts it is idle to contend that the settlement with Basdeo was a continuance of the old tenure. Had Basdeo succeeded to the jagir by right of inheritance the maintenance of the Ranis, the widows, would have devolved exclusively on him, and the superior landlord would have had no concern with it or the right to take away any part of the property to provide for their maintenance. The Maharaja's interference on behalf of the widows is explainable only on one hypothesis, viz., that he was making a new arrangement by virtue of a right recognised by the authorities. And the grant of the Parwana to Basdeo, together with the withdrawal of the attachment, signified their approval; nor was any exception taken to the increase of the jama.

One more remark on this part of the case seems necessary. In the grant to Basdeo the jagir is specifically mentioned as a "service tenure," involving the performance of police and other duties. They could hardly have been newly imposed, as they would at once have attracted the notice of the Governor-General's Agent when the pottah was produced before him and would have led to investigation and comment. It is abundantly clear, therefore, that the jagir, minus four villages, was settled with Basdeo in 1849 on an increased rental.

There seems to be some confusion as to the meaning of the word "resumption" in connection with these tenures. It does not mean that on failure of the direct male line it "escheats" to the Zemindar and becomes what is called his sir or khas property: the jagir retains its character, but the Zemindar becomes entitled to make a new settlement with the knowledge and sanction of the authorities.

In the record-of-rights proceedings the Settlement Officer scrupulously and carefully analysed the evidence in the presence of the Plaintiffs, and came to the conclusion embodied in the entry impugned in this suit as erroneous. Under sec. 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the Plaintiffs appealed to the Board of Revenue against Mr. Lister's decision. The Board of Revenue, after a remand for the purpose of taking further evidence, in a remarkably well-balanced, judgment, held that the Plaintiffs had utterly failed to establish their contentions. In the present suit the High Court, on appeal from the Subordinate Judge, examined the evidence with great care and came to a conclusion adverse to them.

Their Lordships have given every attention to the arguments of Counsel for the Appellants; they find absolutely no ground for interfering with the decree of the High Court. They consider that this appeal should be dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Respondent will be entitled to the costs of this appeal.

Court and if the Plaintiffs did not take proper steps for executing the decree, it cannot be said that there was a tenancy created in favour of both the persons. So there was a tenancy in favour of one of the persons in whose name the lease was executed, and such tenancy could be determined by the notice on him alone.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of August 1920 against the decree of Babu Tej Chandra Mitra, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Khulna, dated the 30th of June 1920, reversing the decree of Babu Nagendra Nath Bhattacharjya, Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 30th of April 1919.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter for the Appellant.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment of the Defendant who is the Appellant before us after service of notice to quit.

It appears that in 1901, the Plaintiffs' father brought a suit for ejectment against the Appellant Pitambar and his brother Digambar from the disputed land and obtained a decree for khas possession upon a solenama. In 1904, Pitambar and his brother Digambar instituted a suit against the Plaintiffs for specific performance of the contract, alleging that at the time of the solenama there was an agreement between the parties that the Plaintiffs would grant a lease of the lands to them. The suit was decreed and the Plaintiffs in the present case were given two months' time to execute a registered lease and make it over to the Defendants and it was directed that in default thereof, the lands would be measured on the Defendant's application for the purpose and that a patta on the terms mentioned in the judgment would be prepared and executed by the Court on the Defendant's depositing the necessary stamp and costs of registration. In execution of the decree, the land was measured and the rent also was fixed but the lease was not executed. It is stated that a patta was drawn up in favour of Pitambar alone but it was not registered. The Defendant or his brother did not take any further steps in the matter and the execution case was struck off.

The Plaintiffs served a notice under sec. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act upon Pitambar alone and then brought this suit for ejectment.

The defence inter alia was that there was a tenancy in favour of both Pitambar and Digambar, that the notice to quit having been served upon Pitambar alone was not sufficient in law to determine the tenancy and that the Plaintiffs' suit must therefore fail.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal that decree was reversed and the Defendant has appealed to this Court.

Now, Pitambar was the only tenant recognised by the Plaintiffs. Although no patta has been executed in his favour nor any rent received from him, he was treated as a tenant in the notice to quit that was served upon him. The notice to quit (if he was the sole tenant) was a good one and was properly served. That being so, and the interest of Pitambar being only that of an under-raiyat, the

PITAMBAR GAIN v. RAM CHARAN MORAL.

Plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for ejectment.

The ground, however, upon which the right of the Plaintiffs to eject is contested by the Defendant is that there was a tenancy created not only in favour of Pitambar but also in favour of his brother Digambar, and that tenancy could not be said to have been determined by a notice to quit served on Pitambar alone.

The Plaintiffs alleged that after the decree for specific performance had been passed, Digambar left the village and was residing in a different place and that in fact he abandoned the land.

The Court of first instance was of opinion that there was no abandonment.

The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal found "Digambar went to live elsewhere and consequently the Plaintiffs' predecessor could only execute a patta in favour of the Defendant. But the execution case having been dismissed in the meantime, the patta was not delivered to the Defendant."

The learned Subordinate Judge has not clearly found that there was an abandonment by Digambar, and it is accordingly contended on behalf of the Appellant that the fact that there was an agreement coupled with the fact that Pitambar and Digambar were in possession shows that there was a tenancy created and that on the principle of the case of Walsh v. Lonsdale (1), the Plaintiffs are precluded from saying that both the brothers were tenants. The principle is that, if there is an agreement to grant a lease and the intended lessee takes possession thereunder, though the requisite legal document has not been executed and registered, the parties are in the same position as if the document has been executed provided specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement. The principle has been followed in a large number of cases in this country, which are noticed in the case of Shyamkisore Dey v. Umesh Chunder Bhattacharyya (2).

In the present case, there is no doubt that there was an agreement to grant a lease and that the Defendants were in possession from before the agreement. It is contended that the fact that they were allowed to continue in possession was sufficient to show that there was part performance: and there are some decided cases in which the principle was applied when the lessee was in possession from before the agreement.

It is pointed out in Redman's "Law of Landlord and Tenant," 7th Ed., p. 211, that ordinarily, when the tenant is in possession at the date of the parole agreement, merely continuing in possession does not of itself amount to part performance. But where the possession commences before the agreement but continues after the agreement has been entered into but with unequivocal reference to the agreement, such possession might be considered as part performance.

In the two cases, viz., Shafikul Huq Chowdhury v. Krishna Gobinda Dutt (3) and Shyamkisore Dey v. Umesh Chunder Bhattacharyya (2), the party who relied upon the doctrine of part performance was allowed to continue in possession; and after he had been for several years in possession, the other party brought a suit for possession on the ground that there was no deed of transfer. Although at the time when the suit was brought, any suit for specific performance by the party in possession would have been barred, the learned Judges held that having lulled the party into security or partial security who might otherwise have at any time claimed specific performance of the agreement, the Opposite Party should not be allowed to raise the question of limitation.

In other cases also, the question of limitation was got over on the ground that in cases where no definite period for specific performance of the contract had been fixed, the period of limitation would run from the date when the performance was refused and that therefore in such cases the suit would be in time even if instituted after a long period so long as the Defendants were in possession. We think, however, that these principles cannot apply to the facts of the present case.

Here, a suit for specific performance was instituted. It was decreed and in execution some of the matters were settled. The principle upon which the case of Walsh v. Lonsdale (1) and the cases which followed it were decided, is that the party in possession could have got specific performance of the contract if he had sued upon the agreement. As stated above an exception was made in cases where no definite period was fixed for performance of the agreement, or where the party had been lulled into security. But in the present case a suit for specific performance of the contract had already been brought and a decree obtained. The matter therefore did not thenceforth rest with the parties nor could any question of equities arise from the acts or conduct of the parties. After the decree, the matter came into the hands of the Court and if the Plaintiff did not take proper steps for executing the decree, he cannot rely upon the principle of the cases cited above. The execution of the decree was barred by limitation at the date of the present suit. That being so, it cannot be held that there was a tenancy created in favour of both Pitambar and Digambar: and if there was a tenancy in favour of Pitambar alone, such tenancy was determined by the notice to quit.

In these circumstances, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Judgment, 21, August.

SUPDT. AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL, Appellant,
v.
MANMATHA BHUSAN CHATTERJEE and ors., Respondents.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 420—Taking of wagons to a colliery siding for loading by the colliery, if amounts to delivery of property to the colliery to constitute cheating—Sec 415, cheating by causing damage, if involves fraud or dishonesty—"Cause damage," if presupposes wilful deceit on the part of the accused or that the damage should be direct result of the deceit—Unauthorised or dishonest allotment of excess wagons by a subordinate clerk, if causes or is likely to cause any appreciable damage to a Railway Company's reputation—Charge of conspiracy based on suspicion, propriety of.

Certain clerks of the E. I. Ry. by false manipulation of the ledgers and by making unauthorised entries in other documents, procured the supply to a particular colliery of more wagons than the colliery was entitled to under the letters of authorization issued by the Government Coal Transport Officer under the Defence of India Act and Regulations, and were convicted on charges under sec. 420, I. P. C. for cheating the East India Railway by fraudulently and dishonestly inducing the Company to deliver more wagons to the colliery siding for carriage of coal, and under sec. 417, I. P. C. for cheating the Company by intentionally inducing the Company to supply more wagons than the colliery was entitled to and thereby causing damage to the reputation of the Company:

Held—That the taking of the wagons to the colliery siding in order that they might be loaded by the colliery with coal was not a delivery of property to the colliery within the definition of cheating, as the sidings belonged to the Railway Company and therefore the wagons never left the Railway land. Property is delivered when something in the ownership or possession of one man is delivered into the ownership or possession of another, and the amount of control exercised by the colliery in loading the wagons is of a very limited character.

R. v. Kilham (2) and R. v. Chapman (3) referred to.

Held, further—That regarding cheating committed by causing damage, the offence does not necessarily involve fraud or dishonesty. It does not appear to be necessary that the resulting damage or likelihood of damage should be within the actual contemplation of the accused when the deceit is practised, but the person deceived must have acted under the influence of the deceit, the facts must establish damage or likelihood of the damage complained of, and the damage must not be too remote. The word "cause" doubtless excludes damage occurring as a mere fortuitous sequence, unconnected with the act induced by the deceit, except as every event is connected with preceding events in an unending chain. The definition, however, is wide enough to include all damage resulting or likely to result as a natural consequence of the induced act.

Ramanath v. King-Emperor (4), Milton v. Sherman (5), Baburam Rai v. Emperor (6), Mojey v. Queen-Empress (7), Kishori Lal Chatterji v. Emperor (8) and Mahadev v. Dhonraj (9) referred to.

But the allotment of the excess wagons to one colliery did not cause or was not likely to cause any appreciable damage to the Railway Company's 'reputation.' The damage here complained of was too remote and was indirect and ulterior rather than direct, natural or probable consequence of the action which the Company was deceived into taking. In a case of the present description it was rather in the region of property than in that of mind and reputation that the natural and probable consequence should be looked for. In this case there was no more reason to say that the Company's reputation for impartiality suffered than to say that their reputation for efficiency of supervision suffered. In the case of a great Railway Company no reasonable person would suppose that the Company or the head officers or managers of the Company were parties to or connived at the special favour shown to one colliery. Error of this kind may occur in all business which is done on a large scale and a margin would be allowed for in judging of the conduct of the business.

The charge of conspiracy in so far as it was based mainly on suspicion of bribery was unsustainable as bribery had to be proved, and the charge should not rest on suspicion only.

This was an appeal preferred against the order of P. E. Campniade, Esq., Sessions Judge of Zilla Burdwan, dated the 7th June 1922.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

The Advocate-General (Mr. S. R. Das), Mr. Camel and Babu Ambikapada Chowdhury for the Crown.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Lalit Mohon Sanyal for the Defendant No. 1 in App. No. 4 and Defendant No. 3 in App. No. 5.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Debendra Narayan Bhattacharjee, Lalit Mohon Sanyal and Subodh Ch. Lahiri for the Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 in App. No. 5.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

RICHARDSON, J.—The four accused were tried by the Magistrate of Asansol on two charges imputing criminal conspiracy to cheat the East Indian Railway Co. The charges were laid under sec. 420 read with sec. 120B and under sec. 417 read with sec. 120B of the Penal Code. That is to say, on the same evidence the accused were charged with conspiring to cheat the East Indian Railway Co. in each of the two ways defined in sec. 415. The Magistrate convicted the accused on both charges but passed sentence only under the charge which refers to sec. 420B. He sentenced all the accused to imprisonment till the rising of the Court. In addition he imposed on the accused Biseswar and Manmatha a fine of Rs 300 each and on Ramdin Lal and Hriday Narain a fine of Rs. 500 each.

On appeal to the Sessions Judge of Burdwan, the convictions and sentences were set aside and the accused were acquitted.

We have now to deal with an appeal by the Local Government from the Sessions Judge's judgment of acquittal.

The charges relate to the period between February and May 1920, during which the supply of Railway wagons for the transport of coal was strictly controlled and regulated by Government under the Defence of India Act and Regulations. The number of wagons to which a colliery was entitled for the supply of coal to a particular consignee was fixed by a Government Officer, known as the Coal Transport Officer (C. T. O.), and under the Regulations no colliery could obtain and the Railway could not supply to any colliery more wagons than the number so fixed. The distribution of wagons depended in the first instance on a division of the purposes for which coal was required into five classes in order of preference as follows:—

1. R. I. B., for the Royal Indian Marine.

2. Loco., for Railway purposes.

3. Super X, for essential industries.

4. X, for the more favoured mills and factories.

5. Public, for private consumption and the smaller industries.

The demands for wagons was dealt with on the principle that the needs of a superior class must be met in priority to those of any inferior class. While, therefore, Government control nominally extended only to the first four classes, it was not till the wagons required for those classes had been provided that the Railway could make any wagons available for the public class. In the present case we are mainly concerned with wagons required for the purposes denominated X.

In order to understand the charges, some account, as brief as possible, is necessary of the complicated machinery by which control was maintained.

A consumer, having contracted with a colliery for the purchase of coal, had to apply to the C. T. O. for the requisite number of wagons, stating the purpose for which the coal was required and the name of the colliery. The C. T. O. might refuse the application or sanction the supply of such number of wagons as he thought fit. The number might be fixed once for all, say six wagons, or it might be so many wagons periodically, as one daily or 4 weekly. If wagons were sanctioned, a copy of the sanction was sent to the Coal Manager of the East Indian Railway in Calcutta and a copy also to the Manager of the colliery and to the consumer. The Coal Manager then intimated the sanction to the District Traffic Superintendent (D. T. S.) at Asansol by a letter, called the letter of authorization, of which again a copy was forwarded to the colliery.

In the office of the D. T. S., there were clerks called "checkers" who dealt with different areas or sections served by the Railway. On the receipt of a letter of authorization it was the duty of the checker concerned to enter such details as the following in a "special ledger," the date of the entry, the class (e.g., X), the number of wagons sanctioned, the name of the colliery, and the date and number of the letter of authorization.

On the strength of their copy of the letter of authorization the colliery became entitled to indent on the D. T. S. for the number of wagons sanctioned. On receipt of the indent it was the checker's duty to compare it with the entries in the "special ledger." If he found the indent in order he made a note upon it himself showing how many wagons the indentor was entitled to.

It was the daily duty of the D. T. S. to distribute the available wagons between the different classes. This he did by an order fixing the percentage of the demand for an inferior class which could be complied with. If he allowed, say 50 per cent. of the demand for X class, each indentor for wagons for that class would receive half his sanctioned number, of course, omitting fractions.

Thus, when the indent from the colliery which we are trying to follow, passed from the checker to another clerk called the "poster," it was the latter's duty—a purely mechanical one—to enter in a form called the Indent Allotment Sheet the number of wagons to be allotted in full or partial compliance with the indent, as the case might be, according to the percentage order of the D. T. S. This sheet might of course show the allotments made to more than one colliery.

From the Allotment Sheet other documents were prepared—

(1) the Pilot Guard's Memo. by one clerk,

(2) the Wagon Chalan for each colliery by another clerk, and

(3) the Special Supply Statement by a third clerk.

The Pilot Guard's Memo. and the Wagon Chalans were both made over to the Pilot Guard. The Wagon Chalans which showed the number of wagons allotted and the class were made over by the Pilot Guard to the named collieries when the wagons were taken to the colliery sidings. In the result, therefore, the Wagon Chalan corresponding to any particular indent became the authority which entitled the colliery to load the allotted wagons with coal.

The Special Supply Statement went first to the weigh bridge X clerk who entered upon it the identification numbers of the wagons to be supplied to each colliery. Having done so the statement went to the checker in the office of the D. T. S., who then entered in his Special Ledger the actual number of wagons supplied to each colliery in his section. It was the checker's duty to keep count of the balance, if any, still due under the relative letter of authorization and so to check subsequent indents referring to that letter. The colliery, as I gather, might go on indenting till the full number authorized had been supplied.

The whole process of allotment would seem generally to have been carried out on the day the indents were received, the wagons being taken to the sidings on the following day.

Having outlined the course of business, I return to the accused. Manmatha and Biseswar were checkers in the office of the D. T. S. at Asansol. Manmatha was in charge of the down Asansol Pilot section and Biseswar of another section. Ram Din Lal was the Manager of the B. P. Singh Colliery within Manmatha's section. Hriday Narain was a broker or intermediary standing between the colliery and consumers.

So far there is no dispute but I now come to the controversial part of the case. At the trial evidence was led to show the part which each of the accused played in the alleged criminal conspiracy. On that evidence the Courts below came to substantially the same conclusions of fact. They differed as to the result. The learned Sessions Judge, overruling the learned Magistrate, held that the facts found did not disclose the offences charged. The accused make no admissions as to the facts and the appeal before us has so far been argued with reference only to the questions, mainly, questions of law, arising out of the difference of opinion between the two Courts. For the purposes of the present discussion, therefore, we assume, without deciding that the facts have been correctly found by those Courts.

To simplify matters, I will deal mainly with the cases of Manmatha and Ram Din Lal. As against Manmatha, it is found that in various ways, by manipulating his Special Ledger, or by making unauthorized entries in other documents, he procured the supply to the B. P. Singh Colliery of more wagons than the colliery was entitled to under three letters of authorization issued by the C. T. O. to three different consumers. Without entering into unnecessary details it is found that in one or more instances Manmatha

(1) altered the original entries in his ledger relating to a letter of authorization so as to increase the supply authorized by the C. T. O., e.g., by substituting two wagons daily for two weekly, the number actually authorized,

(2) altered the original entries as in (1) and supported the alteration by adding a reference to a fictitious or non-existent letter of authorization, to which a false number and date were assigned,

(3) passed an indent for wagons in excess of the number actually authorized,

(4) interpolated in the Allotment Sheet, with which he had no business to meddle, an entry showing wagons allotted to the colliery which had not in fact been allotted,

(5) altered the class for which the supply of wagons was authorized by changing X into super X,

(6) omitted to post in his Special Ledger wagons actually allotted and supplied.

It is found that Ram Din Lal, the Manager of the colliery, must have been in league with Manmatha, or otherwise he would not have submitted indents for wagons in excess of the number specified in the letters of authorization of which in the ordinary course he had received copies.

As regards the checker Biseswar, it is found that in several instances he cooperated with Manmatha in procuring unauthorized wagons for the colliery. It is also found that the broker Hriday Narain was a party to the conspiracy.

On these findings it is contended for the Crown that the accused, more especially Manmatha and Ram Din Lal, were rightly convicted by the Magistrate under both the charges.

The charges run as follows :—

(1) "That you . . . . conspired with each other and other persons unknown to cheat the East Indian Railway by deceiving the said Railway and by fraudulently and dishonestly inducing the same Company to deliver through the office of the D. T. S., Asansol to B. P. Singh Kalipahari Colliery for the carriage of coal or soft coke a larger number of wagons the property of the E. I. R. than the said colliery was entitled to receive and thereby committed an offence punishable under secs. 420/120B of the Indian Penal Code."

(2) "That you . . . . . conspired with each other and other persons unknown to cheat the E. I. R. Co. by deceiving the said Railway and so intentionally inducing the same Company to supply through the office of the D. T. S., Asansol to B. P. Singh Kalipahari Colliery for the carriage of coal and soft coke a larger number of wagons than the said colliery was entitled to receive and which the said Railway would not do (sic) if not so deceived and which would cause or was likely to cause damage or harm to the said Railway in its reputation and thereby committed an offence punishable under secs. 417/120B of the Indian Penal Code."

There is no doubt about the existence of a criminal conspiracy as defined in sec. 120A of the Code provided the overt acts committed by the two checkers amount to cheating. But before considering the definition of that offence in sec. 415, there are one or two preliminary observations to be made.

In the first place, I have no doubt that this prosecution was launched because the authorities of the East Indian Railway Co. strongly suspect that the checkers, Manmatha and Biseswar, were bribed by the colliery. If the facts have been correctly found, I sympathize largely both with this suspicion and with the desire that the parties concerned should be brought to book. Bribery and corruption and underhand practices of all kinds are constant enemies to civil progress. But it has still to be stated that bribery is not proved. It is conceded for the Crown that there is no tangible evidence of money passing from the colliery to the checkers and that so far the case rests on suspicion only. The observation, it is hardly necessary to add, does not excuse the accused if their proved acts constitute an offence under the Code.

Secondly, it is not suggested that the conduct of the accused caused any loss of money to the East Indian Railway Company. The colliery paid for the use of the wagons supplied to them at the usual rates. The Railway Company therefore was not defrauded. But a fraud was committed upon the Defence of India Act and Regulations and it was also argued for the Crown that the conduct of the checkers was dishonest in the sense that they intended to procure some wrongful gain or advantage for the B. P. Singh Colliery at the expense of other collieries. No point was made for the defence in this connection and for the purpose of the first charge, I will take it that on the facts found the checkers acted fraudulently or dishonestly or both fraudulently and dishonestly as those words are used in the Code.

Thirdly, as to the frame of the charges, so far as they speak of the East Indian Railway being cheated, Mr. Sanyal for the defence took the exception that an inanimate object cannot be cheated or have reputation. But the charges also refer to the Company and, however loose the language may be, no one could have supposed that the expression "East Indian Railway" meant the lines of rail and not the Company. Further, we were told, and I will assume that there is evidence on the record, which, if accepted, shows that responsible officers of the Company in its Asansol Office were deceived and induced either to allot wagons to the B. P. Singh Colliery which would not otherwise have been allotted or to make out Wagon Chalans for the colliery which would not otherwise have been made out. If that be so, the evidence is sufficient to support the allegations in the charges that the Railway Company was by reason of deceit induced to act in a certain way. A corporation, such as a Railway Company, is an artificial person, and its acts are those of the agents who act for it and in its name. It would, however, have been more regular if the charges had been specific in this respect. [See Billinghurst v. Blackburn (1)].

I come now to the two forms of cheating defined in sec. 415. They are as follows :—

(1) "Whoever by deceiving any person fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person . . . . . is said to cheat."

(2) "Whoever by deceiving any person . . . . intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he was not so deceived, and which act or omission causes, or is likely to cause, damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property, is said to cheat."

In the first of these forms cheating is punishable under sec. 420 which says: "Whoever cheats and thereby dishonestly induces the person deceived to deliver any property to any person . . . . shall be punished with imprisonment, etc."

In the second form the offence is punishable under the more general sec. 417—"whoever cheats shall be punished with imprisonment, etc."

As to the charge which assigns cheating in the first form, the question principally discussed was whether the taking of the wagons to the colliery siding in order that they might be loaded by the colliery with coal was a delivery of property to the colliery within the meaning of the definition.

As to the colliery siding, there is no evidence that it belongs to the colliery; on the contrary the evidence is that several collieries may use the same siding. In that state of the record we must, I think, assume that the colliery sidings belong to the Railway Company and not to the collieries. It follows that the wagons never leave railway land.

Property, as it appears to me, is delivered when something in the ownership or possession of one man is delivered into the ownership or possession of another. Railway wagons are no doubt "property." They are the property of the Railway Company. In my opinion, however, they are not as property delivered to a colliery merely by being taken to the colliery siding. No doubt the colliery is entitled to load the wagons but the amount of control exercised for that purpose seems to be of a very limited character. It is said that collieries sometimes exchange wagons but the evidence on this point is unsatisfactory and it is certainly not shown that the practice if it exists at all is authorised. On the materials available, I am unable to say that the wagons ever go out of the possession and control of the Railway Company.

Though some reference was made in the argument to R. v. Kilham (2), [cf. R. v. Chapman (3)] we have not considered whether the delivery of the Wagon Chalans to the colliery amounted to a delivery of property within the meaning of the section. The case against the accused has not been put or investigated in the Courts below on that basis. The charge says that wagons, the property of the Railway Company, were delivered to the colliery. In my opinion the charge so framed is not substantiated and the accused are entitled to an acquittal upon it.

There remains the charge of cheating in the second form. In that form the offence does not necessarily involve fraud or dishonesty. The words of the definition are undoubtedly wide and if pushed to the full limit of their meaning might embrace acts which the man in the street would hardly regard as criminal offences. That observation, however, raises a question of the appropriate punishment in the particular case rather than of construction.

Cl. 392 of Lord Macaulay's draft corresponds to the first part of sec. 415. The second part would appear to have been added at some later date after the Code had left his hands and the hands of the Indian Law Commissioners. The illustrations throw no light on what is meant by damage or harm in body, mind or reputation and so far as such damage is concerned the offence is not very appropriately placed in the chapter of the Code relating to offences against property. The essence of the offence would seem to lie in the possibility of damage or harm being caused in the said respects or in property. Generally speaking, a criminal offence consists of an act done by the accused with a specific criminal intent or state of mind, constituting the mens rea. Difficulties connected with the notion of causation, common enough in other branches of the law, such as tort, seldom arise. It is true that negligence is sometimes punishable as an offence because it causes or is likely to cause hurt or injury to another (cf. secs. 279 and 280 and 284-289 of the Code). But cheating in the second form has this additional peculiarity. The damage is to be caused by the person deceived to himself. Indirectly it may be, the damage is to result from the deceit, but immediately it is to result from the induced act of the person deceived. This no doubt explains why the word "injury," defined in sec. 44 of the Code as "any harm whatever illegally caused to any person in body, mind, reputation or property," was not employed in sec. 415.

It does not appear to be necessary that the resulting damage or likelihood of damage should have been within the actual contemplation of the accused when the deceit was practised. But authorities in this Court lay down—

(1) that the person deceived must have acted under the influence of the deceit, Ramanath v. King-Emperor (4) and Milton v. Sherman (5);

(2) that the facts must establish damage or likelihood of damage, Baburam Rai v. Emperor (6);

(2) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 261 (1870).
(3) 4 Cr. App. Rep. 276 (1910).
(4) 2 C. L. J. 524 (1905).
(5) 22 C. W. N. 1001 (1918).
(6) I. L. R. 32 Cal. 775 (1905).

and, (3) that the damage must not be too remote, Mojey v. Queen-Empress (7), Kishori Lal Chatterji v. Emperor (8) and Mahadev v. Dhonraj (9).

On the point of remoteness of damage, there seems no sound reason why a definition which presupposes wilful deceit on the part of the accused should be too narrowly interpreted. The word "cause" doubtless excludes damage occurring as a mere fortuitous sequence, unconnected with the act induced by the deceit, except as every event is connected with preceding events in an unending chain. On the other hand, the definition, as it stands, is wide enough to include all damage resulting or likely to result as a natural consequence of the induced act. In Mojey's case (7), however, the learned Judges said:—"We think that the damage or harm must be the necessary consequence of the act done by reason of the deceit practised, or must be necessarily likely to follow therefrom." I take it that these expressions mean at their lowest that the damage must be the direct, natural or probable consequence of the induced act.

In the present case, there is no question on the facts found that the act of the Railway Company in allotting an excessive or disproportionate number of wagons to the B. P. Singh Colliery was induced by the deceit practised by the accused or some of them. The difficulty is as to the element of damage.

A corporation cannot well suffer damage in mind or body and the charge maintains that the Railway Company suffered damage not in property but in reputation. I will concede that an incorporated Company may have a reputation for the good conduct of the business or undertaking of the Company and that the Company's reputation may be quite distinct from that of any of its officers, however highly placed. Under the definition, however, it is clearly not sufficient to say that the mal-practices of the two checkers brought or tended to bring the administration of the Company into discredit. The question is whether the allotment of the excess wagons to one colliery caused or was likely to cause, within the meaning of the definition, damage to the Company in reputation. It was argued very plausibly for the Crown that under the Indian Railways Act, 1890, sec. 42 (2), "a Railway administration shall not make or give any undue or unreasonable preference to, or in favour of, any particular person," that the East Indian Railway Company sets great store on its reputation for impartiality and that this reputation was affected or endangered by the allotment of the wagons. I will not say positively that the Railway Company suffered no damage to its reputation but in view of the authorities I am disposed to conclude that this damage was too remote. It appears to me that the damage here complained of is indirect and ulterior rather than the direct, natural or probable consequence of the action which the Company was deceived into taking. The direct consequence of one colliery getting more than their fair share of wagons is that other collieries must suffer the disadvantage of getting less than their fair share. If it be said that a suit might have been brought against the Company for damages for undue preference, such a possibility under sec. 415 would come under the head of damage or likelihood of damage to property and not of damage to reputation. A charge alleging damage or likelihood of damage to property would, I think, have been easier to support than the charge framed. For in my opinion in a case of the present description it is rather in the region of property than in that of mind and reputation that the natural and probable consequences should be looked for.

There is another aspect of the matter which ought not to be neglected. We are dealing with a criminal charge and the evidence adduced and the circumstances disclosed should be sufficient to satisfy the Court or a Jury that the damage complained of was caused or was likely to be caused. In this case is there any more reason to say that the Company's reputation for impartiality suffered than to say that their reputation for efficiency of supervision suffered? We are dealing with a great Railway Company. Would any reasonable person suppose that the Company or the head officers or managers of the Company in Calcutta were parties to or connived at the special favour shown to the B. P. Singh Colliery? The general feeling would, I think, be that if a complaint were made to the Company, the Company would do its best to mend matters. The act of the Company would be attributed to mistake due to carelessness or pressure of business or, as the allegation here is, to the Company being misled by its subordinate staff. Error of this kind may occur in all business which is done on a large scale and a margin would be allowed for in judging of the conduct of the business.

Our attention was directed at any rate to some part of the evidence adduced bearing on the alleged injury to the Company's reputation. We were told that two articles appeared in the newspaper "Commerce" but they were not placed before us. We were shown an anonymous letter received in the Calcutta Office. The oral evidence consisting of the opinions of certain witnesses on the subject is of more than doubtful admissibility. Without some further examination of the materials on the record and further argument, I should hesitate to assert that the allotment of the excess wagons to the B. P. Singh Colliery caused or was likely to cause any appreciable damage to the Company's reputation.

On the whole I come to the conclusion that the Sessions Judge was right in acquitting the accused on both charges.

It was said in argument that it was difficult to make dishonest clerks account for their actions. If a state of things exists which imperils the due administration of the Railway Company, it would not, I think, be beyond the resources of the legislature to devise a remedy. [Cf. Sage v. Eicholz (10) and sec. 477A of the Penal Code.]

In the result I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal No. 4 is governed by similar consideration and must also be dismissed.

THE KING-EMPEROR
v.
BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

Judge's directions to jury—Accused charged under secs. 302 and 394, Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Sec. 34, "criminal act done by several persons," meaning of—Secs. 33, 35, 37, 38, 107, 108, 109, 120A, 114 and 149 considered—Judge's duty to put accused's case before jury, limitations of—Non-direction, when amounts to mis-direction—Calcutta High Court's Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 26, powers of Full Bench under—Duty of Advocate-General to consult prosecution and defence lawyers before granting certificate under cl. 26—Duty of defence counsel when he believes accused guilty—Propriety of consulting trial Judge—Shorthand notes of proceedings at Sessions trials, desirability of—Judge's statement as to what happened in Court, if may be questioned.

Accused was tried at the High Court, Criminal Sessions, Calcutta, by a Judge and a special jury on a charge of offences punishable under secs. 302 and 394 of the Indian Penal Code. He pleaded "guilty" to the charge under sec. 394 and not guilty to the charge under sec. 302. The jury brought a verdict of "guilty" of murder with the result that he was convicted and sentenced under sec. 302. The Advocate-General granted a certificate under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. It was contended at the hearing of the reference under cl. 26 that the trial Judge had misdirected the jury on a point of law and had also misdirected them in so far as he had omitted to draw their attention to the defence of the accused save and except a mere reference to the statement made by him. The material portions of the Judge's charge were as follows:—

"Therefore in this case if these persons went to that place with a common intention to rob the Post Master, and if necessary, to kill him, and if death resulted, each of them is liable, whichever of the three fired the fatal shot.

"If you come to the conclusion that these three or four persons came into the Post Office with that intention to rob, and if necessary, to kill, and if death resulted from their act, if that be so, you are bound to find a verdict of guilty.

"I say if you doubt that it was the pistol of the accused which fired the fatal shot, that does not matter. If you are satisfied on the other hand that the shot was fired by one of those persons in furtherance of this common intention, if that be so, then it is your duty to find a verdict of guilty:"

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an application for review of a criminal case on the certificate of the Advocate-General under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. The Petitioner Barendra Kumar Ghose was tried on the 16th and 17th August at the fourth Criminal Sessions of this year by Mr. Justice Page and a Special Jury, on a charge of offences punishable under secs. 302 and 394 of the Indian Penal Code. He pleaded not guilty to the first count and guilty to the second count. The Jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty of murder, with the result that the accused was convicted and sentenced to death under sec. 302. On the 22nd August an application was made on his behalf to the Advocate-General for a certificate under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. On the 27th August, the Advocate-General heard Counsel for the prisoner in support of the application. On the 29th August, the Advocate-General granted a certificate in the following terms :

"Certificate of the Advocate-General of Bengal under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865.

1. Whereas the accused above-named was on the 16th August 1923, charged at the Criminal Sessions holden in this Hon'ble Court in its Criminal Jurisdiction before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Page and a Special Jury on an indictment as follows :—

First—That he, the said Barendra Kumar Ghose together with certain of the other persons on or about the 3rd day of August in the year of our Lord 1923 in Calcutta aforesaid committed murder by causing the death of one Amrita Lal Roy and thereby he, the said Barendra Kumar Ghose, committed an offence punishable under sec. 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

Second—That the said Barendra Kumar Ghose together with certain other persons at or about the time and in the place aforesaid were jointly concerned in attempting to commit robbery on the said

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

Amrita Lal Roy and that at the time of committing such robbery voluntarily caused hurt to the said Amrita Lal Roy and thereby he, the said Barendra Kumar Ghose, committed an offence punishable under sec. 394 of the Indian Penal Code.

II. Whereas it has been represented to me that the accused pleaded "guilty" to the aforesaid charge under sec. 394, I. P. C., with the reservation that he did not cause hurt to the Postmaster and pleaded "not guilty" to the charge under sec. 302, I. P. C., and the trial was proceeded with thereafter in respect of the latter charge.

III. Whereas it has been represented to me that the case for the prosecution as opened by the learned Standing Counsel and as disclosed in the evidence of the prosecution was as follows:

That the accused and three other persons made their appearance at the Sankaritolla Post Office at about 3-30 P.M., on the 3rd of August 1923 armed with fire-arms, that three of them including the accused entered the Post Office through its south-eastern door while the fourth man remained outside, that of the three who came inside, the accused stood in the middle and the masked man on his left and the other man on his right, that they stood within less than two yards of the Post Master of whom all the three demanded money with the words "Post Master Rupey deo," that the Post Master asked "kiser taka," whereupon all the three levelled their weapons and fired at the Post Master's right palm and another struck him on the right side under the right arm-pit whereupon he fell down with a cry, that a clerk named Sham Dulal Das who was working in the same room at that time ran to the Post Master's aid whilst Hari Prasad Das, the Post Office Packer, ran after the three men who were immediately escaping along with the fourth man who was outside, that the chase was taken up by two other men named Sita Ram and Khapasram, employees of one Promotho Lal Sircar residing at 15, Mohendra Sircar's Lane opposite the Post Office, that as they got to the turning of Mohendra Sircar's Lane and Sankaritolla East Lane, the accused ran down the latter lane firing his pistol from time to time whilst the other three ran by Mohendra Sircar's Lane to Creek Row, that the accused was followed by the Packer and the two others whose number was swelled by other pursuers who all kept following him until he was arrested in front of St. James Square and brought back to the Post Office along with his pistol which the accused had thrown away near the said Square but had been picked up by a small boy who gave it to the Packer.

That the prosecution case further was the Post Master had expired within a short interval of being shot, that one bullet was found inside his body which on being extracted fitted into the empty cartridge case picked up inside the room of the Post Office which in its turn was found to be of the same bore as that of the automatic pistol carried by the accused, that the dent of the bullet was found on the wall of 15, Mohendra Sircar's Lane fronting the Post Office, that no other empty cartridge was found inside the same room, that no trace of the third bullet was available in or out of it, and lastly that two revolvers and three daggers were found at premises No. 181, Harrison Road, a Chemist Shop, where the accused was employed.

IV. Whereas it has been further represented to me that the case for the defence as disclosed in the evidence was as follows:—

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

(a) That the case for the defence was embodied in the statement made by the accused in Court which according to him was identical with the statement he had previously made to Inspector Bonbehari Mukherji; a copy of the accused's statement in Court is hereto annexed and marked "A."

(b) That the main points in the accused's version were as follows: —

(1) Three and not four persons went to the Post Office, that the accused went there with the assured feeling that no life would be taken by any one, that the accused stayed outside whilst the other two went in, and that only two shots were fired inside and not three.

(2) That the accused was so taken by surprise on account of the shooting of the Post Master that he was temporarily robbed of locomotion and self-control and remained back, whilst his two companions ran away, that he recovered himself later on hearing the cry "chor chor," that he was running by himself, that he for the first time tried to fire his revolver in course of being pursued, that his pistol did not go off when he pulled the trigger, that he thereupon remembered his instructions to pull out a portion of the pistol and as he did so, a live cartridge fell out

(3) That the accused kept on firing in the air as he ran along and deliberately refrained from shooting the Packer and others who followed him at close quarter.

V. Whereas it has been further represented to me that the learned Judge charged the Jury and in such charge which was taken down in shorthand completely said as follows:—

"Therefore in this case if these three persons went to that place with a common intention to rob the Post Master and if necessary to kill him and if death resulted, each of them is liable whichever of the three fired the fatal shot."

"If you come to the conclusion that these three or four persons came into the Post Office with that intention to rob and if necessary to kill and death resulted from their act, if that be so, you are bound to find a verdict of guilty,"

"I say if you doubt that it was the pistol of the accused which fired the fatal shot, that does not matter. If you are satisfied on the other hand that the shot was fired by one of those persons in furtherance of the common intention. if that be so then it is your duty to find a verdict of guilty."

VI. Whereas it has been further represented to me that the learned Judge omitted to draw the attention of the jury to the defence of the accused save and except a mere reference to the statement made by the accused.

VII. And whereas the facts hereinbefore set out have been certified to me by Counsel for the accused as appears from the Certificate hereunder written.

Now, I, Satish Ranjan Das, Advocate-General of Bengal, do under and by virtue of the powers entrusted to me by the Letters Patent for the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal bearing date the 28th September 1865 certify that in my judgment whether the alleged direction and the alleged omission to direct the Jury do not in law amount to a misdirection should be further considered by the said High Court.

Counsel for the accused."

Thereupon on that very date, Counsel for the prisoner applied to the Chief Justice to appoint a Bench to hear the application for review; and the present Bench was constituted by the Chief Justice under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent read with sec. 108 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915.

When the case was taken up for disposal Mr. B. L. Mitter, Standing Counsel, informed the Court that the statements of facts as given in the certificate of the Advocate-General (which has been granted ex parte) were not all accurate, and he submitted that the certificate was in one respect at least incompetent and misconceived. In this connection, it may be observed that cl. 26 of the Letters Patent does not indicate the procedure to be followed by the Advocate-General when he is called upon to grant a certificate. But it is clear, on the language of cl. 26, that, as emphasised by Jenkins, C. J., in Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (1) the Letters Patent requires that the certificate should reflect the judgment of the Advocate-General and is presumably granted in the interests of justice after a careful consideration of all available materials. If, that judgment is founded on incomplete materials or inaccurate allegations, its weight is obviously diminished in a corresponding degree. It was from this standpoint that Jenkins, C. J., in the case just mentioned, hesitated to accept the assertion of Counsel that no note of the evidence had been read by or to the Advocate-General before he granted his certificate. In a case where the error ascribed to the Judge depends on the evidence adduced at the trial, it is plainly desirable that the notes of the evidence, as recorded by the Judge, should be laid before the Advocate-General when he is asked to grant the certificate. The requisite materials can always be obtained on application to the Judge. But not only should this be secured, there should also be no departure from what we gather has been the salutary practice, uniformly followed, up till now, in this class of cases.

We were assured by Mr. Mitter that on previous occasions the Advocate-General concerned made it a point to hear, not merely Counsel for the prisoner, but also Counsel for the Crown before he granted the certificate. This statement was made on the authority of Mr. William Jackson who has been an Advocate of this Court since 1866 and of Lord Sinha who became an Advocate of this Court in 1886 and successively held the offices of Standing Counsel and Advocate-General. In my opinion, there is no room for controversy that what is thus stated to have been the established practice is the proper course to follow. This does not imply that when the Advocate-General is asked to grant a certificate under cl. 26, he should be guided by the views of the Crown; but he should be aware, before he forms his judgment, that the version of what took place at the trial, as given on behalf of the accused, is disputed by the prosecution. I am further of opinion that the allegations embodied in the petition to the Advocate-General should be verified by Counsel present at the trial or by other responsible person. In the case before us, no certificate of any description was attached to the application made to the Advocate-General. The result was that the Advocate-General formed his judgment upon materials, the accuracy whereof was not certified. Counsel for the accused was heard by him, and a draft of a certificate was then prepared; this incorporated some only of the allegations contained in the unverified petition. A certificate was next appended by Counsel present at the trial, to the effect that the facts "hereinbefore" set out (that is, set out in the certificate of the Advocate-General) had been correctly stated to the best of their re-collection and belief. This obviously did not ensure that the judgment of the Advocate-General was formed solely on certified materials. That judgment might have been influenced by the unverified statements contained in the petition which were not reproduced in the certificate. That the danger is, by no means, imaginary, may be illustrated by reference to two of the paragraphs of the unverified petition presented to the Advocate-General in this case. In para. 3, it is stated that the accused pleaded guilty to the charge under sec. 394 with the reservation that he did not cause hurt to the Post Master. The Court minutes show on the other hand that the accused pleaded guilty to the charge under sec. 394, and no note of the alleged reservation can be traced. In para. 7, it is stated that the case for the defence as made in the statement under sec. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code was identical with a statement previously made by him to Inspector Bonbehari Mukherji. There is no evidence on the record to establish the alleged identity of the two statements. It is needless to enquire whether these unverified assertions were made under a misapprehension. The fact remains that statements were made in the petition presented to the Advocate-General, which are either inaccurate or are not supported by evidence on the record; and it is distinctly unfortunate that both these statements are reproduced in the certificate granted by the Advocate-General, to which Counsel appended a certificate that the facts set out therein had been correctly stated to the best of their recollection and belief. In my view, the certificate of the Advocate-General, which reflects his judgment and is naturally entitled to respect, should be granted after he has heard representatives of the prisoner and of the Crown and has carefully considered all the available materials whose accuracy had been verified by Counsel or other responsible persons. If this course had been pursued in the present case before the certificate was granted, there would have been no occasion for an unseemly dispute as to the weight to be attached to the certificate.

But whatever may have been left undone which might and should have been done, the fact remains that the certificate has been granted, and the Court must consequently deal with the case under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent.

The facts material for the appreciation of the questions which have emerged for consideration, may now be conveniently narrated. On the 3rd August last, several persons— it is a matter for controversy whether their number was three or four— armed with fire arms entered the Sankaritola Post Office in this city at about 3-30 P.M. The case for the prosecution is that the gang consisted of four persons, and included the accused. Three of these persons—one of whom was the accused—entered the Post Office, through the south-eastern door, while the fourth remained outside. Of the three who went inside, the accused stood in the middle; he had a khaddar coat on and a shirt beneath. The man on his left had a mask on his face, the man on the right had a shirt on with black stripes. Inside the room, there were three officers at three different tables, namely, the Post Master Amrita Lal Roy, the packer Haraprasad Das and the Money Order Clerk Shamdulal Das. The Post Master was facing west, the packer east and the Money Order Clerk north. The three men who entered the room said to the Post Master "Rupia Deo." The Post Master stood up and said "what money." On this, all the three men fired. The Post Master was mortally wounded and death was practically instantaneous. The aggressors cleared out and were pursued. They at first proceeded for a short distance eastwards. Three of them then escaped by a lane towards the south. The accused took a turn towards the north and was chased by the packer. He had a pistol in hand which he fired no less than four times during his flight before he was arrested in St. James Square. He was brought back to the Post Office with his pistol which he had thrown down and was subsequently sent up for trial. On the same day, at 7 P.M., the Police, upon information received, conducted a search of premises No. 181, Harrison Road where the accused lived and worked as Manager of a dispensary. In an almirah, of which one key was kept by the prisoner, was discovered a bundle; this when opened, was found to contain two revolvers and three daggers. The case against the accused was heard in the first instance by the Chief Presidency Magistrate who committed him to the Sessions for trial on charges under secs. 302, 304, 393 read with 398, 394, 307 and 308 of the Indian Penal Code. The charge under sec. 398 was struck out by order of Court and the charges under secs. 307 and 308 were withdrawn with leave of Court; consequently the accused was tried on the charge under secs. 302 and 394. The trend of his defence may be gathered from the following statement made by him in Court under advice of his Counsel and in explanation of the evidence which had been adduced against him.

"On August 3, Friday, I was reclining on a couch and reading a book after having had my mid-day meal when a gentleman whom I knew to be a God-fearing man and a man of learning came in with a bundle in his hand. I asked him to take his seat on the couch. As soon as he took his seat he wanted me to keep the bundle in my almirah. I asked him why I should keep it in my almirah as it did not appertain to my private business. He said he wanted it kept in the almirah. Then I opened the almirah and he placed the bundle inside it. I locked the almirah and tucked the key into my waist cloth. He then said to me "You will have to go with me to a certain place." I said that my compounder and men had not come in and so I could not go. He said "come with me to my house, you will have to be away for only one hour, I have got to tell you something very important." Then one of the men belonging to the dispensary came after taking his meal. I told my man that I was going to this gentleman's house and wanted a man to stay in the dispensary. Then the gentleman took me to his house and I was made to wait in his drawing room. There I found two young men seated; I knew one of them but did not know the other. The gentleman then said to me "you will have to go with me to a certain place and commit dacoity." I was very much frightened. I said "what is the dacoity." He took me to a room next to the drawing room away from the two boys. This room was a dark room with all the doors and windows shut. There he began to encourage me saying I would have nothing to do but only to accompany these two boys. He said "these two boys will do everything, you will go there as a mere show." I told him why should I commit dacoity, I am newly married, I am not in need of money. Instead of replying he looked at me in the face for some little time. I was sitting quiet when he called one of the boys into the room. He asked the boy to get the four pistols. The boy went out and in quarter of an hour came back with a bundle in his hand. He opened the bundle and produced four pistols and handed them to me. In a bag there were a number of cartridges. He began to put the cartridges into the revolvers. He then said to me "you go with these men, they will do everything, you will have to do nothing." Then I said "I am a newly married man, why I shall commit dacoity." I told him, "my brothers are in responsible employment under Government and they draw handsome pay and the money I earn is quite sufficient for my purpose, why shall I go and commit dacoity." Then I could not speak to him. The gentleman asked the second boy to take this bag (points out bag on Counsel's table) and asked him to place the money in it. The gentleman told the first boy, "you know everything, be very careful." He gave each of us a revolver. I asked the gentleman what I was to do with the revolver. He said, "you will simply have to stand with the revolver in your hand." I said that I would not be able to use the revolver and refused to be a party to any act of murder or dacoity. He assured me solemnly no murder would be committed and I was to stand there merely by way of show. I was then not in a position to argue. On the way I asked the boys if there would be any murder or assassination. When the gentleman gave me the revolver he pointed out how it was to be used; he then came to the pharmacy near the Sealdah corner. There we engaged a third class Thicca Gharry; the third man gave the driver a rupee saying you will have to go up to Sankaritola corner. When we came near Sankaritola corner the first boy put on a mask. When we came to the Sankaritola Post Office the two boys first got out and I followed. The two boys went inside the Post Office. I was standing in courtyard; after a minute or so I heard two sounds like dum dum. I got confused and began to perspire freely and could not see anything. Shortly after that sound I heard cries of chor chor. Not finding these men here, I began to run away. I was running very fast but my legs were trembling and could not carry me, for I was followed by a large number of men with great noise. I then drew out my revolver to make a sound; when I pulled the trigger the first time there was no sound. I then recollected, for the gentleman told me that a portion was to be pulled out first and then the trigger was to be pulled. As soon as I drew out a portion of the pistol a cartridge came out and fell on the ground, when I next attempted to fire a shot to the sky. After going some little distance I fired another shot. When I came to St. James Square I could not run further and sat down on the ground and threw away the pistol. I was then arrested by three or four men, taken back to the Post Office and handed over to the Police. I heard one witness depose in Court that I fired at him; I can swear before God that I did not intend to fire at him. If I wanted to kill men I could have done so. I have never in my life assaulted any body or caused any blood-shed. This is my first offence, I will not keep bad company any longer. I throw myself on the mercy of the Court, I was married only three months ago and I pray that I may be saved. The period that I was with these men was only an hour. I am prepared to abide by any sentence that your Lordship metes out. I do not wish to mention the names of the other men here, but I have already given them to the Police."

It is necessary at this stage to mention an event of an extraordinary character which took place prior to the commencement of the trial at the Sessions. This can be best described in the words of Mr. Justice Page himself as contained in a memorandum prepared by him for his colleagues:

"Two or three days before the hearing, B. C. Chatterjee and S. K. Sen, Counsel on behalf of the accused, applied to see me in my private room. They then informed me that after careful consideration they were satisfied that there was no defence to the charges and that the accused was guilty. They asked me, if the accused pleaded guilty to murder, whether I would treat him leniently. I told them that I could give them no information as to what I should do at the trial, but if they were satisfied that the accused was guilty, while it was their duty by cross-examination to test the accuracy of the witnesses for the Crown, that they were not entitled to set up any substantive defence in opposition to the case for the Crown."

This incident appeared to be so unusual that we considered it desirable to let the Counsel concerned know what had been intimated to us by Mr. Justice Page. Consequently, after the case had been called on and the Standing Counsel had taken the preliminary objection already mentioned, the extract from the memorandum prepared by Mr. Justice Page as set out above was read out in open Court, and Mr. Chatterjee, who appeared on behalf of the accused, was asked to consider whether, in view of what was stated, he should conduct the case or whether the accused should have an opportunity of being represented by other Counsel. Mr. Chatterjee did not ask for time to enable him to consider the situation, but forthwith made the following statement from his place at the Bar presumably without consultation with his colleague Mr. Sen who was not present in Court:

"With the greatest respect for His Lordship Mr. Justice Page, I feel bound in duty to state that there must have been a misunderstanding between the learned Judge on the one hand and Mr. S. K. Sen and myself on the other side. We did go to see his Lordship Mr. Justice Page; we went into his Lordship's chambers and saw him prior to any consultation with the accused, prior to our having seen the accused; and what I remember having said to him along with Mr. Sen was this that we had gone through the brief very carefully ourselves and we thought it was a very difficult case. I am not pretending to give a verbatim report of what I said, but I am giving the sense of what I remember having said—and that if we could feel that a plea of guilty on the part of the accused under sec. 394 were acceptable to the Court, subject to what the accused had to say to us in the interview we were going to have with him, we would advise him to plead guilty under sec. 394; I would appeal to Mr. Justice Page to remember in this connection; but as far as my recollection serves me, his Lordship Mr. Justice Page told us that in a case like this, he could not accept a plea of guilty on any account lesser than murder, not even on culpable homicide not amounting to murder. After that we saw the accused, and he told us all that he had to say about the facts of the case; and upon full instructions by him, we came to the conclusion that we should be right, in the circumstances of the case, to advise him to plead guilty under sec. 394 and that he should be defended on the charge of murder under sec. 302. This is the recollection I have of this matter, and it is unfortunate that my learned friend Mr. Sen is not here, because in that case I am sure he would have repeated the same statement as to what happened. There was a misunderstanding between the learned Judge and ourselves with regard to the section we thought he should be advised to plead guilty. On the other hand, on the instructions received, both Mr. Sen and I and the learned juniors who appeared with us felt very strongly convinced that the accused's case embodied in the instructions he gave us was a true one, that in this case he was not guilty of murder, and that he had not gone inside the Post Office or fired as was represented by the prosecution, and on that basis we defended him. His defence is that he had gone there, but stayed outside, while the other two men had gone inside and fired at the Post Master. It was on that identical basis that we defended him."

After Mr. Chatterjee had made this statement, the Court adjourned in order to enable him to communicate with the prisoner. He subsequently appeared before the Court and made the following statement :—

"Pursuant to your Lordship's suggestion, I and my friends appearing with me went to the Alipur Jail accompanied by the Clerk of the Crown and my attorney. The attorney spoke to the accused in the presence of the Clerk of the Crown and ourselves and the accused stated that he wished me to represent him and to argue this case before your Lordships."

The case was thereafter argued for five days and the hearing terminated on the 11th September last. At the close of the arguments, Mr. Chatterjee intimated that he would submit a statement signed by himself and Mr. Sen as to what had happened at the interview with Mr. Justice Page. The statement was handed over to the Clerk of the Crown on the next day and was in the following terms :—

"We were briefed by Messrs. K. K. Dutt & Co. in this case. We went through our brief independently, and came to the conclusion that the case was a difficult one for the defence.

We were discussing the different aspects of the case when we came to learn from Mr. A. C. Mukherjee, a fellow member of our Bar, that Mr. Justice Page had in a previous case (Postal Fraud case) called Mr. Mukherjee and Mr. S. C. Bose, Counsel for the defence and Mr. A. K. Basu, Counsel for the prosecution, into his chamber and said to learned Counsel for the defence that without in any way wishing to hold out any inducement, he, the learned Judge, thought that if the accused were to plead guilty to the minor charge, the prosecution should not press the major charge, and ought, in his opinion, to withdraw it. Mr. Basu, we were further told, thereupon asked leave to refer the question to Standing Counsel, and that later, after learned Counsel on both sides had gone into the learned Judge's chamber and informed him of their agreement on the lines of his suggestion, accused pleaded guilty to the minor charge whereupon the prosecution withdrew the major charge. We were also informed that the prisoner was sentenced leniently as a result of his pleading guilty in the aforesaid manner. Since the learned Judge had done this in a previous case we thought there would be nothing wrong in our seeing him in chamber with regard to the present case with a view to requesting him that he might deal with our client similarly.

As neither of us knew Mr. Justice Page well enough, we both went, in the first instance, to another learned Judge of this Court to ascertain his views on the propriety of the course we were contemplating; and the said learned Judge unhesitatingly approved of our going in to see Mr. Justice Page in his chamber. We may add that we fully explained to this learned Judge the object of our proposed visit to Mr. Justice Page. Accordingly, we went into Mr. Justice Page's chamber, and told him that, subject to his permission, we should like to speak to him about the case of Barendra Kumar Ghose in which we had been briefed. On the learned Judge nodding his approval, we told him we had not seen our client yet, but had gone through the brief and thought it was a difficult case; and subject to what the client had to say to us, we wished to ascertain from the learned Judge beforehand if he would accept a plea of guilty under sec. 394, I. P. C., and be ready thereafter to let the charge under sec. 302, I. P. C., be withdrawn against the accused. We reminded the learned Judge of what he had done in the Postal Fraud case, whereupon he said that although he had adopted a course like that in the previous case he could not do so in a case like the present one, that it was a ghastly affair, and that whilst we might be thinking of the poor prisoner in the dock, he, the learned Judge, could not but be thinking of the life that was gone; that in this case he could not accept a plea of guilty to anything less than a charge under sec. 302, I. P. C. and that not even a plea of guilty to a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder would be acceptable to him. Before leaving his chamber we were assured by the learned Judge that in his opinion we had done nothing wrong in speaking to him on behalf of our client in the way we had.

I have anxiously compared the two statements, viz., the one made by Mr. Chatterjee in Court on 6th September and the other signed by Mr. Chatterjee and Mr. Sen on 12th September, and I have contrasted them with the passage in the memorandum prepared by Mr. Justice Page. I regret to place on record my conclusion that I cannot accept the statements made by the learned Counsel as correct in all particulars; I do not wish to extend the application of the well-settled principle that when the Court is called upon to review a case under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, it will accept as unquestionable the statement of the trial Judge as to what actually took place before him in Court, as ruled in R. v. Pestonji (2) and Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (1), on the authority of Everett v. Youells (3), R. v. Grant (4), Gibbs v. Pike (5) and R. v. Mellor (6). The conclusion I have formed is based on the inherent improbability of the version given by the learned Counsel. A plea of guilty in answer to the charge under sec. 394 would be of no avail to the prisoner, if he was still to be tried upon the charge of murder with the consequent possibility of capital sentence. The charge under sec. 302 could not, at that stage be withdrawn by the trial Judge, though, after evidence had been adduced, he might, if satisfied that there was no evidence to go to the jury, direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty.

The object of the Counsel, who sought and secured the interview with the trial Judge, must have been to bargain with him as to the sentence in respect of the charge under sec. 302, if the prisoner should plead guilty to that Court. The gravity of their misconduct cannot, in my judgment, be exaggerated. But for what has actually happened, I would have considered it inconceivable that Counsel, who have been engaged to defend a prisoner charged with murder, should proceed to intimate to the trial Judge that, in their opinion, there was no defence to the charge, or, as they euphemistically, express it, that their case was "difficult;" and should then endeavour to persuade the Judge, before he has heard the evidence, to agree to a particular sentence if the accused should plead guilty. It would be wrong for me to conceal that my surprise is intensified when I find that the trial Judge who has thus been approached and placed in possession of the view taken of the case by the Counsel for the defence, advises them how the defence should be conducted.

On a superficial view of what happened in this case the erroneous assumption may possibly be made that a parallel is furnished by the conduct of Charles Phillips, Counsel for the accused in the celebrated trial of Courvoisier for the murder of Lord William Russel before Tindel, C. J., in 1840. The trial of Courvoisier, which is reported very briefly upon a question of practice only, R. v. Courvoisier (7), is described elaborately in three well-known works; Celebrated Trials connected with the Aristocracy by Peter Burke, Barrister-at-Law, 1849, pp. 461-485; Modern State Trials by William Townsend, Queen's Counsel and Recorder of Macclesfield, Vol. I, 1850, pp. 244-313, and Chronicles of Crime by Camden Phelm, Barrister-at-law, Vol. II, 1886, pp. 563-583. The conduct of Charles Phillips, who defended the accused, will be found discussed by Samuel Warren in his Introduction to Law Study, Vol. I, 1863, pp. 389-96, by Serjeant Ballantine in his Experiences, Vol. I, 1882, Chap. VII, by Serjeant, Robinson in his Reminiscences, 1889, Chap. VI, and by Cooly in his Constitutional Limitations, 1903, p. 478. The statement of Charles Phillips himself is set out in an appendix to the Essay on Professional Ethics by George Sharwood, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, first published in 1854 and reprinted as Vol. XXXII of the Reports of the American Bar Association. The facts are beyond dispute and may be concisely stated.

Lord William Russell was found murdered in his bed on the 5th May 1840. His house was occupied only by himself and three servants, a young Swiss Valet by name Courvoisier and two women, a cook and a house-maid. Suspicion fell upon Courvoisier, and he was sent up for trial on a charge of murder. His Counsel Charles Phillips went to the trial with a full persuasion of his innocence and conducted the cross-examination of the witnesses closely and zealously, specially of one of the female domestics, with a view to show that there was as much probability that the witness or the other domestic was the culprit; as the prisoner. At the close of the first day's proceedings, the prosecutors were placed unexpectedly in possession of a new and important item of evidence, by the discovery of the plate of the deceased, which had been missed and was found to have been deposited with a lady a week before the murder. The only question remained, whether Courvoisier was the person who had so left it. If he was, it would increase the probability that it was he who subsequently committed the murder with the object of plunder. On the morning of the second day of the trial, the person who had made this discovery was shown a number of prisoners in the prison yard; one of these was Courvoisier, whom she instantly recognised as the person who had left the plate with her and had formerly lived in her employ. Courvoisier also suddenly recognised her and was dismayed. The immediate effect of his panic was that, when brought to the Bar of the Court a few minutes afterwards, he spoke privately to his Counsel and confessed his guilt, coupled nevertheless with an expression of his desire to be defended to the utmost. Phillips consulted his junior Clarkson and resolved to abandon the case. His junior remonstrated and suggested that they might take the advice of Baron Parke, who was not trying the cause, upon what he considered to be the professional etiquette under circumstances so embarrassing. They obtained an interview. Baron Parke enquired whether the prisoner insisted on Phillips defending him; and on hearing that he did, said that Phillips was bound to use all fair arguments arising on the evidence. This course was considered right, for, in the words of Phillips, "to have abandoned the prisoner in the midst of the trial, would have been virtually surrendering him to death." I may add that Phillips states explicitly that, as he subsequently learnt from Baron Parke, the latter did not mention to the Chief Justice what he had learnt from Phillips. The Chief Justice charged the jury who returned a verdict of guilty and the prisoner was thereupon sentenced to death.

The special features which distinguished the case of Courvoisier from that now before the Court may be indicated here: (1) the incident there took place while the trial was in progress; (2) Counsel took action upon confession of guilt by the prisoner himself; (3) Counsel asked for advice from a judge who was not trying the cause; (4) the Judge so approached did not mention the matter to the Chief Justice who would have to sum up and to pass sentence in the event of conviction; and (5) Counsel asked advice upon a matter of professional etiquette only and did not attempt to make a bargain with the Judge upon the question of sentence.

The view taken by Baron Parke upon the question of the duty of Counsel for a prisoner when the latter had, in the midst of the trial, confessed to the Counsel that he did commit the offence charged, is in substantial agreement with what was adopted by the General Council of the Bar in 1915, as appears from the following extract from the annual statement for 1915, p. 14:

"The Council were asked to advise on the propriety of Counsel defending on a plea of 'not guilty' a prisoner charged with an offence, capital or otherwise, when the latter has confessed to Counsel himself the fact that he did commit the offence charged. The questions raised were—(1) What is the duty of Counsel under the circumstances; may he, according to modern views, defend in such case, and if so, ought he to do so? (2) Does the same answer apply where he has already appeared in Court for the prisoner?"

The Council adopted the following report:

"Different considerations apply to cases in which the confession has been made before the Advocate has undertaken the defence and to those in which the confession is made subsequently during the course of the proceedings.

"If the confession has been made before the proceedings have been commenced, it is most undesirable that an Advocate to whom the confession has been made should undertake the defence, as he would most certainly be seriously embarrassed in the conduct of the case, and no harm can be done to the accused by requesting him to retain another Advocate.

"Other considerations apply in cases in which the confession has been made during the proceedings, or in such circumstances that the Advocate retained for the defence cannot retire from the case without seriously compromising the position of the accused.

"In considering the duty of an Advocate retained to defend a person charged with an offence who in the circumstances mentioned in the last preceding paragraph confesses to Counsel himself that he did commit the offence charged, it is essential to bear the following points clearly in mind:—(1) that every punishable crime is a breach of the common or statute law committed by a person of sound mind and understanding; (2) that the issue in a criminal trial is always whether the accused is guilty of the offence charged, never whether he is innocent; (3) that the affirmative rests on the prosecution. Upon the clear appreciation of these points depends broadly the true conception of the duty of the Advocate for the accused.

"His duty is to protect his client as far as possible from being convicted except by a competent tribunal and upon legal evidence sufficient to support a conviction for the offence with which he is charged.

"The ways in which this duty can be successfully performed with regard to the facts of a case are (a) by showing that the accused was irresponsible at the time of the commission of the offence charged by reason of insanity or want of criminal capacity, or (b) by satisfying the tribunal that the evidence for the prosecution is unworthy of credence, or, even if believed, is insufficient to justify a conviction for the offence charged, or (c) by setting up in answer an affirmative case.

"If the duty of the Advocate is correctly stated above, it follows that the mere fact that a person charged with a crime has in the circumstances above mentioned made such a confession to his Counsel is no bar to that Advocate appearing or continuing to appear in his defence, nor indeed does such a confession release the Advocate from his imperative duty to do all he honourably can do for his client.

"But such a confession imposes very strict limitation on the conduct of the defence. An Advocate 'may not assert that which he knows to be a lie. He may not connive at, much less attempt to substantiate, a fraud.'

"While, therefore, it would be right to take any objection to the competency of the Court to the form of an indictment, to the admissiblity of any evidence, or to the sufficiency of the evidence admitted, it would be absolutely wrong to suggest that some other person had committed the offence charged, or to call any evidence which he must know to be false having regard to the confession, such, for instance, as evidence in support of an alibi, which is intended to show that the accused could not have done or in fact had not done the act, that is to say, an Advocate must not (whether by calling the accused or otherwise) set up an affirmative case inconsistent with the confession made to him.

"A more difficult question is within what limit, in the case supposed, may an Advocate attack the evidence for the prosecution either by cross-examination or in his speech to the tribunal charged with the decision of the facts. No clearer rule can be laid down than this, that he is entitled to test the evidence given by each individual witness, and to argue that the evidence taken as a whole is insufficient to amount to proof that the accused is guilty of the offence charged. Further than this he ought not to go.

"It must be clearly understood that this report is not intended as anything more than an answer to the specific question submitted. It is based on the assumption that the accused has made a clear confession that he did 'commit the offence charged,' and does not profess to deal with the very difficult questions which may present themselves to Counsel when a series of inconsistent statements are made to him by the accused before or during the proceedings, nor does it deal with the questions which may arise where statements are made by the accused which point almost irresistibly to the conclusion that the accused is guilty but do not amount to a clear confession. Statements of this kind must hamper the defence, but the questions arising on them are not dealt with here. They can only be answered after careful consideration of the actual circumstances of the particular case."

The above report was submitted to and approved by the then Attorney-General (Sir Edward Carson, K.C., M. P.) and by Sir Robert B. Finlay, K. C., M.P.

I see no escape from the conclusion that what has happened in this case is not supported either by the advice given to Baron Parke in 1840 or the opinion recorded by the General Council of the Bar in 1915. Counsel, who embarked upon such a perilous adventure as to inform the trial Judge in advance that they were satisfied that the prisoner had no defence to the charges, must have been oblivious of what Baron Bramwell said in Johnson v. Emerson (8): "A man's rights are to be determined by the Court, not by his attorney or Counsel. A client is entitled to say to his Counsel, I want your advocacy, not your judgment. I prefer that of the Court." The same thought was expressed more recently by Lord Halsbury when he observed: "If an Advocate were to reject a story because it seemed improbable to him, he would be usurping the office of the Judge, by which I mean the judicial function, whether that function is performed by a single man or by the composite arrangement of Judge and Jury" (Law Notes, 1899). It is significant that this view had appealed equally forcibly to two such diverse types of intellect as were represented by Johnson and Erskine (Boswell's Life of Johnson, Vol. I and Campbell's Lives of the Lord Chancellors, Vol. VIII). I shall not pursue this matter further or examine the vexed question of the duty of an Advocate who has lost faith in the cause he has been engaged to support. This much appears to me to be incontestable that it is not his duty to approach the trial Judge and to apprise him that in his opinion the man, whose fate has been entrusted to his care, has no defence to make. I venture to add that if, as trial Judge, I had been placed in such a predicament, I would, without hesitation, have reported the Counsel concerned to the Chief Justice for disciplinary action, and I would have asked to be relieved of the duty of participating in the trial and of passing sentence upon a man whose Counsel had previously assured me that there was no defence to make.

Let me now pass on to an examination of the questions specified in the certificate of the Advocate-General.

The Advocate-General has certified that whether the direction and the non-direction (as specified by him) amount in law to misdirection, should be further considered by the Court. The direction is alleged to be contained in the three following passages of the summing up :—

(a) "In this case, if these three persons went to that place with a common intention to rob the Post Master, and, if necessary, to kill him, and if death resulted, each of them is liable, whichever of the three fired the fatal shot."

(b) "If you come to the conclusion that these three or four persons came into the Post Office with that intention to rob, and, if necessary, to kill, and death resulted from their act, if that be so, you are to find a verdict of guilty."

(c) "I say if you doubt that it was the pistol of the accused which fired the fatal shot, that does not matter. If you are satisfied, on the other hand, that the shot was fired by one of those persons in furtherance of the common intention, if that be so, then it is your duty to find a verdict of guilty."

The non-direction is alleged to consist in the omission of the trial Judge to draw the attention of the jury to the defence of the accused, save and except a mere reference to the statement of the accused, recorded under sec. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It will be convenient to consider the questions of erroneous direction and non-direction separately.

First, as to erroneous direction. The contention has been put forward on behalf of the accused that the direction specified is found upon an erroneous view of the scope and effect of sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. In support of this argument, reliance has been placed principally upon the judgment of Stephen, J., in Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (9). In that case, Stephen, J., ruled that sec. 34 read according to its own terms without reference to the doctrine of the English Law, applies only where a criminal act is done by several persons of whom the accused charged thereunder is one, and not where the act is done by some person other than the latter. On this basis, Stephen, J., held that where two persons, in furtherance of a common intention of both, fire at another, and one only actually hits and kills him, the other is guilty, not of murder under sec. 302 read with sec. 34, but of attempt to murder; these offences do not constitute the same act. Stephen, J., conceded that a wider construction had been placed on sec. 34 in Queen-Empress v. Mahabir Tewari (10), and as will presently appear, there has been much divergence of judicial opinion on the subject. In my judgment the question of the true construction and correct application of sec. 34 is beset with graver difficulties than appear at first sight, and as I have arrived at a conclusion contrary to the opinion maintained by Stephen, J., who had made a profound study of Criminal Law, both Indian and English, it is only fair that his views should be stated in his own words. The exposition of these views, concisely set out in his judgment in Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (9) was amplified and re-stated by him in the following extract from a letter published by him in the Calcutta Weekly Notes, Vol. XVIII, p. 222, short notes:

"The case made by the prosecution which had to be put before the jury may be presented in the familiar style of an illustration thus: 'A and B set out to murder C. Both fire pistols at him. A hits him and kills him. B misses him.' Does B's act come under sec. 34? That section runs—'When a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner, as if the act were done by him alone.' I hold that as the act in question was the killing of C and as that was represented as having been done by A alone, the section did not apply to the case. I am not now concerned to consider the merits of this decision from a legal point of view, but, I believe, that it is contrary to the view of the section generally held by the profession hitherto, and it is certainly opposed to the statement of its meaning contained in Mr. Mayne's note thereon in his well-known work. The note is as follows: 'When several persons unite with a common purpose to effect any criminal object, all, who assist in the accomplishment of that object, are equally guilty, though some may be at a distance from the spot where the crime is being committed, and ignorant of what is actually being done.' For reasons, that I need not repeat, I think that this is wrong; but I believe that I have discovered the source of the error, and, if I am right, it is a curious example of the difficulty that attends the application of English Law to India, even in the form of a most carefully prepared Code.

"What I believe has happened is that the old English Law as to parties to the commission of an offence has proved too strong for the purifying effect of the Penal Code; and that its complexity has proved so attractive to the most learned of our commentators, and I may add to our highest judicial officers, that they have read a perfectly simple enactment in a highly artificial way in order to retain at least a flavour of it.

"I will, therefore, state as shortly as may be what I understand the English Law to be, and then consider how the Indian legislature adapted it to India.

"Taking Russel on Crimes, Ch. V, and Stephen's Digest, Ch. IV, as my authority, the English Law put very shortly is as follows:—

"A principal in the first degree is the man who commits the crime with his own hands. A principal in the second degree is one who is present, aiding and abetting; and (here comes in Mr. Mayne's explanation of sec. 34) he may be present though he is not really there, but only thereabouts watching for intruders or standing ready to assist.

"An accessory before the fact is a man who procures, etc., or abets another to commit or in committing a crime, but is not there or thereabouts when it is committed.

"An accessory after the fact is a man who helps the criminal to escape; he completes the group, but otherwise it is unnecessary to consider him for present purposes.

"I omit any consideration of the non-application of these rules to misdemeanours or treason; but a glance at the cases in Russell (and their number might be indefinitely increased) will show how little of the

our predecessors were open to the reproach of neglecting any technical points that possibly would be available for the defence of prisoners.

"Such was the English law before 1861. But in that year the inconvenience of those clumsy distinctions that had slowly grown up since the time of Hale—it is curious how many inconveniences the English Criminal Law owes to his age, if not to him—was clearly recognised, and advantage was taken of the framing of the Consolidation Acts of that year to correct it. The correction contained in the Accessories and Abettors Act, 24 and 25 Vict., c. 241, is characteristic of English legislation in such matters, as it abolished the distinction and leaves the difference. It consists of an enactment to the effect that 'accessories before the fact, principals in second degree and principals in the first degree are each considered as having committed' the crime, and may be tried as if they had committed it (Stephen, Art. 45).

"How did the Indian Legislature deal with this position? The Penal Code was, after much consideration, finally passed on the 6th October 1860. The English Accessories and Abettors Act was, also after prolonged investigations, passed in the following August. The two are no doubt closely connected, though I am not able at the moment to trace the connection. In 1846, however, we find the Commissioners who were preparing the Penal Code studying the labours of a commission then performing similar work in England, and evolving in para. (8) of their report a rudimentary edition of our sec. 34. That paragraph clearly shows that they saw that the distinction between degrees of principals must be abolished, and in the following paragraphs they consider various difficulties, which, no doubt, led them, or rather, their successors, to their very short but sufficient method of dealing with abettors. Ultimately in para. 662 to their postscript, they are naturally pleased to find that the English Commissioners in dealing with principals and the punishment of accessories, propose to follow the same course that has recommended itself to them. These considerations lead me to suppose that the framers of the Penal Code, as we have it, meant to do what I think, they in fact did, namely, to distinguish between a man who does a thing—the credit of the simplicity of the phrase is theirs—and the man who abets him, making the latter, however, punishable as though he were the former, and Chap. V of the Code is the result.

"What then, it will be asked, is the use of sec. 31? The answer is to be found in sec. 3 of the Code of 1837, Macaulay's Criminal Code, and the illustrations thereto. The section is practically the same as our sec. 31, though it is more obscurely expressed. The illustrations are shortly: (1) A digs a pit intending to cause some one's death. B covers it with turf with the same intention. Z falls in and is killed. Both A and B have committed culpable homicide. (2) A and B are gaolers having charge of Z alternately. They both omit to furnish Z with food, intending to cause his death. Z dies of hunger. Both A and B have committed culpable homicide. The language of the section has been changed, and the illustrations have been dropped; but I believe the law is as Macaulay planned it. That is, the man who does a thing is principal, and one who puts him on or helps him to do it, is an abettor whether he is present or not; and there are no other parties.

"But there remains another little puzzle, and that is sec. 114. I need not set out its terms. But what I suspect is that the Commissioners could not help preparing a little resting place for the ghost they were laying. What they had in their minds was that a principal in the second degree really differed from an abettor, and must be provided for; they, therefore, intended to say that whereas an abettor was to be punished as if he had done the thing (the phrase will bear repetition); if he was present he was to be deemed to have done it, which, after all, was and is English law. Practically I cannot see that this makes any difference, as the punishment for the thing is all that need be considered.

"If, therefore, the section said what I think it was intended to say, I should think it superfluous. But, it, in fact, says something else, and when the abetting consists in attempting to do what another man did, which is a most effective method of aiding, the section does not apply, because I think it must be impossible to attempt to do a thing if you are not there. The result is that it will often apply, as it did in my case, to charges which are of no importance in comparison to the abetting. The distinction between secs. 109 and 114 really depends on the difference between being punished as if you had done a thing, and being deemed to have done it, which seems to me merely inconvenient.

"I should, therefore be glad to see sec. 114 repealed. But, at the same time, the principle laid down in Mr. Mayne's note seems to me quite a sound one and I should like to see sec. 114 replaced by an enactment that where several persons take part in the execution of a common criminal purpose, each is to be deemed to have committed every offence committed by any one of them in execution of the purpose. This is the English law according to Stephen's Digest, Art. 30; and we are of course familiar with the principle in sec. 149. The ground of such an enactment may be covered by secs. 107, 109, in fact, I think it usually would be. But some such enactment would make the matter perfectly plain."

It may be observed that the historical investigation undertaken by Stephen, J., in his judgment in Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (9) and reproduced in the letter quoted above, if at all allowable, does not go far enough. No reference is made to the principles which regulated the liability of principals and accessories at the time of the introduction of the Indian Penal Code. A very useful historical summary will be found in the well-known Digest of Criminal Law by F. L. Beaufort, 1857, Vol. I, pp. 40-47, where reference is made to Reg. 53 of 1803, sec. 4, the Hedaya, Vol. II, pp. 30, 104, 133, Vol. IV, p. 302, and decisions of the Nizamat Adaulat; these took a very stringent view of the liability of joint actors. But such a historical survey is not permissible in the interpretation of sec. 34. Such reference to the history of legislation can only be legitimately made, as was done by the Judicial Committee in Iswari Prasad v. Lal Chaterpat (11) and Brown v. McLachlan (12), when reasonable doubt is entertained as to the true construction of a statute. The operation may, however, be easily carried too far, and may, in the case of codifying statutes, lead to results which have been emphatically condemned in decisions of the highest authority; see, for instance, the observations of Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers (13), of Lord Watson in Robinson v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co. (14) and of Lord Macnaghten in Narendranath v. Kamal Bisini (15). The proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute, to interpret it, to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by considerations derived from the previous state of the law. To begin with an examination of the previous state of the law on the point, is to attack the problem at the wrong end; and it is a grave error to force upon the plain language of the section of an Indian Statute an interpretation which the words will not bear, on the assumption of a supposed policy on the part of the legislature to adopt or to vary, as the case may be, the rules of the English law on the subject; see the decisions of the Full Bench in Kripasindhu v. Annada Sundari (16) and Satis Chandra v. Ramdayal (17), see also Baleswar Bagarti v. Bhagirathi Das (18). We must consequently examine, in the first instance, the terms of sec. 34.

In the Indian Penal Code, as enacted in 1860, sec. 34 was expressed in the following terms :—

"When a criminal act is done by several persons, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone."

In 1870 the section was amended by the insertion of the expression "in furtherance of the common intention of all" after the word "persons" and before the word "each." We have it on the authority of Mr. J. F. Stephen, who was Law Member of the Council of the Governor-General at the time, that the amendment was made "so as to make the object of the section clear." It is immaterial whether the amendment was suggested by the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in Queen v. Gorachand Gopee (19), as was assumed by Mahmood, J., in Emperor v. Dharam Rai (20) or by the judgment of Sir James Colvile in Ganesh Singh v. Ram Raja (21). It is sufficient for our present purpose to note that the section is now expressed in the following terms :—

"When a criminal act is done by several persons, in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone."

This section does not create a new offence; it uses the expression "criminal act" and formulates a principle of liability. Sec. 32 shows that act includes an illegal omission save where the contrary appears from the context. Sec. 33 shows that the word "act" includes a series of acts and the word "omission" includes a series of omissions. Sec. 34 shows that when a criminal act is done by several persons, each is liable as if he did it alone, provided the act is done in furtherance of the common intention of all. Sec. 35 shows that when an act, criminal only in respect of knowledge or intention, is done by several persons, each person, joining with criminal knowledge or intention, is liable as if he had done it alone with that knowledge or intention. Sec. 36 shows that when an offence is the effect partly of an act or partly of an omission, it is one offence only. Sec. 37 shows that when an offence is committed by several acts, each person intentionally committing one of those acts singly or jointly with others, commits the offence. Sec. 38 shows that persons jointly engaged in a criminal act may be guilty of different offences. To justify the application of sec. 34, it is, consequently, necessary to prove what may be briefly described as a common act and a common intention. The real difficulty emerges when we are called upon to decide, on the concrete facts of a given case, whether the criminal act can be said to have been done by several persons; in other words, what is it that is involved in the expression "a criminal act is done" when there is more than one person who has contributed to the result. I am persuaded that it is not possible to frame a universal formula which will comprehend all imaginable combinations of circumstances.

Reference has been made to opinions of commentators which, in some instances at least, do not go to the root of the matter. The commentary on the Indian Penal Code by Mr. W. Morgan and Mr. A. G. Macpherson may be mentioned as an illustration, though their opinion, so far as it goes, is entitled to the highest respect. Mr. Morgan was clerk to the Legislative Council and assisted Sir Barnes Peacock when the Bill, which was subsequently enacted as the Indian Penal Code, was put into its final form; he was one of the Judges of this Court till he was appointed the first Chief Justice of the Agra High Court. Mr. Macpherson also was for many years a Judge of this Court. The only observation which they have to offer on sec. 34 is that "the actual doers, who are the persons referred to here, are to be distinguished from those who abet the doing of a thing;" they then add that the law concerning principal actors is contained in secs. 34, 35 and 37, while what constitutes an abetment is explained in Chap. V. The question, however, remains who are the persons who may, in a particular case, be rightly regarded as the actual doers.

Mr. Mayne in the notes on sec. 34, in his edition of the Indian Penal Code, quotes with approval the following passage from sec. 489 of the Commentaries on the Criminal Law (1856), by Joel Prentiss Bishop, an American Jurist of high repute :—

"The true view is doubtless as follows: Every man is responsible criminally for what of wrong flows directly from his corrupt intentions; but no man, intending wrong, is responsible for an independent act of wrong committed by another. If one person sets in motion the physical power of another person the former is criminally guilty for its results. If he contemplated the result, he is answerable, though it is produced in a manner he did not contemplate. If he did not contemplate the result in kind, yet if it was the ordinary effect of the cause, he is responsible. If he awoke into action and indiscriminate power he is responsible. If he gave directions vaguely and incautiously, and the person receiving them acted according to what might be presumed to have been his understanding of them, he is responsible. But, if the wrong done was a fresh and independent wrong springing wholly from the mind of the doer, the other is not criminal therein, merely because, when it was done, he was intending to be a partaker with the doer in a different wrong. These propositions may not always be applied readily to cases arising, yet they seem to furnish the true rules."

This exposition is reproduced by Bishop, with slight variations, in the latest edition of his great work (New Commentaries, 1892, Vol. I, Chap. XLV, sec. 641). Mr. Mayne adhered to this view in his work on the Criminal Law of India (Fourth Edition, 1914, p. 238), where the following statement occurs: "Where several persons unite, with a common purpose, to effect any criminal object, all who assist in the accomplishment of that object are equally guilty, though some may be at a distance from the spot where the crime is committed and ignorant of what is actually done." This is manifestly based on the assumption that in certain circumstances at least, all who assist in the accomplishment of a common purpose to do a criminal act may be deemed to have "done that act" within the meaning of sec. 34. This view of sec. 34 does not necessarily render sec. 149 superfluous as was urged on behalf of the prisoner. Sec. 34 speaks of "common intention" while sec. 149 refers to "common object." Besides this, sec. 149 comes into operation only when there is an unlawful assembly of five or more persons as required by sec. 141, and in that event it has a wider scope than sec. 34. In this connection reference may be made to the judgment of Field, J., in Empress v. Jhubboo Mahton (22), where the recondite problem is considered, whether a prisoner, who is constructively guilty of murder under sec. 34 can be said to have committed the offence of murder within the meaning of sec. 149 so as to make other prisoners guilty by a double construction.

A similar view is indicated by Sir Michael Foster in his Discourse on Crown Law, 1809, p. 350:—

"Several persons set out together, or in small parties, upon one common design, be it murder or other felony, or for any other purpose unlawful in itself, and each taketh the part assigned to him: some to commit the act, others to watch at proper distances and stations to prevent a surprise, or to favour if need be, the escape of those who are more immediately engaged. They are all, provided the fact be committed, in the eye of the law present at it; for it was made a common cause with them, each man operated in his station at one and the same instant toward the same common end, and the part each man took tended to give countenance, encouragement, and protection to the whole gang, and to ensure the success of their common enterprise."

Sir Michael Foster adds in a later passage (p. 351) that "in combinations of this kind, the mortal stroke, though given by one of the party, is considered in the eye of the law and of sound reason too, as given by every individual present and abetting; the person actually giving the stroke is no more than the hand or instrument by which the others strike," or, as he phrases it later on, "the stroke of one is, in consideration of law, the stroke of all;" see Pleas of Crown by Hale, Vol. I, pp. 437, 463; Vol. II, pp. 344, 345; Pleas of the Crown by Hawkins, Vol. II, Chap. 29, secs. 21, 22, Pleas of the Crown by East, Vol. I, p. 70. The theory which underlies this view is that if one has the criminal intent and another does the criminal act, the intent not contributing to the act, nor strengthening it, and not in any way influencing it, there is in the former person no crime; but it is otherwise if there is a unity of intent and act.

The subject, as is fairly clear, is by no means free from difficulty and the principle is analysed with great acuteness by Collett in his Comments on the Indian Penal Code, 1889, pp. 2-5. He sums up his conclusion concisely in the statement "that community of criminal intention determines the community of liability in every instance of accession at the fact." In illustration, he refers to the two contrasted cases, viz., The Sissinghurst House case (23), where an assistant of a constable was killed by some members of a riotous assembly and R. v. Sarum (24), where three soldiers went together to rob an orchard. As instance of cases where the question is as to what constitutes community of action, he refers to the decisions in R. v. Salmon (25), (where three soldiers went to practise firing with rifle), R. v. Coney (26), where a crowd assembled to witness a prize fight, Queen v. Sabed Ali (27), where, in an attempt to eject a man from land, a gun was fired which caused the death of one of the party resisting, and Emperor v. Jhubboo Mahton (22), where the nature of the wounds inflicted by different assailants on different parts of the body of the deceased could be ascertained. The divergence of opinion expressed in some of these cases, specially in R. v. Coney (26) forcibly illustrates the difficulty inseparable from the application of a general principle like that embodied in sec. 34 to the circumstances of an individual case. This is fully realised when the cases to be found in our reports are closely examined. In this connection, we may usefully recall the weighty observations of Lord Halsbury in Quinn Leathem (28) and of Lord Haldane in Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Coy. (29), as to the misuse of judicial precedents. The language of a judicial pronouncement must be understood as spoken in reference to the facts under consideration and limited in meaning by those facts; the generality of the expression which may be found there is not intended to be an exposition of the whole law, but is governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. It follows as a corollary that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides and cannot be quoted for a proposition that may seem logically to follow from it.

The earliest cases in this Court, such as Queen v. Jan Mahammad (30) and Queen v. Ruchee (31) do not examine the principle, but assume that when two persons take an active part in a murder, they become principals in the first degree, though one of them only may have been the actual killer. This was apparently the opinion of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., as indicated in the case of Queen v. Gorachand (19), where he stated that if several persons go out together for the purpose of apprehending a man and taking him to the Police Station on a charge of theft, and some of the party in the presence of the others beat and ill-treat the man in a cruel and violent manner, and the others stand by and look on without endeavouring to dissuade them from their cruel and violent conduct, those who have to deal with the facts might very properly infer that they were all assenting parties and acting in concert and that the beating was in furtherance of a common design. On the other hand, all who are present do not necessarily assist by their presence every act that is done in their presence. Markby J., took a similar view in Queen v.

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

Hyder (32), when he stated that if a master accompanies a servant, knowing the latter's intention to commit murder and is present at the commission of the murder, although he struck no blow, still he is guilty as a principal; the reasonable presumption was that both were acting with a common intent. Markby, J., adhered to this view when in Queen v. Mohammad Asger (33), he reiterated that if a blow is struck by A in the presence of and by the order of B, both are principals in the transaction. He added that where two persons join in beating a man and he dies, it is not necessary to ascertain exactly what the effect of each blow was. The same view was emphasised by him in Queen v. Gour (34), where he ruled that if each of several persons is proved to have taken part in beating a man so as to break his ribs and cause his death, each is guilty, as a principal, of the murder of the deceased. The next case in this Court which deserves special mention is that of Queen-Empress v. O'Hara (35) which was tried by Norris, J., and a special jury and led to a review under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. One of the instructions given by Norris, J., to the jury was that if two shots were fired by two men and both men fired at the deceased with the intent to kill him, and it was not proved who fired the shot which produced the fatal effect, both were guilty of murder. It is significant that Norris, J., when at the Bar, had acted as Counsel for the prosecution in R. v. Salmon (25) the decision wherein would support the instruction in question. The Advocate-General certified that the construction did require further consideration. But the point was left undecided, as the conviction was ultimately set aside on the ground that it had been based on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. There is, however, a long catena of later cases which contain expressions of opinion—some of them obiter dicta—which militate against the restricted interpretation placed by Stephen, J., on sec. 34. Amongst these decisions may be mentioned Sriprasad v. Empress (36), Keshawar Lal v. Giris Chandra (37), Nibaran Chandra v. King-Emperor (38), Khudiram v. Emperor (39), Gauridas v. Emperor (40), Emperor v. Morgan (41), Jhakri v. King-Emperor (42), Reazuddi v. King-Emperor (43), Jamiruddi v. King-Emperor (44), Manindra v. Emperor (45), Emperor v. Narendranath (46), and Foezullah v. King-Emperor (47). In some of these cases, the Court declined to apply sec. 34, not because the act could not be said to have been done by several persons, but because there was no proof that it had been done in furtherance of the common intention; these cases furnish a clear indication that the Court would have applied sec. 34 if a common intention had been proved. In one of these cases Emperor v. Morgan (41) the Court expressly relied upon the decision in R. v. Salmon (25). The bullet which killed the deceased was fired by one or other of the accused, but it was impossible to say which of them had fired it; the Court expressed the opinion that the rule laid down in R. v. Salmon (25) might be applied. In another case, Amrita Lal Bose v. Corporation of Calcutta (48), the question was examined from first principles, from a different standpoint and irrespective of the provisions of sec. 34, and it was ruled that as a general principle of Criminal Law, all who participate in the commission of an offence are severally responsible, as though the offence had been committed by each of them acting alone, and consequently each must be separately punished. On the other hand, the decision of Stephen, J., in Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (9) was followed without question in King-Emperor v. Profulla Kumar (49). There is thus a preponderance of authority in this Court against the limited construction of sec. 34 which found favour with Stephen, J., in King-Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta (9).

A similar divergence of judicial opinion is traceable through the decisions pronounced by the Allahabad High Court; Empress v. Dharm Rai (20), Queen-Empress v. Mahabir (10), Queen v. Santa (50), Emperor v. Nageshwar (51), Emperor v. Bhola Singh (52), Dhian Singh v. King-Emperor (53), Emperor v. Kanhai (54), Emperor v. Ram Newaz (55), Emperor v. Hanuman (56), Emperor v. Chandan Singh (57), Emperor v. Gulab (58) and Bhagwana v. Emperor (59). How the pendulum has swung will be appreciated when we mention that Queen v. Mahabir (10) which was pressed upon the attention of Stephen, J., in Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta (9) was dissented from in Queen v. Santa (50) and Emperor v. Nageshwar (51) while Dhian Singh v. King-Emperor (53) was questioned in Emperor v. Ram Newaz (55), Emperor v. Hanuman (56), Jafar v. Emperor (60), Karan v. Emperor (61), Emperor v. Gulab (58) and Abdul Karim v. Emperor (62).

In the Madras High Court what may be called the liberal interpretation of sec. 34 is supported by the high authority of Subrahmania Iyer, J., in Queen v. Ranu (63) and Queen v. Duma (64). But a discordant note has been recently sounded by the decision in Aydroos v. Emperor (65) where it was ruled that to justify the application of sec. 34, evidence of some distinct act by the accused which can be regarded as part of the criminal act in question is required, see also Queen v. Thornath (66).

In the Bombay High Court, Westrop, C. J., in Queen v. Pitambar (67) apparently inclined to the view contrary to that adopted by Stephen, J. The later decisions in Queen v. Maganlal (68), Emperor v. Subbappa (69), Emperor v. Chhotalal (70) and Emperor v. Haribijal (71) cannot be claimed as decisive authorities in support of either of the conflicting views.

In Lahore there has been a similar diversity of judicial opinion. But it is worthy of note that two of the latest cases, viz., Harnam Singh v. Emperor (72) decided by Chevis and Raoof, JJ., and Bahal Singh v. Emperor (73) decided by Rattigan, C. J., and Raoof, J., lend strong support to the opinion expressed by Stephen, J. A different note was perhaps sounded in Raja v. Emperor (74) and Dangar Khan v. Emperor (75) where Emperor v. Mohna (76) and Empress v. Mahabir (10) were followed, while the decision in Allahditta v. Crown (77) really presents no difficulty on its special facts.

In Patna, a similar difference of attitude is traceable through the decisions. In Lochho Singh v. Emperor (78) four persons formed themselves into a body with the common object of beating the complainant, and while two of them assaulted him, the other two stood by, armed with lattis, ready to take part, if necessary; it was ruled that the latter two were equally guilty with the others of an offence under sec. 323, I. P. C. The later decisions in Ritbaran v. Emperor (79) and Satrughan v. Emperor (80), however, indicate a distinct reluctance on the part of the Court to push the application of sec. 34.

What irreconcilable difference of opinion is possible in this class of cases is illustrated by the decision in Emperor v. Mohabir (81) where two of the Judicial Commissioners (Rafique and Kanahialal) took a limited view of the scope of sec. 34, while the third (Lindsay) adopted a liberal construction, in the application of the principle to a fairly simple state of facts. Reference may also be made to Imperator v. Vahilai (82), where the two Judicial Commissioners (Pratt and Fawcett) followed Gauridas v. Emperor (40); there A had struck B with hatchet; B fell down whereupon C hit B and B subsequently died. The Court declined to apply sec. 34 on the ground that it was not a necessary inference that C had a common intention with A to kill B. Reference may also be made to King-Emperor v. Kala Nanji (83) decided in the Chief Court of Criminal Justice in Kathiawar.

The Courts in Burma have been faced, from time to time, with the question of the application of sec. 34 to a variety of circumstances, and as might be anticipated the pronouncements are by no means easy to reconcile. Amongst recent cases may be mentioned Nga Do Sein (84), Pha

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

Laung (85), Nga Tun Ba v. Emperor (86), Tha Mya v. Emperor (87), Emperor v. Cook (88), Nga Bai v. King-Emperor (89), Nga Shwe On v. Emperor (90), Po Ya v. Emperor (91) and Po Myaing v. Emperor (92), while amongst the earlier decisions, the most noteworthy are Maung v. Queen (93) and Hakim Ali v. Queen-Empress (94).

This analysis of the course of decisions in the different Courts which administer criminal justice according to the Indian Penal Code discloses a deep-seated divergence of judicial opinion as to the true interpretation of sec. 34. The apparent simplicity of the language of the section is delusive, as it furnishes no test to determine when a particular criminal act may be said to have been "done by several persons"; and the consequence has been that the Courts have sometimes, in their reluctance to apply the section to the facts of the case before them, come to the conclusion that the criminal act was not proved with certainty to have been done in furtherance of the common intention of all. In my judgment, the exposition given by Stephen, J., places too narrow an interpretation upon sec. 34, and that the question whether a particular criminal act may be properly held to have been "done by several persons" within the meaning of the section cannot be answered regardless of the facts of the case. To show that the problem may require solution in the most diverse circumstances imaginable, we may refer to Breese v. State (95). In that case the accused had agreed with others to commit a burglary in a store house at night. As a part of the said agreement and to facilitate the breaking and entry and to lessen the chances of detection, it was agreed that the accused should on that night decoy the owner away from the store where he usually slept, to a music party about a mile distant, and detain him there, while the other confederates were to break and enter the store and remove the goods. The parties did, in fact, perform their respective parts of the agreement, and the burglary was successfully committed. The Supreme Court held that the accused was constructively present at the breaking and entry by his confederates and could be convicted as principal therein. Peck, J., referred to the decision in R. v. Standley (96) as an authority for the proposition that if several persons act in concert to steal a man's goods and he is induced by fraud to trust one of them in the presence of the others with the possession of such goods and another of them entices him away, in order that the man who has the goods may carry them off, all are guilty of felony. Reliance was placed also on Hess v. State (97) where it had been ruled that if several unite in a common design to do some unlawful act, and each takes the part assigned to him, though all are not actually present, yet all are present in the eye of the law. It was observed that the part assigned by the agreement to the accused, namely, a constant supervision over the owner while the burglary was effected, formed an essential part of the plan of the burglary agreed upon, quite as much as the rending of the shutter or the forcing of the door. A second illustration is afforded by State v. Poynier (98), where it was ruled that if a person whose duty it is to guard property leaves his post so as to facilitate the theft of the property, which to his knowledge has been determined upon, he should be deemed constructively present and liable as a principal. Manning, J., who delivered the opinion of the majority observed: "The test to determine whether he is principal rather than accessory is whether he is so situated as to make his personal help available—not actual physical help necessarily, but help of any kind—not help rendered in or by actual presence, but constructive presence as well. Thus if he watched near, or at a distance to prevent his companions being surprised, or stationed himself to give the alarm to favour their escape, or was in such a situation as to come to their assistance, so that the knowledge of his watching or position or situation inspired or was calculated to inspire his companions with additional confidence and enabled them quicker or safer or more effectually to commit their crime, then he is the principal. One need not be either an eye witness of the criminal act or within hearing of it to make him a principal. If he has knowledge of it and watches so as to assist in any manner, it is enough; or if he does any act in execution of the common design or to aid those who are immediately engaged, to escape. Each person consenting to the commission of an offence and doing any one act which is an ingredient in the crime or immediately connected with or leading to its commission is a principal. R. v. Flatman (99), Todd, J., dissented though he conceded that if a party watches for his companions, the actual perpetrators, to prevent surprise or favour their escape, or give assistance and is near enough to afford it, if required, he may be deemed constructively present. He referred to the decision in R. v. Tuckwell (100) where, in circumstances very similar, the employee who had, in pursuance of an arrangement, with his confederate left the house so as to enable the latter to commit the robbery, the employee had been held by Coleridge, J., to be not a principal in the crime, but an accessory before the fact. To the same effect is the decision in R. v. Jefferies (101). A third illustration is furnished by the decision in State v. Hamilton (102) which carries the law probably to its furthest limit. There a plan was arranged to rob an express train on the road; one of the parties to such plan was to ascertain when the express left a certain point and to signal to his confederates by building a fire on the top of a mountain in one county which could be seen by them in another county 40 miles distant. This signal was given by him and his confederates, advised by it, met the express; in the attempt to rob it, one of the guards was killed. It was ruled that the man who gave the signal was, in contemplation of law, constructively at the scene of the homicide. Again, in People v. Batterson (103) it was ruled by Haight, J., that if one of several persons acting in concert leads a girl's escort away, while his confederates rape the girl, he is a principal in the second degree, though not actually present at the time of the rape. I shall mention one further illustration which is furnished by the decision in Commonwealth v. Lucus (104). A person, in pursuance of a pre-concerted plan, remained downstairs in his own house, while his confederates above, stole money from a lodger, brought it down and delivered it to him. Bigelow, C. J., ruled that he was a principal in the larceny and observed as follows:

"To charge a person as principal, a strict, actual, immediate presence at the time and place of the commission of the crime is not necessary. Nor is it requisite that he should be so situated as to be an eye or ear witness of the criminal act. It is the expectation of aid, in case it is necessary to the completion of the crime, and the belief that his associate is near and ready to render it, which encourage and embolden the chief perpetrator, and incite him to accomplish the act. By the countenance and assistance which the accomplice thus renders, he participates in the commission of the offence. It is therefore sufficient to hold a party as principal, if it is made to appear that he acted with another in pursuance of a common design; that he operated at one and the same time for the fulfilment of the same pre-concerted end, and was so situated as to be able to furnish aid to his associates with a view to insure success in the accomplishment of the common enterprise. Thus, if two persons agree to commit a burglary, and in order to effect their purpose one of them breaks and enters a house and commits a larceny therein, while the other remains outside, even at a distance, in order to guard against surprise and detection, and to receive the goods, or a portion of them, after the larceny has been committed, there can be no doubt that the latter would be liable as principal, although he did not see his accomplice do any act towards the commission of the offence. He would be, it is true, an accessory before the fact, by advising and procuring the commission of the felony; and after the fact, by receiving the property after it was stolen; but he would also be a principal, because, at the time when the felony was committed, he co-operated with the chief perpetrator and aided and abetted him in doing the acts which constituted the crime."

I shall not multiply instances to show when a man may be said to participate in a criminal act, lest we get lost in an endless maze of decisions remarkable for refined distinction such as we find in R. v. Stewart (105), R. v. Soares (106), R. v. Royce (107), R. v. Towle (108), R. v. McPhane (109), R. v. Gaylor (110), R. v. West (111), R. v. Jone (112), R. v. Manners (113), R. v. Buttcris (114), R. v. Kelly (115), R. v. Badcock (116), R. v. Else (117), R. v. Davis (118), R. v. Manning (119), R. v. Whittakar (120), R. v. Kelly (121), R. v. Vanderstein (122), R. v. Murphy (123), R. v. Howell (124), R. v. Jordan (125), R. v. Locket (126), R. v.

Passey (127), R. v. Hurse (128), R. v. Bingley (129), R. v. Gogerly (130), R. v. Standley (96), R. v. Borthwick (131), R. v. Owen (132), R. v. Duffey (133), R. v. Jackson (134) and R. v. Dacre (135). The balance of reason and authority is, in my opinion, against the limited interpretation placed by Stephen, J., on sec. 34 in Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (9) and I must hold accordingly that the first point specified in the certificate of the Advocate-General, namely, that direction erroneous in law was given, cannot be sustained.

Secondly, as to non-direction. The argument advanced on behalf of the accused is that Mr. Justice Page omitted to draw the attention of the jury to the case for the defence, save and except the reference made by him, at the request of the Standing Counsel, to the statement recorded under sec. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This contention has rendered necessary a minute examination of the entire evidence and of the summing up inasmuch as the defence has to be gathered in this case from the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution and from the statement made by the accused after the close of the evidence. Whether there has or has not been misdirection by reason of non-direction cannot be discussed as an abstract question of law.

As Lord Alverstone, C. J., said in R. v. Stoddar (136) quoting with approval the words of Lord Esher, M. R., in Abrath v. N.-W. Railway Co. (137) mere non-direction is not necessarily mis-direction : those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood: see also R. v. Cohen (138) and R. v. Elahee Bux (139). Besides, every summing up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial, and the questions which have been raised by the Counsel for the prosecution and for the defence respectively. As Jenkins, C. J., observed in Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (1), the conduct of a case by a Counsel is not a negligible factor even in a Criminal Court though it may not necessarily conclude the accused, and that it is not without its influence is forcibly illustrated by the judgment of Lord Alverstone, C. J., in R. v. Bridgwater (140), with which all the Judges hearing that case agreed. The substance of the matter is that non-direction when it consists in omission to put the material facts or to put the defence to the jury is sufficient to cause the Court to quash the conviction, if the Court comes to the conclusion that is reasonably probable that the verdict of the jury was affected thereby: R. v. Hill (141), R. v. Wilson (142), R. v. Sturgess (143), R. v. Baily (144), R. v. Wann (145), R. v. Smith (146) and R. v. Willett (147).

The points which have been emphasised before us by Counsel for the prisoner may be summarised as follows :—(1) Did three or four persons form the party? (2) Did two or three persons go inside the room and fire? (3) Was the prisoner the man who stood outside? Did the prisoner share the murderous intention of the other members of the party? Special stress has also been laid on what has been called the live-cartridge incident. The Standing Counsel has urged, on the other hand, that the case as now presented with so much elaboration was not developed in the evidence as elicited by cross-examination of the witnesses for the Crown. He has further maintained that the live-cartridge incident was not mentioned when Counsel for the prisoner addressed the jury. I have come to the conclusion that the importance of the live-cartridge incident, whatever its value may be, was not realised by Counsel for the accused at the trial. Purna Chandra Dey, a clerk in the Meteorological office, who was examined as a witness on behalf of the prosecution, produced two cartridges which he stated had been made over to him by the Police. He then added that they were given to him by another man in front of 26, Sankaritolla East Lane at about 4 P.M. in the afternoon of the 3rd August, and that he showed to the Police the spot which that man pointed out to him, as the place where they were found. The record ends here, as the witness was not further examined or cross-examined. The Standing Counsel has stated that as soon as the cartridges were produced by the witness, Counsel for the prisoner enquired whether the prosecution would call the man who, it was alleged, had found the cartridges. The prosecution stated that the man could not be produced as his whereabouts had not been traced. Counsel for the prisoner thereupon objected to the reception of the cartridges in evidence or of a hearsay statement as to the spot where they had been picked up by the unknown man. The objection was allowed and Mr. Justice Page ruled that the cartridges would not go in evidence. But they were not formally struck out of the list of exhibits and were shown to Mr. Bavin, Deputy Commissioner, though not to Mr. Todd, the gun-maker, when they were subsequently examined as witnesses. The evidence, however, furnished no indication as to the bearing of the discovery of the cartridges on the case for the defence. No doubt, we have been here pressed with the argument that the discovery of the live-cartridge shows that the accused fired his pistol for the first time in the course of his flight in the street, that he had not fired his pistol inside the Post Office, that he was consequently not one of the men who went inside the room, that his identification by the witnesses was accordingly unreliable and that he was really the man who stood outside, not participating in the murderous intention entertained by his confederates. This argument is attractive; but if the discovery of the live-cartridge was intended to be used as the basis for this theory, Counsel for accused should not have objected to the reception of the evidence. When we pass on to the other points emphasised on behalf of the accused, his Counsel finds himself in a difficulty, but of a different character. The points whereon such emphasis has been laid in the argument before us were not clearly foreshadowed, indeed, they were very imperfectly indicated in the cross-examination. I have read the summing up with the care it deserves. The impression left on my mind is that, taken as a whole, it is what is sometimes designated a charge for conviction. But it cannot fairly be said that the facts were not left to the jury to decide and that the Judge usurped their function, merely because he gave expression, as he was entitled, to his opinion on the evidence strongly. R. v. West (148), R. v. Beely (149), R. v. Frampton (150), and R. v. O'Donnell (151). We must further remember that as Lord Hatherley said in Prudential Assurance Coy. v. Edmonds (152), it is not fair to criticise every line and letter of a summing up which has been delivered by a Judge in trying a case, specially when there is a somewhat imperfect record of it. We are not called upon to consider whether this or that phrase was the best that might have been chosen or whether a direction which has been attacked might have been more fully or more conveniently expressed, or whether other topics which might have been dealt with on other occasions should have been introduced. As Lord Shaw observed in Arnold v. King-Emperor (153), a charge to a jury must be read as a whole; the substantial question is, whether the evidence for the prosecution and the case for the defence were fairly summed up. I am not unmindful that, as ruled in Emperor v. Upendra Nath (1), the mere fact that Counsel for the accused has failed to present to the Court a particular aspect of the case, cannot justify an omission on the part of the Judge to draw the attention of the jury to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused even on the prosecution evidence; it is the duty of the Judge to draw the attention of the jury to such possible view of the case, on the evidence, notwithstanding that it may have escaped the Counsel for the accused; in other words, the line of defence adopted by Counsel does not relieve the Judge of his duty; R. v. Totty (154), R. v. Davis (155) and R. v. Burton (156). But the duty which is thus imposed on the Judge can be discharged only with reference to the evidence adduced at the trial. In the case before us, the real difficulty is that the case for the defence was not adequately developed in such evidence as could be elicited by cross-examination of the witnesses for the Crown. I do not hesitate to record my opinion that the cross-examination was perfunctory and the defence of the accused became intelligible only when he made his statement under sec. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, namely the three-fold assertion that he was the man in the courtyard, that he was not one of those who did fire at the Post Master and that he did not share the intention of his confederates to commit a murder. The fact, however, cannot be overlooked that a statement under sec. 342 is not made on oath and cannot be tested by cross-examination. The accused is afforded an opportunity to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, on the principle explained by Tindal, C. J., in R. v. Frost (157), namely, that though the proof of the case against the prisoner must depend for its support, not upon the absence of explanation on the part of the prisoner, but upon the positive affirmative evidence of his guilt given by the Crown, yet if he is involved by such evidence in a state of considerable suspicion, he is called upon, for his own sake and for his own safety, to state and elucidate the circumstances, whatever they may be, which might reconcile such suspicious appearances with perfect innocence: see Amrita Lal Hazra v. Emperor (158). The statement of the accused cannot be placed on a higher level than this, and the Court and the jury are expressly left free to draw such inference from the refusal of the accused to answer or from the answers he gives, as they think just. Mr. Justice Page accurately appraised the function of the statement of the accused, and no exception can be taken on that ground. But his summing up was defective to this extent that it did not at first specifically refer to the statement. The Standing Counsel, however, properly called attention to the point, whereupon Mr. Justice Page made supplementary observations. This might not have been sufficient, if the points which arose on the statement had not already been dealt with by him on reference to the evidence, for as observed in R. v. Willett (147), a grave omission to direct the jury on a cardinal matter in the case cannot be made good merely by Counsel's calling attention to it at the termination of the summing up. It is one thing to indicate agreement with a submission made by Counsel; it is another to direct a jury effectively.

The vital truth of the matter is, not that the summing up was inadequate, judged in the light of what had been elicited in the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, but that proper foundation for the defence theory had not been laid in the evidence. This has created serious doubts in my mind as to whether in view of the perfunctory nature of the cross-examination, the accused can be said to have had a fair trial. I am not in a position to explore the reason for this perfunctory cross-examination, or to ascertain whether it is attributable to the inaptitude of Counsel who had from a very early stage formed the opinion that the accused had no defence to make and who had been advised that while it was their duty to test by cross-examination the accuracy of the witnesses for the Crown, they were not entitled to set up any substantive defence in opposition to the case for the Crown. How defective the cross-examination was is illustrated by the fact that a very material point was elicited from the packer Hara Prasad Das not on cross-examination by defence Counsel, but in answer to a question by the Court when the witness was re-called at the request of one of the jurors. What cannot but be regarded as a grave defect in the conduct of the defence case cannot in such circumstances be remedied except by a retrial, if such retrial is permissible under the law.

I am fortified in this view by another circumstance of fundamental importance which cannot be overlooked, viz., the question of the proper sentence when an accused is convicted under sec. 302 read with sec. 34. The cases in the books since the decision in Queen v. Baboo Lall (159) show that in such a contingency the facts must be carefully ascertained before the sentence is determined. This aspect of the matter was indicated by Sir James Colvile in Ganes Singh v. Ram Raja (21). In that case, chiefs of several villages collected people together with the preconcerted purpose of plundering the Plaintiff's property; all acted with a common purpose of plunder and each co-operated more or less. The Judicial Committee held that where parties go with a common purpose to execute a common object, each and every one becomes responsible for the acts of each and every other, in execution and furtherance of their common purpose; as the purpose is common, so must be the responsibility. In such a contingency, each and every person, co-operating to any extent in a plunder of this description, is responsible in a civil proceeding to recoup the party plundered for the loss he has sustained. But in a criminal matter, punishment may be apportioned. In the civil proceeding, it is immaterial what share of the plunder one received of whether one was coerced to join in the transaction, although if the matter culminated in a criminal proceeding, where the Judge had to inflict a punishment, all that might be taken into account. In my opinion, it would not be right on principle even to consider the punishment, before it has been determined whether the accused is to be convicted under sec. 302 alone or under sec. 302 read with sec. 34. This is precisely a case where a special verdict may appropriately be taken, so as to enable the Judge, who alone fixes the punishment, to ascertain what are the precise facts found by the jury, on whom after all the duty is imposed to decide which view of the facts is true; R. v. Dudley (160). Such a course becomes almost essential, where, as here, Counsel for the accused even before the commencement of the trial, has informed the Judge that there is no defence to the charge and has raised the question of punishment. I fully realise that a Judge is sometimes placed inevitably in a difficult situation, such as when he has before him a confession by the accused which is retracted or rejected because obtained by improper means, or where he has before him the fact of previous conviction of the accused, or, where, notwithstanding a plea of guilty by an accused in a capital case, the prosecution, according to established procedure, seeks to prove the case; Emperor v. Chinna (161) and Emperor v. Laxmya (162). But I am not convinced of the necessity or propriety of an addition to the embarrassments of a Judge, the formation of whose judgment is subject to the operation of subconcious forces, as has been felicitously expressed by Benjamin Cardozo in his illuminating analysis of the nature of the Judicial Process: "There has been a certain lack of candor in much of the discussion of the theme, or rather perhaps in the refusal to discuss it, as if Judges must lose respect and confidence by the reminder that they are subject to human limitations. I do not doubt the grandeur of the conception which lifts them into the realm of pure reason, above and beyond the sweep of perturbing and deflecting forces. None the less, if there is anything of reality in any analysis of the judicial process, they do not stand aloof on these chill and distant heights; and we shall not help the cause of truth by acting and speaking as if they do." (Page 168). This would be an additional reason for retrial, if the grant of retrial be within the power of this Court, and this brings me to the consideration of the scope of cl. 26 of the Letters Patent.

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

Cls. 25 and 26 of the Letters Patent are in these terms: "25. And we do further ordain, that there shall be no appeal to the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal from any sentence or order passed or made in any criminal trial before the Courts of Original Criminal Jurisdiction which may be constituted by one or more Judges of the said High Court. But it shall be at the discretion of any such Court to reserve any point or points of law for the opinion of the said High Court.

"26. And we do further ordain, that on such point or points of law being so reserved as aforesaid, or on its being certified by the said Advocate-General, that, in his judgment, there is an error in the decision of a point or points of law decided by the Court of Original Criminal Jurisdiction, or that a point or points of law which has or have been decided by the said Court should be further considered, the said High Court shall have full power and authority to review the case, or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such point or points of law, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of Original Jurisdiction, and to pass such judgment and sentence as to the said High Court shall seem right."

Cl. 25 ordains that there shall be no appeal from any sentence or order passed or made in any criminal trial before the High Court as a Court of Original Criminal Jurisdiction. The trial Judge, however, is granted discretion to reserve any point or points of law for the opinion of the High Court. Cl. 26 contemplates in addition a case where the Advocate-General has certified that in his judgment there is an error in the decision of a point or points of law decided by the trial Judge or that a point or points of law which has or have been decided by the trial Judge should be further considered. Cl. 26 provides that in both the classes of cases, that is, where a point of law has been reserved by the trial Judge or where a certificate has been granted by the Advocate-General in either of the two forms mentioned, the High Court shall have full power and authority to review the case or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such point or points of law, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the trial Court and to pass such judgment and sentence as to the High Court shall seem right.

The initial step is for the trial Judge to reserve a point of law or for the Advocate-General to grant a certificate. The successive stages of the process which follows inevitably may now be enumerated:—

(i) The Court reviews the entire case or such part of it as may be necessary.

(ii) The Court finally determines the point or points of law reserved or certified.

(iii) The Court thereupon alters the sentence passed by the trial Court.

(iv) The Court passes such judgment and sentence as shall seem right to the Court.

As regards the first stage, it is plain that the Court reviews the case in whole or in part with a view to decide the point of law reserved or certified. This is placed beyond doubt by the use of the word "necessary," which clearly means "necessary for the decision of the point of law reserved or certified." The Court does not at this stage treat the case as open for re-consideration in all its generality, as might have been possible if an appeal had not been excluded by cl. 25.

As regards the second stage, it is equally clear that what is finally determined is the point of law reserved or certified. This confirms the view just indicated as to the function of the Court in the first stage.

As regards the third stage, where the Court can alter the sentence passed by the trial Court, the scope manifestly depends upon the true construction of the term "thereupon." The term "thereupon" may be interpreted as equivalent to "upon final determination of the point of law reserved or certified." Such an unqualified interpretation, if adopted, would lead to the result that even if the point of law reserved or certified has been decided against the prisoner, he would be entitled to invite the Court to alter the sentence. Such an interpretation, in my judgment, would be unreasonable, and would defeat the fundamental restriction that no appeal lies from the sentence or order of the trial Judge. When a point of law is reserved by the trial Judge or a certificate is granted by the Advocate-General, the purpose is to secure an alteration of the sentence on the hypothesis that it is based on an erroneous view taken by the trial Judge of a point of law. If no error is established, the reason why the prisoner can claim an alteration of the sentence disappears. The term "thereupon" must consequently be construed with reference to the context; and it may, with good reason, be interpreted as equivalent to "upon final determination of the point of law reserved or certified in favour of the prisoner." It is not necessary that the contention of the prisoner should succeed in its entirety; if the opinion of the trial Judge on the point reserved or certified, which forms an ingredient of the reasons for conviction and sentence, is not supported, the conviction cannot be sustained, and it then becomes open to the Court to alter the sentence passed by the trial Judge.

As regards the fourth stage, the context shows that if the third stage has been reached and the Court is in a position to exercise the full power and authority vested in it to alter the sentence, the Court is competent to pass such judgment and sentence as to the Court shall seem right. The question must be faced, at this stage, whether the power and authority to pass such judgment and sentence as to the Court shall seem right include power and authority to direct a retrial. In the determination of this matter, we cannot obviously ignore the judicial decisions pronounced on the subject during the last sixty years.

In this Court, sec. 26 has been invoked and applied in the cases of R. v Yad Ali (163), R. v. Haribole (164), R. v. Pemantle (165), R. v. Shib Chandra Mitra (166), R. v. Nilmadhab Mitter (167), R. v. Barton (168), R. v. O'Hara (169), R. v. Abbas Ali (170), R. v. McGuire (171), R. v. Zawar Rahaman (172), R. v. Imam Ali (173), R. v. Charu Chandra Mookerjee (174), R. v. Khudiram (175), R. v. Taleb (176), R. v. Upendra Nath Das (1), R. v. Fateh Chand (177), R. v. Peary (178) and

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

R. v. Panchu Das (179). In R. v. Pemantle (165), R. v. Nilmadhab (167), R. v. Abbas Ali (170), R. v. Zawar Rahaman (172) and R. v. Panchu Das (179) points of law had been reserved by the trial Judge under cl. 25. In R. v. Taleb (176) a point had been reserved by the trial Judge under cl. 25 and a certificate had been granted by the Advocate-General under cl. 26. In the other cases, certificates had been granted by the Advocate-General. It is worthy of note that Advocate-Generals have, in all modesty, generally granted certificates in the second form, viz., that there is a point or points of law which should be further considered. There are four instances of certificates in the first form, viz., that the point of law has been erroneously decided; in two of these, R. v. Yad Ali (163) and R. v. Taleb (176) the opinion expressed in the certificate prevailed; in the other two, viz., R. v. McGuire (171) and R. v. Upendra Nath Das (1) the opinion expressed in the certificate was rejected.

In each of the cases mentioned, whether the point of law had been reserved or certified, the Court, in the first instance examined and determined such point and such point alone, and it was only when that point had been decided in favour of the accused that the Court proceeded to consider the question of alteration of the sentence passed by the trial Court. Where the point reserved or certified was decided against the accused the Court did not proceed further. This is illustrated by the cases of R. v. Pemantle (165), R. v. Shib Chandra (166), R. v. Nilmadhab (167), R. v. Barton (168), R. v. Abbas Ali (170), R. v. McGuire (171), R. v. Zawar Rahaman (172), R. v. Charu Chandra Mookerjee (174), R. v. Upendra Nath Das (1) and R. v. Peary (178). The case of R. v. Yad Ali (163) stands in a class by itself; there the conviction was proper, but the sentence was illegal, inasmuch as rigorous imprisonment had been directed where simple imprisonment was prescribed by the Indian Penal Code. This was the error certified, and the sentence was accordingly set right.

In cases where the point reserved or certified was decided in favour of the accused, the Court proceeded to consider the evidence on the record, in other words, assumed the functions of the jury. This class comprises the cases of R. v. Haribole (164), R. v. O'Hara (169), R. v. Imam Ali (173), R. v. Khudiram (175), R. v. Taleb (176), R. v. Fateh Chand (177) and R. v.

Panchu Das (179). In the first of these cases, R. v. Haribole (164) the Court, upon consideration of the residue of the evidence, affirmed the conviction and sentence. In the other cases, the Court either set aside the conviction and sentence or affirmed the conviction but modified the sentence. Except in R. v. Yad Ali (163) in every case that I have been able to discover the conviction was challenged on the ground of what may be comprehensively termed "misdirection" which includes erroneous direction or non-direction as also erroneous reception or exclusion of evidence. In cases of misreception of evidence, the Court was faced with sec. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act and felt constrained to consider whether the balance of evidence left after exclusion of what had been erroneously admitted was sufficient to support the conviction. In cases of erroneous direction or non-direction. sec. 167 was held inapplicable and yet the Court proceeded to estimate the probative value of the evidence recorded at the trial. The most important decisions from this point of view are those of R. v. Fateh Chand (177) and R. v. Panchu Das (179). The construction placed on cl. 26 in the case last mentioned, R. v. Panchu Das (179), militates against the view that the clause authorises the Court to grant a retrial. It must be noted, however, that the case then under consideration was that of erroneous reception of evidence which would attract the application of sec. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act. I had occasion to point out that the view taken accorded with the accepted interpretation of sec. 2 of the Crown Cases Act, 1848, which furnished the model for the provisions of cls. 25 and 26 of our Letters Patent; R. v. Saunders (180) and Queen v. Gibson (181). It was further observed that though R. v. Mellor (6) and R. v. Yeadon (182) might be invoked as authorities in support of the grant of a venire de novo when the trial has been what is called a mis-trial, that is, a trial under such very exceptional circumstances as vitiate it because it is conducted in a manner unknown to law, weighty authority for the contrary position might be found in the decisions of the Judicial Committee in R. v. Bertand (183) and R. v. Murphy (184), which dissented from R. v. Scaife (185) and was mentioned by Bovill, C. J., in R. v. Martin (186). The view thus taken by this Court in the case of R. v. Panchu Das (179) is in accord with the prevailing opinion in Bombay as well as in Madras, as appears from the decisions in R. v. Dayal Jayraj (187), R. v. Navroji (188), R. v. Pestonji (2), R. v. Pitambar (67), R. v. Narayan (189), R. v. Subrahmania (190) and R. v. Muthu Kumar Swamy (191).

Since the decision of this Court in R. v. Panchu Das (179), the question of re-trial has been examined by the House of Lords in Crane v. Director of Public Prosecution (192), where the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Crane (193) was affirmed by a majority. Viscount Finlay maintained that the deliberate policy of the legislature in the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, is to prevent any further proceedings, such as would have taken place on an award of a venire de novo by the Court of Error or the granting of a new trial by the High Court in criminal cases. Lord Dunedin, Lord Atkinson, Lord Sumner and Lord Parmoor took the contrary view, and upon an analysis of R. v. Mellor (6) and R. v. Yeadon (182) held that the award of a venire de novo in the event of mis-trial was competent to the Court of Crown Cases Reserved and was equally open to the Court of Criminal Appeal; R. v. Dickman (194) and R. v. Wakefield (195). To put the matter briefly, the choice, in their opinion, did not lie between affirmation and acquittal.

I am not called upon to decide whether, under any imaginable combination of circumstances which may place a criminal trial in the category of mis-trial, that is, no trial in the eye of the law, this Court is competent under cl. 26 to direct a retrial when it is in a position to exercise full power and authority to pass such judgment and sentence as shall seem right. When such a contingency happens, the true effect of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Subrahmania v. King-Emperor (190) will require careful consideration, and the Court will have to determine whether the expression pass judgment and sentence" may be so interpreted as to include an order of retrial.

In the case before us, there are several difficulties which bar the path of the prisoner. In the first place, according to the accepted interpretation of cl. 26, the only points open for examination during the first two stages of the proceedings under cl. 26, are the points of law specifically mentioned in the certificate of the Advocate General; [cf. the observation of Wills, J., in R. v. Stubbs (196)]. No other points are open for consideration at those stages, even though such points may have emerged from an examination of the materials requisite for the decision of the certified points, or have otherwise come to the knowledge of the Court. The matters which in my judgment have tended to affect the fairness of the trial are not mentioned in the certificate; indeed, they could not, in the circumstances already explained, be expected to appear in a certificate granted upon application made by Counsel who have conducted the defence as they have done. In the second place, as neither of the two points specifically certified has been sustained, we cannot pass from the second to the third stage when alone the question of alteration of sentence can come under consideration. In the third place, even if cl. 26 were construed to include full power and authority to direct a retrial when there had been no trial in the eye of the law, the question would still remain whether what had happened brought the case within that category.

It may seem unsatisfactory that the jurisdiction created by cls. 25 and 26 of the Letters Patent should be so limited in scope and that its exercise should be subject to such stringent conditions. It must be remembered, however, that these provisions were framed in view of the powers exercised by the Court of King's Bench under a Writ of Error on the fiat of the Advocate-General and by the Court of Crown Cases Reserved under the Statute of 1848. (For the antecedent state of the law reference may be made to the charges of Ryan, C. J., and Grant, J., which are set out in the Appendix to the edition of the Supreme Court Rules by Smoult and Ryne). Since then the Criminal Appeal Act of 1907 has been brought into operation, and yet notwithstanding the extensive powers of interference conferred on the Court of Criminal Appeal, that Court has occasionally found it impossible to grant relief by way of appeal, though it did not hesitate to express the opinion that the circumstances might justify the intervention of the Secretary of State with a view to the exercise of the clemency of the Crown. Two such instances will be found in the cases of R. v. Law (197) and R. v. Pridmore (198). In the case last mentioned, it was ruled that if two persons are engaged in a common unlawful enterprise, and one of them, to avoid apprehension, attempts murder, both may be found guilty of the felony, if the jury are satisfied from their conduct at the time that at any moment there was a determination on the part of each to aid the other in escaping arrest; but if it can be ascertained which actually made the attempt, the sentence on him should be the heavier. This fits in with the principle enunciated by Sir James Colvile in Ganesh Singh v. Ram Raja (21) and the concluding observations made by Phillimore, J., may be recalled here: "We wish to add a word on another matter. There is a good deal to support the suggestion that the other man fired, and although in law both are guilty, if it is clearly established that one fired the shot, the sentence on the other might well be reduced. If there is additional evidence to show that the other prisoner fired the shot, it would be proper to submit it to the Home Secretary, and we think that if he is satisfied on the point, it would be proper to reduce the sentence on the Appellant by the clemency of the Crown; but it is not a matter with which this Court can deal." [Cf. Queen v. Babee (199)]. If the Court of Criminal Appeal found itself in this position we cannot put an extended construction on cls. 25 and 26 of our Letters Patent.

In my opinion, there is no escape from the conclusion that as neither of the two points of law specifically certified by the Advocate-General can be answered in favour of the accused, his application for review must be dismissed so far as the exercise of the powers conferred on this Court by cl. 26 of the Letters Patent is concerned. I desire to add finally that the trial of this case has made clearer than ever the necessity for full and accurate shorthand notes of the proceedings at the trial, on the lines indicated in sec. 16 of the Criminal Appeal Act.

The importance of such shorthand notes was emphasised by Reading, L. C. J., in R. v. Dixon (200) and by Trevethin, L. C. J., in R. v. Monkham (201) and in the case last mentioned, the following observations were made: "This shorthand note of the proceedings is not clear. In several cases recently this Court has had to complain of the insufficiency of the shorthand notes. It must be understood by shorthand writers that their duty is to take in shorthand everything that occurs at the trial, so that if an appeal is brought, this Court may be able to form as good an opinion as is possible when reading the transcript. An abbreviated note is not sufficient. Everything that occurs at the trial must be taken, in the form of question and answer, which should be numbered, to admit of easy reference."

The order of the Court is that the application made by the prisoner under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent do stand dismissed.

RICHARDSON, J.—At the outset I desire to express my concurrence generally with the observations which have been made by the learned Judge presiding in reference to the duties cast upon an Advocate-General by cl. 26 of the Letters Patent.

As to the meaning of sec. 34 of the Penal Code, which I regard as the main question in this case, a question which touches the daily administration of the law, I also agree with the conclusion which has been stated.

I need not recapitulate the facts. Amrita Lal Ray, the Post Master of the Sankaritolla Post Office in Calcutta, was killed on the 3rd August last by a bullet fired from an automatic pistol. For my present purpose it is not necessary to decide which of the three or four men, including the accused Barendra Kumar Ghosh, fired the fatal shot. The accused Barendra was subsequently tried by Page, J. and a Special Jury on a charge of murder framed under sec. 302 of the Penal Code. The jury found him guilty and he was sentenced to death.

In the course of his charge to the jury, the learned Judge instructed them in effect, that if the three or four persons, of whom the accused Barendra was one, went to the place with a common intention to rob the Post Master and, if necessary, to kill him, and if the jury were satisfied that one of them fired the fatal shot in furtherance of that common intention, then they were all equally liable. In those circumstances it was the duty of the jury to find the accused guilty of murder, whether the fatal shot was fired by him or by one of the others.

That is the substance of the direction in respect of which the learned Advocate-General has given his fiat or certificate that a matter of law is raised proper for the further consideration of this Court.

Now, the learned Counsel for the accused conceded that judged by the common law of England, the learned Judge was not in error. The law of England on the subject is of old standing as a reference to any well-known text-book and to such cases as R. v. Salmon (25) and R. v. Coney (26) will show.

Learned Counsel, however, was careful to remind us, and I do not forget, that we are bound to consider Indian and not English law. But some reference to English law is still necessary because the point before us cannot well be discussed without using expressions, which, though they have dropped out of use in India because they are not to be found in the Code, are still familiar in England, and were, I think, familiar to Indian lawyers of the middle of the last century, at any rate to those of the Presidency towns, including Calcutta, where the principal laws were wont to be promulgated. These expressions merely supply a convenient terminology and, when they are understood, I know of nothing in the history of the Penal Code before it became law which throws much, if any, light on the meaning of sec. 34.* The usual rule applies that the intentions of the legislature are to be gathered from the words used in the context in which they stand. The Code, however, became law in 1860 and in construing any of its provisions, we are entitled to guidance from the course of judicial decision, even if there be no authority binding on us as a Full Bench.

The terms referred to and their meanings are as follows :—

A principal in the first degree is the immediate perpetrator of an act, the person, for instance, by whose proper hand a death wound is inflicted.

A principal in the second degree (1) must be present at the commission of the act, and (2) he must be aiding and abetting. The older and perhaps better term "accessory at the fact" implies both elements. But if this term be employed, it has to be remembered that the person so described is in English law a principal.

An accessory before the fact is under the Code an abetter and is dealt with in the chapter on abetment.

The accessory after the fact has no present interest. Under the Code he is punishable in particular cases for such separate and independent offences as harbouring or concealing an offender, or facilitating escape from lawful custody and so forth.

The difference between the two degrees of principals is clearly explained in the following charge given to a jury in a case where a man had been killed in a duel and the seconds or one of the seconds was under trial for murder as an accessory at the fact. It does not signify whether the offence committed was murder, as in England, or, as it would be in India, culpable homicide not amounting to murder [Code, sec. 299, Exception (5)]. The charge runs :—

"There is no difficulty as to the law on this subject. Principals in the first degree are those by whom the death wound is inflicted, principals in the second degree, those who are present at the time it is given aiding and abetting, comforting and assisting, the persons actually engaged in the contest. Mere presence alone will not be sufficient to make a party an aider and abetter, but it is essential that he should by his countenance and conduct in the proceeding, being present, aid and assist the principals" (that is, the principals in the first degree). "If either of the persons sustained the principal" (that is, the principal in the first degree) "by his advice or presence, or if you think he went down for the purpose of encouraging and forwarding the unlawful conflict, although he did not do or say anything, yet if he was present and assisting and encouraging when the pistol was fired, he will be guilty of the offence imputed by the indictment."

That charge was approved in Coney's case (26) by Cave, J., with whose judgment the eight Judges comprising the majority generally agreed.

Coming then to the Code, I propose, in the first instance, to deal with the point which arises as though it were res integra.

Sec. 34 and the closely connected secs. 35, 37 and 38 were intended to lay down compendiously, in the fewest possible words, some elementary principles of criminal liability. They do not create offences and, given the common intention, in practice it does not signify which section applies in any particular case. As

* NOTE.—It may be convenient if I attached a brief note of so much of the relevant history as I know.—T. W. R.

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

matter of construction they are interpretative clauses, included in the chapter of General Explanations, and must be read into the Code definitions of substantive offences.

The precise point for determination, as I conceive, is whether the liability imposed by sec. 34, with which we are chiefly concerned, extends only to principals in the first degree or whether it also extends to principals in the second degree or accessories at the fact. The narrower view is urged for the accused, the wider one for the Crown.

If the narrower view be adapted the liability of accessories at the fact must depend entirely on provisions in the chapter on abetment such as secs. 107, 109 and 111. Another way, therefore, of stating the question is this:—

As the Code does not use the terms principal in the first degree and principal in the second degree, the inference is that it was thought unnecessary to retain the distinction. What is the result? Are accessories at the fact classed with principals under sec. 34 or are they classed under the later provisions with abetters?

Sec. 34 speaks of a criminal act being done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, and it pronounces that "each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone."

The objection to giving the section the wider meaning is founded on the opening phrase:—"When an act is done by several persons." It is argued that when, for instance, one man is stabbed by another in the presence of the latter's confederates, the act of stabbing is done by the one man and not by his confederates. That is no doubt true in one sense of the words. But it is argued on the other side, that to stop at the opening words is to give no force or value to the words which follow, "in furtherance of the common intention," that the reference to common intention introduces the notion of common responsibility, and that if the language as a whole be given its full sense, the act done is the joint act, or the act of the immediate perpetrator and his confederates, because it is done in furtherance of the common intention of them all.

The fact that the words "in furtherance of the common intention" were inserted by an amending Act of 1870, makes no difference to the meaning. In either view of the section, the qualification, if not expressed, would necessarily have to be implied.

No assistance again for either view is to be obtained from sec. 33 which says that "the word 'act' denotes as well a series of acts as a single act." For clearly sec. 34 must be so construed as to have an intelligent meaning when applied to the case of a single act done by several persons.

Nor do I think that anything turns, as the learned Standing Counsel suggested, on any difference between a criminal act and an offence. Leaving out "special" and "local" laws, and confining myself to the Penal Code, a criminal act would seem to be an act forbidden by and punishable under some provision of the Code, if the requirements of that provision as to the intention or state of mind of the doer are satisfied. By definition, therefore, (sec. 40), a criminal act is an offence and it may be an offence under more than one provision. The limit of punishment awardable may depend on the quality of the intention with which the act is done and on the effect produced. The offence at its highest is then the complete whole comprising the act done with the concomitant criminal mind, or intent, or mens rea, and the effect produced. An unjustifiable blow is a criminal act and an assault. If it causes death, the offence may amount to murder. If the injury is not fatal, the offence will amount to something less than murder.

An effect, e.g., death, may be caused—

(a) by a single act done by one man;

(b) by a series of acts done by one man at the same time and place, e.g., a succession of blows;

(c) by acts done by different men at the same time and place, e.g., two men inflicting separate wounds each of which, apart from the other, would be fatal, or one man holding a ladder while another ascends and kills the occupant of the room above.

The acts of the different men may each be a single act or a series of acts;

(d) by separate acts (or series of acts) done by the same man, or by different men, at different times or places, e.g., the case in illustration (a) of sec. 37, of a man being killed by small doses of poison administered at different times.

The question is, does the group of sections render liable accessories at the fact to these various acts?

According to the wider view, an act (or a series of acts) is done by several persons when one man in the presence of confederates gives another a blow (or a succession of blows). According to the same view, the case of a series of acts done by different persons at different times and places, each separate act possibly in the presence of different confederates, is governed by sec. 37. This result is intelligible.

The other view of the section presents great difficulty when applied to a single act done by several persons. Learned Counsel for the accused said that sec. 34 postulates not only identity in intention but also identity in act. But when do several persons do the same act in the narrow sense suggested? The question, so far as I know, has no place in criminal law and has never been discussed in India or in England. Take the case suggested in the argument, of three men pulling a heavy roller over a sleeping child. The three men are not doing the same act. There are three men doing different acts of pulling, possibly with different degrees of strength. One man might say by way of excuse or palliation that the pulling was done by the other two and that he merely had his hand on the handle bar. Or suppose that three men hold the dagger which was driven into the victim. The driving force might come from one man. The hold of the other two men on the dagger might merely show that their minds and consent went with the act. What is the difference between these two men and the men who, without pulling a useless hand on the dagger, stand by aiding and assisting, as for instance by preventing the victim from struggling or by keeping watch? The latter participates or cooperates in the act just as much as the two men. The act is done by them all. Other cases suggested by learned Counsel fare no better.

Take the case of the two men pulling taut from opposite directions, the noose which they have put round a third man's neck. Here again it would be open to one of the two men to say that he at his end of the rope did no pulling and the deceased was killed by the rope being sharply jerked by the man at the other end.

Similarly in the cases suggested of several men causing death by drowning by holding a man under water or upsetting him out of a boat. The individuals concerned in these offences do not each and all do the same act. In the case of two men drowning a third, one of the two men might plead that while he only committed an assault by pushing the deceased over the bank, it was the other who held the head of the deceased under the water and so drowned him.

The truth is that in all these cases what is single is the effect produced. The different men who take part in the offence may do similar acts. But their acts are not the same. They are different acts. Even if mere similarity were sufficient, it would be impossible to prove. As shown above pleas destructive of similarity, still more of identity, might be put forward in excuse. Murders of the sort suggested are not usually committed in broad day-light in the presence of witnesses able to take stock of the precise part taken by different offenders.

In the wider view of secs. 34 and 37, these cases would present no difficulty. Prove the common intention of the persons present at the commission of the offence and all would be equally guilty of nothing less than that offence. If death were the result of the act or series of acts of one out of several confederates, the act would be done by them all within the meaning of sec. 34. If death followed the different acts of different confederates at the same time and place, then again sec. 34 would probably suffice. Every confederate would be regarded as having done every criminal act and would therefore be liable as if he had done them all alone. The responsibility is mutual. If necessary, however, sec. 37 might be resorted to and it would not matter which section applied, provided that one or other section covered all reasonable hypotheses.

So far, therefore, I take the wider view of sec. 34 and the connected sections. I have next to deal with the contention founded on the Code provisions relating to abetment.

Abetment is an independent offence whether the abetted offence is committed (sec. 109) or not committed (secs. 115 and 116). We are concerned with the case where the abetted offence is committed. There must then be an abettor on the one hand and an abettee who is a principal on the other. Even where the offender acts by the hand of an innocent person, such as a person not capable by law of committing an offence, the Code (sec. 108) treats the former not as principal but as abettor. It certainly does not follow as of course that the Code regards accessories at the fact as abettors and not as principals.

It is true that under the definition in sec. 107, abetment may take the forms of instigation, conspiracy or aid, and that by Exp. 2, "whoever either prior to or at the time of the commission of an act, does anything in order to facilitate the commission of that act, and thereby facilitates the commission thereof, is said to aid the doing of that act." But as I read the section it does not contemplate the abettor being present when the abetted criminal act or offence is committed. The aid given at the time of commission referred to in Exp. 2 seems to mean aid given at the time but at such a distance from the scene that the abettor cannot be said to be present. The case of Kashi Nath Naek v. Queen-Empress (202) is typical. The explanation may have been intended to obviate any diffi-

If I am right, then A, B and C being together, if A says to B, "kill C," and B thereupon shoots C, A would be punishable not under sec. 109 but under sec. 302 construed in the light of sec. 34. This result accords with the opinion of Markby, J., in R. v. Mohamed Asger (33), where the word accessory is used as meaning "accessory before the fact" or abettor. (See also Mayne, Criminal Law, Part II, sec. 246).

It may be said that "instigation" and "conspiracy" must occur before the offence, even if, in the case of instigation, it is only just before. But abettors by these modes seem to be thought of as separated from the commission of the offence not only by time but also by place. Abetment is not thought of as coincident with the offence. If the general term "abettors" included accessories at the fact, Exp. 2 would be superfluous. Persons who, having previously abetted (as accessories before the fact), are also present when the offence is committed are dealt with in sec. 114.

Sec. 114, the only section in the chapter which speaks of the abettor being present on the scene, supports the foregoing construction of secs. 107 and 109. It provides that when any person "who, if absent, would be liable to be punished as an abettor," is present at the commission of the act or offence abetted, "he shall be deemed to have committed such act or offence." It was held, as early as 1867, in R. v. Musstt. Niruni (203), that to bring an accused within these words, it is necessary first to make out the circumstances which constitute abetment, so that "if absent" the accused would have been liable to be punished as an abettor, and this ruling has since been followed [Abhi Misser v. Lachmi Narain (204) and Keshawar Lal Saha v. Girish Chunder Dutt (37)]. If present at the time, the person who would otherwise be an abettor, is treated as a principal.

An illustration will be found in a recent case which came before the Court of Criminal Appeal in England, R. v. Edith Thompson (205). The prisoner there was present when her husband was killed by her lover, R. v. By-Waters (206). Though present, it is doubtful whether she would have been convicted as an accessory at the fact, if it had not been for the incriminating letters which she had previously written to By-Waters. Under sec. 114, if absent, she would have been liable as an abettor, and therefore her mere presence when the murder was committed would have rendered her guilty of that offence.

Sec. 114 would appear to serve two purposes. Firstly, it marks the fact that where it can be proved that the accused, if absent, would be liable as an abettor, his mere presence when the offence is committed is, without more sufficient proof of common intention, to make him an accessory at the fact or principal. Secondly, it marks the fact that in those circumstances the accused cannot be punished twice, once for the abetment and once for being present as an accessory at the fact. The section resembles sec. 34 in this, that it rather regulates procedure and punishment than creates an offence [cf. Gould & Co. v. Hougton (207) and see Collett's Comments on the Indian Penal Code, published in a collected form in 1889.]

Sec. 114, therefore, is not wide enough to include all accessories at the fact. It would not apply for instance where one man is assaulted by several others and the assault is unpremeditated. It only applies where the accused, if absent, would be liable as an abettor, and there are many cases in which no such liability can be proved.

But supposing that I am wrong and that a person present aiding and abetting the commission of a criminal act or offence is punishable under sec. 109, a conviction thereunder could only be sustained if the part played by the abettor as accessory at the fact could be distinguished from the part played by the principal in the first degree. The principal in the first degree does not, as such, abet the abettors. Sec. 109 would not supply a general rule that accessories at the fact are equally liable as principals with the principal in the first degree. The result would merely be that sec. 109 would to some extent overlap sec. 34 in its wider interpretation. If there be this overlapping, we are not thereby precluded from giving a reasonable meaning to sec. 34. On the contrary it seems improbable that the framers of the Code would have forgotten to lay down the general rule. And if the general rule cannot be found in sec. 109 or sec. 114 it can only be found in sec. 34.

It was suggested that if sec. 34 bore the wider meaning, sec. 149 of the Code was unnecessary. Sec. 149 is doubtless a special application of the general principle of sec. 34, but as the language is different so may be the precise meaning or shade of meaning. As Mookerjee, J., said in Jhakri Chamar v. R. (42), "the essence of sec. 34 is common intention, as the presence of a common object is requisite to establish a case under sec. 149." In any case the special provision may have been thought desirable because in the country parts of India, disputes relating to land or boundaries, frequently lead to riots ending in grievous hurt or loss of life.

It appears to me that sec. 34 regards the act done as the united act of the immediate perpetrator and his confederates present at the time and that the language used is susceptible of that meaning. The language follows a common mode of speech. In R. v. Salmon (25)* three men had been negligently firing at a mark. One of them—it was not known which—had unfortunately killed a boy in the rear of the mark. They were all held guilty of man-slaughter. Lord Coleridge, C. J., said :—"The death resulted from the action of the three and they are all liable." Stephen, J., said :—"Firing a rifle" under such circumstances "is a highly dangerous act, and all are responsible for they unite to fire at the spot in question and they all omit to take any precautions whatever to prevent danger."

Moreover, secs. 34, 35 and 37 must be read together, and the use in sec. 35 of the phrase "each of such persons who joins in the act" and in sec. 37 of the phrase, "doing any one of those acts, either singly or jointly with any other person" indicates the true meaning of sec. 34. So sec. 38 speaks of "several persons engaged or concerned in a criminal act." The different modes of expression may be puzzling but the sections must, I think, be construed as enunciating a consistent principle of liability. Otherwise the result would be chaotic.

* NOTE.—R. v. Salmon was followed in R. v Morgan, 13 C W. N. 352. Curiously enough, however, the learned Judges expressly disclaimed the aid of sec. 34. I do not know what section other than sec. 34 made both the accused soldiers liable. With respect, the Court would seem to have been unnecessarily puzzled over the question of their "common intention."

To put it differently, an act is done by several persons when all are principals in the doing of it, and it is immaterial whether they are principals in the first degree or principals in the second degree, no distinction between the two categories being recognised.

This view of sec. 34 gives it an intelligible content in conformity with general legal notions. The opposing view involves a distinction dependent on identity or similarity of act which, if admissible at all, is wholly foreign to the law, both civil and criminal, and leads nowhere.

The wider view, therefore, accords with what a priori the law might have been expected to be. The true doctrine, that which leads to fruitful and valid legal consequences, must depend on the notion of agency or representation. In the offence of criminal conspiracy (secs. 120A and 120B), as in civil law, representation is carried a step further. Conspirators are like partners. They are all principals. The immediate doer of an overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy is the agent of all the others, whether they are present at the time or not. (Evidence Act, sec. 10). In the case of accessories at the fact, confederates present at the time, representation occurs in its simplest form. If two persons are present aiding and abetting a third who kills their common enemy with a shot from a revolver or a blow with a knife, every lawyer, and I think, every reflecting layman, would pronounce all three equally guilty. Common intention makes the shot or the blow the act of them all. It is as if the six hands belonged to one body, controlled by one mind, and it matters not by which hand the bullet is sped or the blow is given. As Sir Michael Foster puts it:—"In combinations of this kind, the mortal stroke, though given by one of the party, is considered in the eye of the law, and of sound reason too, as given by every individual present and abetting. The person actually giving stroke is no more than the hand or instrument by which the others strike" (Foster's Crown Law, Ed. 1809, p. 351). And in a case cited by Mayne, Ganesh Sing v. Ram Raja (21), their Lordships said this:—"Where parties go with a common purpose to execute a common object, each and every one becomes responsible for the acts of each and every other in execution and furtherance of their common purpose; as the purpose is common so must be the responsibility." That principle is as valid in criminal as in civil law.

It would be surprising if the law were otherwise. A premium would be put on crime. There would be safety in mere numbers. The more cowardly, secret and brutal the crime, the greater would be the chance of the guilty escaping the full measure of justice for their misdeeds.

As to authority, the weight of judicial opinion has from the first been in favour of the wider view of sec. 34, very clearly so, in my opinion in this Court and in the High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad.

One of the earlier cases in this Court, R. v. Gora Chand Gopee (19), is significant because the judgment was delivered by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., who in the capacity of Vice-President of the Legislative Council had piloted the Penal Code Bill through its different stages. I will not say that the judgment is conclusive upon the point before us because sec. 34 is not expressly referred to. But dealing with the question of mere presence on the scene, the learned Chief Justice pointed out "that all who are present do not necessarily assist by their presence every act that is done in their presence, nor are consequently liable to be punished as principals." The importance of the observation lies in the use of the word 'principals' as including accessories at the fact. The word was used in the same sense by Markby, J., in R. v. Hyder Jolaha (32) and again in R. v. Mahomed Asger (33). Later cases explicitly refer to sec. 34. A compact and sufficient illustration will be found in Sri Prosad Misser v. R. (36). In that case a Pathan had killed a Nawab by successive blows with a tulwar. Four other men were present at the time. The Court (Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J.) observed :—"The Judge ought to have called the attention of the jury to the facts and then said that it was for them to consider whether from those facts, they concluded that the criminal act was done by the several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, and if they so concluded then to direct them that the case came within sec. 34 of the Penal Code and that each of them would be liable for that act, in the same manner as if it were done by him alone." That this view of the law has predominated is shown again by the judgment of Mitra and Fletcher, JJ., in Nibaran Chandra Roy v. King-Emperor (38). The current of decision in this Court was not, I think, disturbed till Stephen, J., delivered his judgment in R. v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (9).

That case is the sheet-anchor of the learned Counsel's argument. I state only the facts now material. A police officer, Inspector Nripendra Nath Ghosh, had been murdered in Calcutta. The prisoner and another had both fired at him with revolvers but as the bullets found in the officer's body could not have come from the prisoner's revolver, it was not the prisoner's shots which caused the fatal injuries but those of his comrade. Stephen, J., held that these facts would not support a charge against the prisoner under sec. 302 read with sec. 34. The act of shooting the officer, he said, had been done by the prisoner's comrade and not at all by the prisoner, whose act amounted merely to an attempt. The judgment, I gather, was delivered after the jury, on the learned Judge's direction, had found the prisoner not guilty on the charge referring to sec. 34. The jury had differed on another charge under secs. 302 and 114 and the learned Judge had directed a fresh trial of that charge. The learned Judge was dealing mainly with the question whether the acquittal on the charge referring to sec. 34 was a bar to this fresh trial. He overruled the plea and as things fell out, on the fresh trial, that is, of the charge under secs. 302 and 114, the jury again disagreed. The then Advocate-General entered a nolle prosequi and the prisoner was discharged.

With the greatest respect for the learned Judge's view on this subject, it appears to me that as the authorities stood, the learned Judge should have taken the verdict of the jury on the charge referring to sec. 34. If the jury had convicted on that charge, the learned Judge might have reserved any question of law on which he felt a doubt for consideration by a Bench of the Court.

The learned Judge recognised that he was departing from tradition. He referred to two Indian cases in which a wider view of sec. 34 had been taken. He said that those cases were in accord with Mr. Mayne's paraphrase of the section with which he disagreed. After referring to the history of the matter in England and India, he expressed the opinion that sec. 34 was to be read without reference to any doctrines derived from the English Common Law. In substance I agree but I regret that the learned Judge gave no indication of the meaning which he attributed to the section on that footing.

The learned Judge then turned to the abetment sections. He stated as to sec. 109 that there was no reason for supposing that a man must be absent in order to abet under that section. If he then looked to sec. 114 to fill up the gap left by his view of sec. 34, he was putting a forced construction on one section to avoid what appeared to him a forced construction of another.

Finally, he said: "In reference to English Law, it seems to me that the effect of secs. 109 and 114 is to supersede all the English Law relating to principals of the first and second degrees and accessories before the fact." I do not see, however, how secs. 109 and 114 can touch principals of the first degree. If the learned Judge had said that the group of sections including sec. 34 together with the abetment sections superseded all the English Law on those topics, I could have understood it. But then the difficulty would have remained whether accessories at the fact are to be treated as principals or abettors.

In the case before the learned Judge the prisoner was clearly an accessory at the fact. But if he and his comrade had used revolvers of the same calibre and the officer had been killed by one bullet, it would have been impossible to say which of the two men was principal and which accessory. Then, on the view of the learned Judge, neither man could have been convicted as an abettor, for he might be the principal, nor as principal, because he might be the abettor. Such a difficulty might perhaps be surmounted by framing charges in the alternative under sec. 236 of the Procedure Code, but that seems a clumsy expedient to put before a jury.

I do not see how all distinctions between principals of two degrees and accessories before the fact can be superseded unless, where the abetted act is committed, they are all brought under one common category as principals, that is to say, unless the step further were taken which has been taken in the general law of conspiracy. Apart from some such comprehensive provision, distinctions which exist in the nature of things, necessitate a line being drawn somewhere. According to the general scheme of the Code, abettors are a separate class, and the question whether accessories at the fact are principals or abettors must therefore find an answer. The only advantage I can see in classing them as abettors is that the question of the physical limits within which a man may be said to be present at the commission of a crime would not arise. The question has been discussed in England [R. v. Borthwick (131) and R. v. Stewart (105), Archbold's Criminal Pleadings and Practice, 25th Ed., 1368], but under modern legislation it is probably no longer of any importance. I have suggested above that the Code solution of the difficulty is to be found in Explanation 2 to sec. 107. The person aiding at the time but at a distance is an abettor.

The treatment of the accessory at the fact as a principal will not be more productive of technicality than his treatment as an abettor. The most glaring and indefensible technicalities of English Law seem to have gathered not so much round the principal in the second degree as round the accessory before the fact. In Sir James Stephen's History of the Criminal Law (II, 234) an excuse is found for those technicalities in the harsh severity of punishment under the old Criminal Law. Under milder conditions and legislation, the technicalities have for the most part disappeared along with the excuse for them. And happily, in India, under a modern Code, such as the Penal Code, redress by mere technicality is not required. That of course is not to say that an accused person is not always entitled as of right to a fair trial according to the established forms of law. "In all criminal cases it is necessary that there should be a charge, a finding and a conviction as a foundation for the sentence. Everything should be strictly and accurately pursued; and if in any one of these three points a substantial defect should appear, it would be a ground for revising the proceeding." [Ex parte Van Sandan (208); In re Vallabhdas (209)]. It is a miscarriage of justice "to deprive an accused person of the protection given by essential steps in Criminal Procedure." [Per Lord Sumner, Crane v. Public Prosecutor (192)]. In that connection the distinction is observed between irregularities, which a Court exercising Appellate Jurisdiction may disregard, if the accused has not been prejudiced, and illegalities which render the trial void and of no effect [Subrahmania Ayyar v. R. (190)].

Whether consistently or not with his postulate of identity in act, learned Counsel further contended that in cases of the type where two men assault and inflict, one a grave and the other a less grave injury on a third, sec. 34 only applies where death or grievous hurt results from the combined injuries. But apart possibly from the language of Field, J., in R. v. Jhubboo Mahton (22) which may be accounted for by the facts on the case, the emphasis in cases of this type is not on the fact that both men caused injuries, still less on the fact that the effect resulted from the combined injuries. The emphasis is on this, that the fact of both men taking an active part in the assault is proof positive of some common intention, the extent of the common intention being of course a question of fact.

Is the common intention less apparent where two men shoot at a third, one hitting and wounding him mortally and the other missing him? The solution that in such a case (apart from sec. 114) one man has committed murder and the other only an attempt at murder, shows at least the common intention. And is the solution tenable? Does it not lead, again with great respect, to an impossible result? Suppose both men cause wounds each of which would by itself be mortal. Are two murders committed? And if so, would it be necessary to determine whether or not the deceased had died before the second shot entered his body? Apart from two wounds being inflicted, suppose that the shock and terror of seeing two men fire at him, contributed to the fatal result? Moreover, it is impossible to say what might have happened, if one man alone had set out to accomplish the murder. Without the support, moral and physical, of a comrade, his resolution might have failed him and his pistol remained in his pocket, or diminution of confidence might have interfered with his aim; or again, he might have been successfully resisted and put to flight. It appears to me that this solution cannot possibly have come within the intention or contemplation of the legislature and is not compelled by the language of sec. 34. The language is compatible with the reasonable solution, namely, that both shots, the shot that took effect, and the shot that missed, are the joint acts of the two men. Each man in the eye of the law does both acts. The result follows that they are severally but equally liable for the effect produced, in accordance with the principle, I again quote my brother Mookerjee, "that all who participate in the commission of a crime are severally responsible to the State, as though the crime has been committed by any one of them acting alone," Amrita Lal Bose v. Corporation of Calcutta (48). The fact, that the attack is made by two men and not by one may well be an aggravation and not a palliation of the crime. The attack is cowardly so far as the criminals look to superiority in numbers for security and courage.

The second case on which learned Counsel relied, that of King-Emperor v. Profulla Kumar Mojumdar (49), came before the present Chief Justice and Panton, J., on a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Dacca under sec. 307 of the Procedure Code. To my mind, the case carries the matter no further. It is obvious from the terms of the Court's judgment, delivered by the learned Chief Justice, that the discussion was not taken beyond the stage at which the judgment of Stephen, J., had left it. No reference appears to have been made to the view of the law taken in this Court before and after Nirmal Kanta Roy's case (9). No reference was made to the argument in R. v. Nogendra Nath Sen Gupta (46) or to the rulings of the Court in that case (p. 404), or to the case of R. v. Faezulla (47) which came before C. C. Ghosh, J., and myself. Nor was the difficulty as to the precise meaning of sec. 114 indicated. The point was not fully argued, if it can be said to have been argued at all, and the Court did not come to a considered conclusion upon it. If the judgment be carefully read, it will be seen that the decision comes to no more than this, that inasmuch as there might be a doubt whether the accused could properly be convicted under sec. 302 and sec. 34, the safer course in the circumstances was to direct his retrial on a charge framed under sec. 302 and sec. 114.

In fine, I entertain the opinion that the wider construction of sec. 34 is the right one, not only because I should myself so construe the words in their context, not only because principle seems to me to demand such a construction but also on the firmer ground of a long course of decisions in this and other Courts, interrupted in this Court only recently and in effect only once There is this further to be said that the Penal Code has been amended not a few times and if the prevailing view had been wrong, presumably the Legislature would have taken some opportunity to correct it. It might be said that we are dealing with settled jurisprudence but if there be a doubt as to the law, our labour will not be in vain if that doubt is dispelled.

As to the form of the charge, in my opinion, where an accused is liable under sec. 34 as an accessory at the fact and therefore as a principal, a charge simply of the offence of murder under sec. 302, without express reference to sec. 34 is sufficient. As sec. 34 must be read into sec. 302 of the Penal Code, sec. 224 of the Criminal Procedure Code comes into play—"In every charge words used in describing an offence shall be deemed to have been used in the sense attached to them respectively by the law under which such offence is punishable." No doubt, it is always open to the prosecution to state in the charge particulars showing that the accused is charged as an accessory at the fact. But it is not necessary, nor always possible, to do so. The prosecution cannot state in the charge particulars of which they are ignorant. In a case of murder the murdered man cannot be called at the trial and there may be no other eye-witnesses except the actual principals in the crime. If it is not known which of several men fired the fatal shot or delivered the fatal blow, the charge cannot be explicit and nothing is gained by multiplying charges to meet all possible hypotheses.

In England also a principal in the second degree is chargeable with the substantive offence. Sir Mathew Hale, for instance, says this: "If A be indicted as having given the mortal stroke and B and C as present, aiding and assisting, and upon the evidence it appears that B gave the stroke and A and C were only aiding and assisting, it maintains the indictment, and judgment shall be given against them all, for it is only a circumstantial variance, for in law it is the stroke of all that were present, aiding and abetting." (Hale's Pleas of the Crown, Ed. 1800 at p. 43 and see Archbold at pp. 1371, 1372 and 1374).

I come now to the second ground on which the learned Advocate-General granted his certificate, namely, that the learned Judge in charging the jury did not sufficiently refer to the defence put forward by the accused. This objection involves a consideration of the defence made at the trial and the merits.

There were two charges. To the charge of attempted robbery under sec. 394 of the Code, the accused pleaded "guilty," in open Court, not meaning that he with his own hand caused hurt to the Post Master, but meaning that he and others went to rob the Post Master, and that in attempting to commit the robbery, the Post Master was injured—fatally injured as the fact is—by one of the party.

To the charge of murder the accused pleaded "not guilty."

From the point of view of Counsel for the accused, though on the facts the defence on that charge might be difficult, the case was of a simple character. Unless the evidence showing that the accused fired the fatal shot could be discredited, there was nothing more to be said in any view of the law. For the rest, the case turned on the element of intention. For, if the accused was not privy to any intention, including murder, he could not have fired the fatal shot or have fired at all at the Post Master, and any circumstance, suggestion or argument tending to show that the accused did not fire at the Post Master might also be pleaded for what it was worth as relevant in regard to his intention.

In the view of the law taken by the learned Judge, a view of which learned

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

Counsel must have been aware during the trial, the issues were, whether the accused fired at the Post Master and if not, what intentions should be imputed to him. The former issue, however important, was subordinate to the latter. The defence was that the accused had no part in any common intention going as far as murder. Now, no one who reads the charge can doubt that the learned Judge put that defence to the jury not once but several times. The jury were fully instructed that the charge of murder involved participation by the accused in a common intention not only to rob, but also, if necessary, to kill, the Post Master. The point might have been put less specifically. A common intention to carry out an unlawful design at all cost, even at the cost of overcoming resistance, or evading capture by taking life is sufficient. The jury were a special jury and I see no reason to suppose that they did not fully appreciate the legal position. Without mincing matters, the ascription of a common intention to add murder, if necessary, to robbery, is not easily avoided, where all, or some to the knowledge of the rest, of those engaged in the enterprise, are proved to have carried firearms and firearms have been used with fatal effect.

The objections taken to the charge, so far as they seem to me to call for mention at all, are based on the statement made by the accused at the close of the case for the prosecution. It is said that the learned Judge did not advert, or sufficiently advert, to certain suggestions—I cannot put them higher—contained in that statement.

There is first the suggestion that only three, and not, as the prosecution say, four men, were concerned. With regard to that it appears to me that the cross-examination of the material witnesses, and especially that of the packer, Hara Prasad Das, was directed to making out that the accused was not one of the men who entered the room but was the man who stood outside on the door-step or just below. The suggestion that only three men went to the Post Office and only two went inside, was, however, not foreshadowed, at any rate, as clearly as it might have been. The point of the suggestion is that if only two men entered the room the accused even if he was the middle man of the three, as the witnesses said, might have been the man outside who did not fire. But let that pass. The learned Judge, as I read the charge, left it to the jury to make up their own minds, if necessary, whether there were three or four men.

The next suggestion was perhaps more clearly an after-thought. The statement as to the live-cartridge falling out of the pistol as the accused was running away down the lane on the north of the Post Office (Mohendra Sircar Lane) was intended to support a suggestion to this effect, namely, that inasmuch as a pistol of the kind which the accused carried, automatically cocks itself after being fired, and inasmuch as the accused found in Mohendra Sircar Lane that his pistol was not cocked or that the safety-catch was not down, therefore the accused could not have fired in the Post Office. If the point so put had been in the minds of those conducting the case for the defence, the importance of the live-cartridge and the place where it was picked up must have been fully recognised. But what occurred at the trial was this. A witness, Purna Chandra De, spoke to having received the live-cartridge and an empty cartridge case (Exbts. X and XI) from another man. He was prepared to indicate the spot where this other man had said he had picked them up. But as the learned Standing Counsel stated that the prosecution were not in a position to produce the other man, learned Counsel for the accused objected, as he was entitled to do, to hearsay evidence being given. Nothing further was said at the time and there is no evidence where the live-cartridge was picked up. The learned Judge's recollection is that during the trial nothing more was said about these two exhibits and that he told the jury that they went out of the case. The learned Judge's statement of what took place is conclusive. It is here abundantly confirmed by the fact that the gun-maker, an expert witness who went later into the witness-box, was not even asked whether the live-cartridge fitted the accused's pistol. Assuming in accordance with what seems to have been the case for the prosecution, that it did fit the pistol, the gun-maker was not questioned as to the circumstances in which a live-cartridge might drop out, or be ejected, from an automatic pistol. There are such things as mis-fires and mis-fits. It does not seem beyond the bounds of possibility that an ill-graduated cartridge should be forced by the mechanism too far into the breech and so be beyond the proper reach of the striker when the trigger is pulled. Such a cartridge might be ejected in the ordinary course of firing without a dent or a visible dent on the cap. I have no wish to speculate. All I am saying is that the matter was not pursued and that no sufficient foundation was laid in cross-examination for any plea founded on the live-cartridge.

There is more to be said on this point. At the best the evidence left open a mere suggestion that the live-cartridge dropped out in Mohendra Sircar Lane in the manner described by the accused. It is surprising therefore to find, in the application made to the learned Advocate-General for a certificate, the positive statement, more than once repeated, that this live-cartridge was picked up in Mohendra Sircar Lane. It is admitted that the application, though apparently not signed or verified, was drawn up for the accused by his legal advisers. Beyond referring to the resolution of the Judges in R. v. Shimmin (210) cited in R. v. Nogendra Nath Sen Gupta (46) I will say no more on this topic, because in the result the learned Counsel frankly admitted that the positive statements as to the live-cartridge ought not to have been made and might be attributed to the haste and hurry of the moment.

The last suggestion is that in running away the accused fired in the air to frighten his pursuers and not to kill them. On his own showing, therefore, it is a mere chance that he did not kill, if not one of his pursuers, then some other person inside or outside a house. Such firing in the streets of a city was itself evidence of a criminal intent sufficient to go to the jury in support of the charge of murder. But, apart from that, here again, the suggestion, such as it is, was not led up to by the cross-examination of the witnesses. The medical student Purnendu Nath Mukherjee—he was not a pursuer—he was approaching the accused from the opposite direction—states that the accused fired at him and that he heard the whiz of the bullet as it went past his left ear. This witness was not cross-examined, and there may have been good reasons at the time for not cross-examining him.

When I say of these suggestions or any of them that they were after-thoughts, what I mean is that regard being had to the conduct of the case in Court, the suggestion could not have formed part of any instructions given to learned Counsel before the trial or before the witnesses were examined.

I have not so far referred to the first part of the accused's statement. Evidence had been given of the finding in an almirah in the living room occupied by the accused of a bundle which contained two revolvers and three ugly-looking daggers.

The accused endeavoured to account for the possession of this armoury by saying that the bundle had been given to him for safe custody by a gentleman unnamed. Having stowed away the bundle he was taken by the same gentleman to his house, where he seems to have been somewhat easily persuaded to join in an enterprise in the nature of a dacoity. The pressure brought to bear on him was apparently moral, and not physical, but he says he was not in a position to argue. He speaks of four pistols, one of which was given to him. He was taught by the unnamed gentleman how to use the pistol. That I suppose was to account for his firing as he ran away. The pistol was then loaded and a start was made. I cannot think that such a story would, or ought to make, much impression on a jury and I have heard no grievance made of any failure of the learned Judge to deal fully with this part of the statement.

The trial having taken its course, the jury returned a verdict of guilty. I doubt whether the fact that the verdict was unanimous makes any difference [see per Holmwood, J., Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (1) and West Indian Company v. Roberts (211)]. Again there were materials not certainly without weight on which the jury could find that it was the pistol of the accused which killed the Post Master. But I do not go into that because the verdict does not necessarily mean that in the jury's opinion the accused fired the fatal shot. On the law as laid down to them, the verdict is in that respect ambiguous. But it does mean that the accused was privy to a common murderous intention.

I should have been surprised if the jury had returned any other verdict in this case. It is established, not only by the sworn testimony of the witnesses but by the admission of the accused himself, that he and two or three others were at the Post Office, all harbouring a wicked design and all carrying loaded firearms. Hardly had the innocent and unfortunate Post Master uttered a word of remonstrance or surprise, before three of the four, or two of three, shot at him from a distance of two or three paces and killed him on the spot. He was given no chance. It was not even a case of "hands up or we will fire." A hue and cry was raised. In running away the accused was behind the others, possibly as a rear guard or possibly, as he says, because he was unnerved and late in starting. If he did not enter the Post Office, he would naturally have been one of the first to run. Two or three of the men escaped. The accused though he used his pistol to prevent capture did not escape. He was captured, as it may be said, red-handed. His pistol, which he had thrown away when it became useless, the magazine having been emptied, was picked up close by. As to the presence of the accused on the scene, no question of identity arises, no alibi is possible. Apart from the question of common intention the facts are admitted. And it appears to me that the facts themselves speak so loudly that the defence offered was as desperate as any defence could well be. On the facts it would seem almost as easy to say that the original design was murder, pure and simple, as to say that it was robbery first and murder only if necessary. In the view of the law which we reject, the denial by the accused that he fired at the Post Master might have been regarded as a defence. Otherwise his statement reads more like a plea in extenuation. I cannot entertain any doubt as to the justice of the verdict.

On a careful and anxious examination of the case I can only say that to my mind the complaint of non-direction amounting to mis-direction is not sustainable. In my opinion on the evidence as it stood, the substantial questions and issues involved, for the defence as well as for the prosecution, were fairly put to the jury. Their minds were not perplexed by a minute discussion of every detail of the evidence, or of every suggestion made at the close of the evidence. After a trial extending over two days, after the accused had made his statement, after the learned Standing Counsel and the learned Counsel for the accused had delivered their addresses, the case was left to the jury by the learned Judge broadly on its merits.

It is, as I entirely agree, an elementary principle that a defence made by or for an accused, or apparent on the evidence for the prosecution, should be fairly presented to the jury, and I have before now drawn attention to this principle. As Lord Watson said in Bray v. Ford (212): "Every party to a trial by jury has a legal and constitutional right to have the case which he has made, either in pursuit or in defence, fairly submitted to the consideration of that tribunal." In India, so far as the criminal law is concerned, that right is embodied in sec. 297 of the Procedure Code. In the present case, however, a very plain one as I see it, it does not appear to me that the learned Judge's charge was insufficient as regards the defence. The charge was doubtless on the whole adverse to the accused—in the circumstances it could hardly be otherwise—but the learned Judge was entitled to express his opinion, and the issue was not taken out of the hands of the jury. The learned Judge, again, laid down the law on the subject of common intention with some force of language, but he was within his province in so doing and we are not dissenting from what he said.

I will add that if a defence is substantially put to the jury, a mere omission to refer to this or that circumstance or suggestion is not non-direction which amounts to mis-direction. It is not the function of the Judge to repeat to the jury every argument or suggestion urged by the learned Counsel for the accused. It is a satisfaction to me that we have heard the learned Counsel at length but on this part of the case his argument covered "topics proper only to be addressed to the jury at the trial" [Manson (213)] and I much doubt whether the omissions of which he complained were in any instance of the sort of which it can be said that non-direction amounts to mis-direction in law. [R. v. Stoddart (136), cited in R. v. Fateh Chand Agarwala (177).]

If the learned Advocate-General had not felt pressed by the question of law turning on sec. 34, it may well be that he would not have granted any certificate on the question of non-direction, particularly if the facts had been more carefully stated in the application submitted to him.

There is still an incident which occurred some days before the trial to which I am compelled to make some reference. I do not propose to enter into the details of the incident, for the reason that I am not now prepared. I do not consider it necessary, for any purpose material to the accused, to express an opinion on the conduct of the learned Counsel in seeking the learned Judge, whether notice of the intention to do so had or had not been given to the learned Standing Counsel. Still less am I prepared to discuss the course taken by the learned Judge in listening to the learned Counsel and in advising them as he says he did. The questions raised may be questions on which a difference of opinion is possible. They may call for further consideration when the full Court reassembles after the vacation, not with reference to this case but with reference to the future. The accused is entitled to have any point in his favour considered, but with submission, it appears to me dangerous to convert the trial of the accused into the trial of others officially connected with the proceedings, against whom no specific charge calling for an answer has been made.

So far as the accused is concerned I had thought that the incident was disposed of on the first day of the hearing before us. After the relevant part of the learned Judge's note of the proceedings, which he had prepared for our information, had been read out in Court to the learned Counsel, Mr. Chatterjee, we adjourned the hearing from 11 A.M. to 2-30 P.M. in order that the learned Counsel might see his client and ascertain from him whether he desired in the circumstances that his case should be argued by the learned Counsel or by some other Counsel. We were told in due course, as I understood, that the accused had full confidence in the learned Counsel and desired him to argue the case, which he proceeded to do. The hearing lasted for our days and a half and, as I had thought, every material aspect of the case was fully placed before us. I cannot avoid saying that it is embarrassing to find after so full a hearing that this incident is again brought into question.

It is not suggested that the tribunal which tried the accused was in any respect incompetent or that the trial was a nullity.

The learned Judge has told us that the learned Counsel came to him before he had read the papers in the case, and were with him for a very short time. He had no interest in the matter except to do his public duty to the best of his ability. No objection was taken to his presiding at the trial and apart from the complaints made in regard to his charge to the jury—complaints which I hold to be quite unfounded—it has not been suggested before us and in my opinion it could not properly have been suggested that the learned Judge did not preside with strict impartiality and fairness.

As to the jury who tried the facts, they had no knowledge at all of the incident. The verdict was that of a jury against whom nothing has been or can be said.

Lastly, as to the learned Counsel, we have been told that their action was taken without previous consultation with the accused. It is to be presumed, however, that before the trial the learned Counsel had received their instructions from the accused's attorney and had also seen the accused. The accused himself pleaded guilty to the charge of attempted robbery, and he doubtless did so after consultation with his legal advisers. He must then have come to learn their view generally of his case, and I can find no ground for any suggestion that his confidence in them was misplaced in the sense that his Counsel did not afterwards do all that could be done to secure his acquittal on the charge of murder. From what the learned Counsel, Mr. Chatterjee, has told us of the substance of his address to the jury, I do not conceive that he could have said more than he did say.

It appears to me that the learned Counsel, who appear to have gone to the learned Judge in what they considered to be the interests of their client, did not feel themselves at all hampered by anything which may have fallen from the learned Judge. I have not detected any want of freedom or enterprise in their conduct of the defence or in the mode in which they put before the learned Judge and the jury the case for the accused on the two crucial questions, the question whether the accused was one of those who fired at the Post Master and the question of common intention.

No witnesses for the accused were called and in such a case and in such circumstances it would be surprising if any were called. The defence was necessarily of a negative rather than an affirmative character. The only hope was by cross-examination to shake the prosecution evidence telling most strongly against the accused. I have already indicated my belief that the learned Counsel not only acted up to their original instructions but possibly exceeded those instructions. So far as I can see they left no stone unturned and in my opinion the accused was in no way prejudiced at his trial.

I have made these observations out of respect for the difficulty which has been felt by my learned brother Mookerjee, J. But as the position appears to me, we were constituted a Bench to try matters arising out of the certificate of the learned Advocate-General and I am not to be understood as conceding that this incident in any way comes within that description. So far as I am aware, the learned Advocate-General knew nothing of it and it is not one of the grounds upon which he acted. No complaint has been made by or on behalf of the accused that his Counsel failed in any way in their duty to him. The question, which in my view of it is not one of law, is raised by the Court itself on the merits, as it appears to me, upon a mere possibility or conjecture that the accused may have been prejudiced.

No one will dispute that our powers as a Court of review or a Court for cases reserved or certified—whatever be the correct designation—are circumscribed by the terms of cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. As I read the clause, the certificate of the Advocate-General does not give us a roving commission to inquire into every incident connected with the case which may have occurred before or at the trial. When the question or questions of law raised by the certificate for our consideration are determined in a sense adverse to the accused, our function ends. We have then no power to retry the case and the judgment and sentence of the trial Court stand.

As at present advised, I hold that to be the constitutional position and for authority I should go no further than the case of R. v. Upendra Nath Das (1). In that case Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., said: "If there was no mis-direction or other error as certified, the certificate was misconceived and we have no power to interfere. If the merits of the case or the sentence are to be further considered, then that must be not by the Court, but by some other authority vested with the requisite power." This view was specifically endorsed by Woodroffe, J. and by my learned brother Mookerjee, J. and received the concurrence of the other two members of the Bench, Stephen and Holmwood, JJ.

As to a retrial on the merits, I see no ground for considering whether a retrial should be directed. But apart from that even if we were accepting and not repelling the learned Advocate-General's certificate, we should have no power to direct a retrial, at any rate on any ground short of an illegality which made the trial abortive and no trial at all. The question is concluded by the authorities reviewed by Mookerjee, J., in R. v. Panchu Das (179).

I conclude that we should pronounce the certificate of the learned Advocate-General to be misconceived. I am glad to think that in so concluding I am in agreement with the learned Judge who has presided over our deliberations.

[Note by Richardson, J., on previous history of sec. 34 and secs. 35, 37 and 38.

The draft Code prepared by Lord Macaulay and his colleagues was completed in 1837. It began with a chapter bearing the same heading—"General Explanations"—as the present Chap. II. Notes on various Chapters are appended to the draft but it does not seem to have been thought necessary to furnish any note on the "General Explanations" which are in the nature of interpretation clauses. The following observations, however, occur in two paragraphs of the first report, dated the 23rd July 1846, of a subsequent body of Indian Law Commissioners:—

"181. There is no distinction of principals in the first degree and principals in the second degree in the Indian Code. In the 3rd clause of the Chapter of General Explanations, it is laid down once for all that 'wherever the causing of a certain effect with a certain intention or with a knowledge of certain circumstances is an offence, it is to be understood that if more persons than one jointly cause that effect, every one of them who has that intention or that knowledge, commits that offence.'

"182. The definitions of substantive offences, construed with reference to this general explanatory clause, take in all who actually cause or assist in causing the effect which constitutes the offence, without distinction of leaders or followers, principals or subordinate agents . . . ."

The Indian Law Commissioners go on to refer to the corresponding articles, under the heading "Criminal Agency and Participation" of the Digest of the English Law prepared at a time when thoughts were entertained of codifying that law, a project afterwards abandoned.

Then in a postcript, dated 5th November 1846, there is the following paragraph:—

"662. With reference to our observations . . . . upon the provisions of the Code compared with the English Law of principal and accessory, we have now to point out that . . . . Her Majesty's Commissioners propose to abolish the difference of punishment between principals in the first and second degrees and accessories, and the technical distinction between principals in the first and second degrees, and to make the offence of being an accessory a substantive offence. By the change proposed the Law of England will correspond with the Indian Code on these points."

The word "accessory" is here used as meaning accessory before the fact and the reference would appear to be, or may be taken to be, to the recommendations of the English Criminal Code Commissioners set out in Sir James Stephen's History of the Criminal Law at page 236, as follows:—

(179) I. L. R. 47 Cal. 671 at pp. 698, 699: s. c. 24 C. W. N. 501; 31 C. L. J. 402 (1920).

"Every one is a party to and guilty of an indictable offence who

(a) actually commits the offence, or does or omits to do any act the doing or omission of which forms part of the offences; or

(b) aids or abets any person in the actual commission of the offence, or in any such act or omission as aforesaid; or

(c) directly or indirectly counsels or procures any person to commit the offence, or to do or omit any such act as aforesaid."

Cl. (a) contemplates the offenders known in England as principals in the first degree, the immediate perpetrators of the act done, cl. (b) those known as principals in the second degree or accessories at the fact, and cl. (c) those known as accessories before the fact. In English Law principals in the first degree and principals in the second degree are equally principals and are, as such, distinguished from accessories before the fact.

It will be observed that in the Code as finally passed by the legislature in 1860, cl. 3 of the original draft is drawn out into the secs. 34, 35, 37 and 38. This difference of language may, of course, have affected the meaning. I have no knowledge when or by whom the change was made, or for what reasons the language adopted was chosen.

As to the relation of sec. 34 and the connected sections to abetment in the original draft, "abetment" was defined as being of two kinds, previous abetment and subsequent abetment. Clearly Lord Macaulay and his colleagues were thinking of accessories before the fact and accessories after the fact. Accessories after the fact, as I have said in my judgment, are now dealt with separately, and in the Code as passed abetment is not expressly qualified by the word "previous." Does the omission of that word make any difference to the meaning? Or, was it omitted simply because it became unnecessary to distinguish previous abetment from subsequent abetment.

Here again I am not aware how the Chapter on abetment came to take its present form. Considerable changes were made between 1847 (the year of the Commissioner's second report) and 1860, but of the reasons for those changes, I know nothing.]

C. C. GHOSE, J.—One Barendra Kumar Ghose, having at the last Criminal Sessions been convicted by a Special Jury of the murder of one Amrita Lal Roy, was sentenced to death by Mr. Justice Page. Thereafter the accused through his Counsel applied to the Advocate-General for a certificate under sec. 26 of the Letters Patent for the further consideration by this Court of certain matters of alleged mis-direction and non-direction arising out of the summing up of the learned Judge to the Jury. The facts are as follows:—

The accused above-named was, on the 16th August 1923, charged at the Criminal Session before Mr. Justice Page and a Special Jury on an indictment as follows:—

First, that he, the said Barendra Kumar Ghose, together with certain other persons on or about the 3rd day of August in the year of our Lord 1923 in Calcutta aforesaid committed murder by causing the death of one Amrita Lal Roy and thereby he, the said Barendra Kumar Ghose, committed an offence punishable under sec. 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

Second, that he, the said Barendra Kumar Ghose, together with certain other persons, at or about the time and in the place aforesaid were jointly concerned in attempting to commit robbery on the said Amrita Lal Roy and that at the time of committing such robbery voluntarily caused hurt to the said Amrita Lal Roy, and thereby he, the said Barendra Kumar Ghose, committed an offence punishable under sec. 394 of the Indian Penal Code.

It is stated that the accused pleaded guilty to the aforesaid charge under sec. 394, I. P. C., with the reservation that he did not cause hurt to the said Amrita Lal Roy and pleaded not guilty to the charge under sec. 302, I. P. C. and that the trial was proceeded with thereafter in respect of the latter charge.

The case for the prosecution was as follows :—

That the accused and three other persons made their appearance at the Sankaritola Post Office at about 3-30 P.M. on the 3rd August 1923, armed with firearms; that three of them, including the accused, entered the Post Office through its south-eastern door, while the fourth man remained outside; that of the three who came inside, the accused stood in the middle and the masked man on his left and the other man on his right; that they stood within less than two yards of Amrita Lal Roy, who was the Post Master, of whom all the three demanded money with the words "Post Master, rupeya dao;" that the Post Master asked "kisher taka," whereupon all the three levelled their weapons and fired at the Post Master simultaneously; that one of the bullets went through the Post Master's right palm and another struck him on the right side under the right arm-pit, whereupon he fell down with a cry; that a clerk named Sham Dulal Das, who was working in the same room at the time, ran to the Post Master's aid, whilst Hara Prasad Das, the Post Office packer, ran after the three men, who were immediately escaping along with the fourth man, who was outside; that the chase was taken up by two other men named Sitaram and Jhapsaram, employees of one Promotho Lal Sircar residing at 15, Mohendra Sircar Lane, opposite the Post Office; that as they got to the turning of Mohendra Sircar Lane and Sankaritola East Lane, the accused ran down the latter lane, firing his pistol from time to time, whilst the other three ran by Mohendra Sircar Lane to Creek Row; that the accused was followed by the packer and the two others whose number was increased by other pursuers, who all kept following him until he was arrested in front of St. James Square and brought back to the Post Office along with his pistol, which the accused had thrown away near the said Square but which had been picked up by a small boy, who gave it to the packer.

That the prosecution case further was that the Post Master had expired within a short interval of being shot; that one bullet was found inside his body, which on being extracted fitted into the empty cartridge case picked up inside the room of the Post Office, which in its turn was found to be of the same bore as that of the automatic pistol carried by the accused; that the dent of a bullet was found on the wall of 15, Mohendra Sircar Lane in front of the Post Office; that no other empty cartridge was found inside the said room; that no trace of the third bullet was available in or out of it; and lastly that two revolvers and three daggers were found at premises No. 181, Harrison Road, a Chemist's shop, where the accused was employed.

The case for the defence was embodied in the statement made by the accused in Court, the main points in which were as follows :—

(i) Three and not four persons went to the Post Office; that the accused went there with the assured feeling that no life would be taken by anyone; that the accused stayed outside whilst the other two went in; and that only two shots were fired inside and not three.

(ii) That the accused was so taken by surprise on account of the shooting of the Post Master that he was temporarily robbed of locomotion and self-control and he remained back whilst his two companions ran away; that he recovered himself later on hearing the cry of "chor, chor;" that he was running by himself; that he for the first time tried to fire his revolver in course of being pursued; that his pistol did not go off when he pulled the trigger; that he thereupon remembered his instructions to pull out a portion of the pistol and to release the safety-catch and as he did so, a live-cartridge fell out.

(iii) That the accused kept on firing in the air as he ran along and refrained from shooting the packer and others who followed him at close quarters.

No evidence was called on behalf of the accused and the accused contented himself with making the statement referred to above. There was evidence as indicated above before the Jury that immediately on the demand for money being made of the Post Master by the three men who had entered the room, in which the Post Master was working, the packer, Hara Prasad Das, at once ran up towards the Post Master's table and saw three men at the door of the room and that the accused was one of the three and that there was another man in the courtyard near the steps leading to the door. The packer's words were as follows: "The Post Master stood up and said 'what money.' Immediately afterwards all the three men fired their pistols." . . . "From the time I saw prisoner first till he was arrested I never lost sight of him. I am certain that he fired and was one of those in the room. They all three fired simultaneously." The evidence of Sham Dulal Das, the clerk, who was employed at the Post Office, was as follows:—"I first heard a noise and a voice—'rupeya dao.' I looked round. I saw three men armed with revolvers standing in front of the Post Master three or four cubits away and another man outside the room with a revolver. The three men were in the room. The prisoner was in middle. The man on the left had a mask on. It was a mask like this (produced). I saw weapons in the hands of the three men. The prisoner was wearing a khaddar coat on. It was one like this (produced). The Post Master was closing the mail and had about Rs. 2,000 in notes and money on the table before him. He stood up at 'rupeya dao' and shouted out 'what money.' All three men fired at him immediately."

The learned Judge charged the jury at some length and in such charge said, amongst others, as follows:—

"Therefore in this case if these persons went to that place with a common intention to rob the Post Master and, if necessary, to kill him, and if death resulted, each of them is liable, whichever of the three fired the fatal shot."

"If you come to the conclusion that these three or four persons came into the Post Office with that intention to rob and, if necessary, to kill, and death resulted from their act, if that be so, you are bound to find a verdict of guilty."

"I say if you doubt that it was the pistol of the accused which fired the fatal shot, that does not matter. If you are satisfied on the other hand that the shot was fired by one of those persons in furtherance of the common intention, if that be so, then it is your duty to find a verdict of guilty."

The summing up of the learned Judge was placed before the learned Advocate-General for his consideration and it was further represented to him that the learned Judge has "omitted to draw the attention of the jury to the defence of the accused save and except a mere reference to the statement made by the accused."

The learned Advocate-General thereafter under and by virtue of the powers entrusted to him by the Letters Patent, bearing date the 28th September 1865, certified that in his judgment whether the alleged direction and the alleged omission to direct the jury did not in law amount to a mis-direction should be further considered by this Court, and the matter has accordingly come before this Court for consideration.

The certificate of the learned Advocate-General raises two questions, namely, whether there was mis-direction on a question of law, and whether there was non-direction with regard to the case for the defence; but before I proceed to deal with these matters, it is necessary to examine the scope and extent of cl. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865 under which the learned Advocate-General has given his fiat. Cl. 26 of the Letters Patent runs as follows:—"And we do further ordain, that on such point or points of law being so reserved as aforesaid, or on its being certified by the said Advocate-General, that, in his judgment, there is, an error in the decision of a point or points of law decided by the Court of Original Criminal Jurisdiction, or that a point or points of law which has or have been decided by the said Court should be further considered, the said High Court shall have full power and authority to review the case, or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such point or points of law, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of Original Jurisdiction, and to pass such judgment and sentence as to the said High Court shall seem right." In cl. 25 of the Letters Patent it is definitely laid down that there shall be no appeal from any sentence or order passed or made in any criminal trial before the Court of Original Criminal Jurisdiction which may be constituted by one or more Judges of the High Court, but it shall be at the discretion of any such Court to reserve any point or points of law for the opinion of the High Court. Cls. 25 and 26 of the Letters Patent therefore make it plain that, when a point or points of law has or have been reserved or certified by the Advocate-General as erroneously decided or as worthy of further consideration, the High Court has full power and authority "to review the case or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine upon such point or points of law, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of Original Jurisdiction and to pass such judgment and sentence as to the said High Court shall seem right." As has been observed by Mookerjee, J., in the case of Emperor v. Fateh Chand Agarwala (177): "It is obvious that the intention is that the case should be finally decided on review and not remitted for retrial. It has also been ruled that when the Court on review holds on the point of law in favour of the accused, it is competent to the Court to consider the whole case on the evidence and to pass such sentence as shall seem right. The Bombay High Court followed this procedure in the cases of R. v. Navroji (188) and Imperatrix v. Pitambar (67); in each instance, although the Court decided the question of law in favour of the accused, yet, upon a review of the whole case and an examination of the merits, affirmed the conviction. In this Court, the same procedure was adopted in the cases of Queen v. Haribole (164), Queen v. O'Hara (35); in each instance, the point of law was decided in favour of the accused, but on a review of the whole evidence, while the conviction was affirmed in the former case, it was set aside in the latter instance. The cases of Queen v. Sib Chandra (166) and Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (1) do not directly touch the present question, inasmuch as the alleged error of law was not established in either instance." In the case of Queen v. Sib Chandra (166) a Rule was obtained under the provisions of cl. 26 of the Letters Patent calling upon the Law Officers of the Crown to show cause why the prisoner, Sib Chandra Mitter, should not be acquitted or why there should not be a new trial on the ground that the learned Judge, Mr. Justice Field, who tried him had mis-directed the jury on a point of law. Sir Richard Garth, C. J., observed as follows:—" That being so, we consider that there was no mis-direction; and as in this case it is not shown that in his charge to the jury the learned Judge committed an error of law, we consequently discharge the Rule." In the case of Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (1) Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., observed as follows:—" On this view of the case, it is not within my power to re-open the case and I regard myself as not entitled to express any opinion as to its merits. In fact, I am not in a position to deal with the merits; for they have not been discussed before us, nor have those conditions been established on which alone they could be considered by us. Our powers are circumscribed, for we can only act in conformity with cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. If there was no mis-direction or other error as certified, the certificate was mis-conceived and we have no power to interfere. If the merits of the case or the sentence are to be further considered, then they must be not by this Court, but by some other authority vested with the requisite power." In the same case Woodroffe, J., observed as follows: —" With the merits, however, we are not concerned until it is established that there has been an error in law which opens out the case for our judgment. The same ground precludes me from dealing with the question of sentence which may arise on the facts above stated, and the possibility, if the verdict be correct, of the act having been committed without premeditation on a sudden access of passion. This is, however, a matter for the Crown to consider. I can only hold that no error of law has been shown which entitles me to re-open a verdict or to consider a sentence which has already been passed." Mookerjee, J., in the same case stated as follows:—" In the view I take, no error of law has been established and consequently the Court is not called upon to express an opinion as to the propriety of the conviction and sentence, although, as Woodroffe, J. has pointed out, if the Court could examine the case on the merits, there might be matters for careful consideration."

The question next arises as to whether the High Court, on a Reference under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, is entitled to direct a new trial. The cases decided in this Court since the case of Queen v. Haribole Chandra Ghose (164) show conclusively that the case reserved or certified has got to be finally decided by the High Court on review and that an order for retrial is not competent. [See Emperor v. Panchu Das (179)]. I think the authorities referred to above are binding on us and that we must proceed upon the footing that there is no power in the High Court to direct a retrial.

I am not unmindful of the fact that it has recently been held in England that in cases of mis-trial the Court of Criminal Appeal has power under the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7, Edw. 7 C. 23) to order a new trial, [See Crane v. Director of Public Prosecution (192)]. In that case there was a trial before a jury of two persons, on separate indictments and it was held that the trial was a nullity and was not a mere irregularity. The Court of Criminal Appeal, as also the majority of the noble and learned Lords in the House of Lords went at great length into the question of the powers of the Court for the consideration of Crown Cases Reserved under the Crown Cases Act of 1848 and into the powers of the old Court of Queen's Bench on a writ of error and held that the trial being a nullity, it was competent to the Court of Criminal Appeal to order a new trial. Now, it is to be observed that the words of the Crown Cases Act of 1848 are wider than the words used in cl. 26 of the Letters Patent and no proper analogy can be drawn therefrom. Further it may be noticed that the Court of Error sat, as has been said, "not for the exercise of the sound and legal discretion of the Judges but for the benefit of an imperative rule of law" that it was in cases, among others, where the trial was coram non judice, that the Court of Error used to grant a venire de novo. That contingency for the reason which will be found later has not arisen in this case and I will not, therefore, pause to elaborate it, or to desert the sure anchorage of an established rule, so far as this Court is concerned.

There is one other matter to which I desire to make a passing reference before I come to the matters which properly arise on the learned Advocate-General's fiat. It appears from the information which has been placed before this Court by Mr. Justice Page that two or three days before the trial began before him in the Sessions Court, Mr. B. C. Chatterjee and Mr. S. K. Sen, Counsel for the accused, applied to see Mr. Justice Page in his private room. According to Mr. Justice Page, they informed him that after careful consideration they were satisfied that there was no defence to the charges and that the accused was guilty. They asked him, if the accused pleaded guilty to the charge of murder, whether he would deal with the accused leniently. Mr. Justice Page told learned Counsel that he could give them no information as to what he should do at the trial, but if they were satisfied that the accused was guilty, while it was their duty by cross-examination to test the accuracy of the witnesses for the Crown, that they were not entitled to set up any substantive defence in opposition to the case for the Crown.

In view of what took place before the trial in Mr. Justice Page's room, it was thought proper that an opportunity should be afforded by the Court to Mr. B. C. Chatterjee (Mr. S. K. Sen was absent at the hearing before us) to consider whether he should appear on behalf of the accused at the hearing before us, or whether the accused should not have an opportunity of being represented by other Counsel. A short adjournment was granted and arrangements were made so that Mr. Chatterjee might interview the accused in the Presidency Jail. Later on, Mr. Chatterjee informed us that the accused had definitely stated that he wished him (Mr. Chatterjee) to represent him at the hearing before us and to argue the case on his behalf. Thereupon the hearing proceeded. It is unnecessary for me to dwell further on the incident referred to above or to refer to the statement made by Mr. Chatterjee from his place at the Bar, or to the written statement handed in to the Court on behalf of Mr. Sen and himself, or to elaborate on the duty of Counsel, assuming that they are impressed with a belief in their client's guilt.

Now, it was said that the accused has pleaded guilty to the charge under sec. 394, I. P. C., with the reservation that he did not cause hurt to the Post Master. With reference to this allegation, however, the learned Judge who presided at the trial has informed us of what precisely happened at the trial when the accused was asked whether he was guilty of the offence charged against him, and we have the learned Judge's word that in respect of the charge under sec. 394, I. P. C., the accused pleaded guilty to the same and that there was no such reservation as is mentioned in the application on behalf of the accused to the learned Advocate-General for his fiat. I think the true rule is that we have no more power of contradicting the statement of a learned Judge in a matter of this description than we have the power of contradicting any allegation which may appear upon the record. As was said by Martin, B., in the case of R. v. Mellor (6): "We must consider the statement of the learned Judge as absolute verity and we ought to take his statement precisely as a record and act on it in the same manner as on a record of Court, which of itself implies an absolute verity." Therefore the only charge that remained to be enquired into was the charge under sec. 302, I. P. C., and the accused pleaded not guilty to the same.

It has been contended before us on behalf of the accused that if three men fired at another intending to kill him and if one of the shots only proved fatal and if it could not be ascertained which of the three had fired the fatal shot, then in such event all the three men could not be held guilty under sec. 302, I. P. C., read with sec. 34, I. P. C. The argument is that not only must there be a common intention among the persons charged but that the criminal act itself must be jointly, i.e., physically done by all the persons charged in furtherance of the said common intention. In other words, it is argued that the criminal act itself must be participated in by all the persons entertaining a common intention. And if the word "criminal act" is taken to denote a series of criminal acts, then the series of criminal acts must, according to learned Counsel for the accused, be participated in by all the persons who have a common intention. It is contended that if these two elements are not satisfied on the evidence adduced by the prosecution, the persons engaged in the doing of the criminal acts of the description referred to herein cannot be held to be guilty under sec. 302, I. P. C. It is further contended that the learned Judge impliedly told the jury that if three or four persons came into the Post Office with a common intention to rob the Post Master and, if necessary, to kill him, and death resulted from their act, the man who stood outside the Post Office room and in the courtyard would be equally guilty with the men who were inside the Post Office room, and that in this the learned Judge was wrong. It is argued that if these submissions are correct, the learned Judge misdirected the jury in the passages which have been quoted above.

(6) 27 L. J. M. C. 21 at p. 137; D. & B. 468; 7 Cox. C. C. 454 (1858).

It therefore becomes necessary to ascertain what is the true meaning of sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. Sec. 34, I. P. C., runs as follows:—"When a criminal act is done by several persons, in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone."

To start with, it is reasonably clear that the section does not create a distinct offence and it merely lays down a principle of liability. [See Foczullah v. King-Emperor (47)]. What is the principle? It is, to use the words of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, this, that "where parties go with a common purpose to execute a common object, each and every one becomes responsible for the acts of each and every other in execution and furtherance of their common purpose; as the purpose is common, so must be the responsibility." [See Ganesh Singh v. Ram Raja (21)]. This view was expressed in 1869 by their Lordships in a Civil Appeal arising out of a case in which the Defendants had plundered the Plaintiff's property; but before that in 1866 Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in the case of Queen v. Gorachand Gopee (19) in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench had observed as follows:—"If the object and design of those who seized Amordi was merely to take him to the thana on a charge of theft, and it was no part of the common design to beat him, they would not all be liable for the consequences of the beating merely because they were present. It is laid down that, when several persons are in company together engaged in one common purpose, lawful or unlawful, and one of them, without the knowledge and consent of the others commits an offence, the others will not be involved in the guilt, unless the act done was in some manner in furtherance of the common intention." This is so, because it is a well recognised canon of criminal jurisprudence that the Courts cannot distinguish between conspirators, nor can it inquire, even if it were possible, as to the part taken by each in the crime. As was observed by Markby, J.: "If two persons join in beating a man and he dies, it is not necessary to ascertain exactly what the effect of each blow was." [See Queen v. Mohamed Asger (33)]. In other words, since a combined act and evil intent constitute crime and since a thing which a person does through the agency of another is the same in law as though he had performed it himself, one who contributes his will to a crime, by whomsoever the physical act of wrong is done, is guilty of the crime; that is to say, when two or more persons unite to accomplish a criminal act, whether through the physical act of one, or of all, proceeding severally or collectively, each individual whose will contributes to the wrong doing is in law responsible for the whole, as if the same were performed by himself alone. Numerous illustrations can be given of the application of the doctrine in varying circumstances. Where one assailant strikes a blow which is not fatal and a confederate follows it up with a fatal blow, both are equally liable. If several persons combine to forge an instrument, and each executes by himself a distinct part of the forgery in pursuance of a common intention, they are all equally guilty of forgery, though they may not be together when the forgery is completed by one of them adding the signature [see Rex v. Bingley (129), R. v. Dade (214) and R. v. Kelly (115)]. If several persons act in concert to steal a man's goods, and he is induced by fraud to trust one of them, in the presence of others, with the possession of the goods and another of them entices him away, so that the one who has the goods may carry them away, all are equally guilty of theft. [See Rex v. Standley (96)]. The foregoing examples serve to visualise the principle that if persons combining in intention perform a criminal act jointly, the guilt of each is the same as if he had done it alone and it is the same if the act being divided into parts, each proceeds with his part unaided. In other words, if several persons unite in one common design to do some criminal act and each takes the part assigned to him, though all are not or may not be actually present, yet all are present in the eye of the law. For instance, if one person in furtherance of a common intention to commit a criminal act stands guard, it is immaterial how distant from the scene of the crime his vigil is maintained, provided it gives some promise of protection to those actively engaged in the commission of the act. It is unnecessary to elaborate this further, but I will content myself with quoting a significant passage from Foster's Criminal Law: "Several persons set out together, or in small parties, upon one common design, be it murder or other felony, or for any other purpose unlawful in itself, and each taketh the part assigned to him: some to commit the act, others to watch at proper distances and stations to prevent a surprise, or to favour, if need be, the escape of those who are more immediately engaged. They are all, provided the act be committed, in the eye of the law present at it; for it was made a common cause with them, each man operated in his station at one and the same instant toward the same common end, and the part each man took tended to give countenance, encouragement and protection to the whole gang, and to ensure the success of their common enterprise." To sum up, persons executing parts of a crime separately in furtherance of a common intention are equally guilty. This seems to me to be the meaning of sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code and this view is in accordance with that taken in the vast majority of decisions in this Court. [See for instance the cases of Queen v. Gora Chand Gopee (19), per Peacock, C. J.; Queen v.

J.; Shriprasad v. Empress (36), Jamiruddin v. King-Emperor (44), per Holmwood, J. and Faezullah v. King-Emperor (47)]. No doubt a different view of the scope of sec. 34 has been taken in the case of R. v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (9), which was cited apparently with approval by the Chief Justice, in the case of King-Emperor v. Prafulla (49) and it has been held that sec. 34 applies only where a criminal act is done by several persons, of whom the accused charged thereunder is one, and not where an act is physically done by some persons other than the latter. In other words, it has been held that where two persons fire at another and one actually hits and kills him, the other is not guilty of murder under secs. 302-34, I. P. C., but of attempt to murder, which offences do not constitute the same "act." Giving the words of sec. 34 their plain and natural meaning, I am unable to take the restricted view of sec. 34, which apparently found favour with the learned Judges who decided the two cases just referred to. In my judgment, the effect of sec. 34, I. P. C. would be entirely nullified if such a restricted meaning of this section is accepted.

The above being my reading of sec. 34, I. P. C., I have carefully examined the summing up of the learned Judge in this case and I have come to the conclusion that that summing up is not open to the charge of mis-direction as has been contended for by learned Counsel for the accused. The expression "criminal act" need not necessarily mean one single indivisible act. I think the proper interpretation of sec. 34 in the light of the facts of the present case is to read it in manner something like the following: When a criminal act, e.g., the killing of the Post Master, is done, that is, brought about or carried out by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act, that is, for such killing, in the same manner as if it, that is, the killing, were done or brought about or carried out by him alone. The section can also be read, in the light of the fact in the present case, in the following manner:—When a series of acts involving or resulting in a crime to wit the destruction of the Post Master is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that series of acts in the same manner as if the whole series were done by him alone. In my view, therefore, so far as the learned Judge's charge to the Jury is concerned, there has been no mis-direction and the first point taken in the learned Advocate-General's fiat therefore fails.

The view taken as set out above in the decisions of this Court of the true meaning of sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code finds support, so far as the Madras High Court is concerned, in the case of Queen- v. Raru (63), so far as the Bombay High Court is concerned, in the cases of Queen

v. Pitambar (67) and Emperor v. Chota Lal (70) and so far as the Allahabad High Court is concerned, in the cases of Empress v. Mahabir Prasad (10), Emperor v. Nageshwar (51), Emperor v. Bhola Singh (52), Emperor v. Kanhai (54), Emperor v. Ram Newaz (55), Emperor v. Chandra Singh (57) and Emperor v. Gulab (58). The Patna High Court has taken the same view in the cases of Ritbaran v. Emperor (79) and Satrughan v. Emperor (80). So far as the Punjab Court is concerned, the case in Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (9) has been followed in the case of Bahal Singh v. Emperor (73). It is not to be understood that the above is an exhaustive summary of the cases on sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. There are a great many more decisions on that section, but I have only selected the typical ones, more specially so because of the fact that a full discussion of them is contained in the judgment of Mookerjee, J.

I now pass on to consider the second question raised on the fiat of the learned Advocate-General, namely, that the learned Judge had "omitted to draw the attention of the Jury to the defence of the accused save and except a mere reference to the statement made by the accused." In order to appreciate the precise significance of this contention the facts of this case, which have already been referred to by me, have got to be borne in mind and, bearing the same in mind, the learned Judge's charge to the Jury has got to be examined. The case for the defence, as far as one can make out from the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and from the statement made by the accused when questioned under the provisions of sec. 342, Cr. P. C., was this :—

(1) That he stood outside the Post Office room and in the courtyard;

(2) that he did not fire; and

(3) that he did not intend to kill the Post Master.

In other words, the real questions on the case for the defence were :—

(1) Did 3 or 4 men form the party and did 2 or 3 men go inside the Post Office room and fire?

(2) Was the prisoner outside the Post Office room and in the courtyard?

(3) Did the prisoner have any murderous intention?

Now the principle which should guide us in determining whether there has been non-direction amounting in law to misdirection is what has been laid down by Lord Alverstone, L. C. J., in the case of Rex v. Stoddart (136). Lord Alverstone observed as follows :—"As appears from the judgment which has just been delivered the case for the Appellant was conducted by making a minute and critical examination, not only of every part of the summing up, but of the whole conduct of the trial. Objections were raised which, if sound, ought to have been taken at the trial. Probably no summing up, and certainly none that attempts to deal with the incidents as to which the evidence has extended over a period of 20 days, would fail to be open to some objection. To quote

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

Lord Esher's words in Abrath v. The North Eastern Railway Company (137) :—'It is no mis-direction not to tell the Jury everything which might have been told them : there is no mis-direction unless the Judge has told them something wrong or unless what he has told them would make wrong that which he has left them to understand. Non-direction merely is not mis-direction, and those who allege mis-direction must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood.' Every summing up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial and the questions which have been raised by the Counsel for the prosecution and for the defence respectively. This Court does not sit to consider whether this or that phrase was the best that might have been chosen, or whether a direction which has been attacked might have been fuller or more conveniently expressed, or whether other topics which might have been dealt with on other occasions should be introduced. This Court sits here to administer justice and to deal with valid objections to matters which may have led to a mis-carriage of justice. Its work would become well-nigh impossible if it is to be supposed that, regardless of their real merits or of their effect upon the result, objections are to be raised and argued at great length which were never suggested at the trial and which are only the result of criticism directed to discover some possible ground for argument." These observations have been approved of and acted upon in the Full Bench case of Emperor v. Fateh Chand Agarwala (177) and in the case of Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (1). In the last mentioned case Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., observed as follows :—"The duty of the Judge is in my opinion to lay down the law in reference to the case presented to the Court and the facts of the case, and not to perplex the mind of the Jury with considerations that are outside the legitimate scope of the enquiry. It is, I think, the duty of the Judge to keep the Jury within proper limits and for this purpose to simplify as far as he can the issues fairly and properly before the Court, and direct the minds of the Jurors to those issues and those issues alone."

Now, applying the above principles to this case, the question arises whether on a fair and reasonable reading of the evidence and of the statement made by the prisoner, and of the learned Judge's charge to the Jury, it can be said in this case that the learned Judge had "omitted to draw the attention of the Jury to the defence of the accused, save and except a mere reference to the statement made by the accused." To start with, according to the evidence of Hara Prasad Das, the packer, there were four men, three inside the room and one outside, and that the three men who were inside the room had fired. The evidence of Sham Dulal Das, the Post Office clerk, is also to the same effect. The witness Sitaram says there were four men; he heard three shots being fired and he saw four men running away. The witness Jhapsaram states that he saw four men run away. The point about the number of the men who had formed the party is one of very great importance, because of the description of the clothes the men had on themselves as given by the packer and the Post Office clerk. In my opinion it was most material to know with certainty the exact number of men who had assembled at the Sankaritolla Post Office on the afternoon of 3rd August 1923, because if there were only three men and if out of the three two were inside the room, namely, the man who had the mask on and the man with a striped coat, the third man, who according to the evidence had a white coat on, must have been, having regard to the plan of the Post Office and of the courtyard, the man who stood outside the Post Office room and near the steps leading thereto; but there is no cross-examination upon this most vital point and it is impossible for me to found my judgment in favour of the accused in the absence of cross-examination. There is, however, enough in the learned Judge's charge to the Jury which indicates to my mind that he had not overlooked the question raised in the first point indicated above. In at least three passages in that charge the learned Judge directed, and properly directed, the attention of the Jury to this matter.

Now, as regards the second issue, viz., was the prisoner outside the Post Office room and in the coutyard, the learned Judge did draw the attention of the Jury to the suggestion made on behalf of the defence, although no doubt he pointed out, as he was entirely right in doing, that there was no evidence in support of the suggestion made by the defence.

As regards the third issue, viz., whether the prisoner had any murderous intention, the learned Judge has time after time in the course of his charge to the Jury referred to the question of the common intention of the men who had joined in the enterprise and he very properly left the entire matter to the Jury to decide. The intention of the participants in the criminal act was to be gathered by the Jury from the circumstances disclosed in the evidence and as I read the learned Judge's charge to the Jury, he pointedly drew the attention of the Jury to the fact that they had to be satisfied that the criminal act in question was done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all. In other words, the common murderous intention had to be inferred from a net work of facts cast around the accused and the Jury had to act on just and reasonable conviction founded upon just and reasonable grounds.

Therefore, so far as these three issues of fact are concerned, there are no valid grounds for the suggestion that the learned Judge had omitted to direct the Jury thereon. But it is said by learned Counsel for the accused that the learned Judge did not remind the Jury that they were absolute judges of facts, that he did not tell the Jury that a large crowd had collected at the Post Office immediately after the occurrence and that in the melee it was impossible to ascertain whether the empty cartridge case which has been produced was the only one which had dropped out, that he gave undue prominence to the evidence of the packer and did not remind the Jury that the packer was contradicted in material particulars by the witness P. L. Sircar, that he omitted to read and explain to the Jury the various sections of the Indian Penal Code on which the charge against the accused was based, and that he did not explain to the Jury the bearing of Exs. 10 and 11 when coupled with the evidence of P. L. Sircar. Many of the points indicated above fade into insignificance if the importance of the last point is once realised. The suggestion therein is that not until the accused had run away into Mohendra Sircar Lane, did a live-cartridge fall out of the automatic pistol that he was carrying, that this live-cartridge had not fallen out before because the accused had forgotten to release the safety-catch on the pistol and further that if Ex. 10 is that live-cartridge which had fallen out of the accused's pistol, then the inference may safely be drawn that the accused had not fired at all until he was chased.

In the first place, it is noteworthy that the suggestion that has now been made before us was never made before the trial Judge and Jury. In the second place, having regard to what happened at the trial when the witness Purno Chandra De was examined, and having regard to the facts which have been stated to us by the learned Judge, showing conclusively that Ex. 10 went out of the case altogether, it is not open, in my opinion, to learned Counsel for the accused at this stage of the case to hark back to Ex. 10 and to make use of it for the purpose of supporting his theory. In the third place, having regard to the fact that the gun-expert Mr. Todd was not examined on the point as to whether Ex. 10 could fit into the automatic pistol which was in the hands of the accused, it would be mere speculation to enlarge further on the question. I am satisfied on the evidence and on the statement of the learned Judge that the case now raised on behalf of the accused was not made at the trial and was not even remotely indicated during the progress of the trial and that it is an after-thought. So much for the theory of the live-cartridge. As regards the other points referred to above, under this head, I do not think it is necessary for me to go into them in detail, the more so because I am satisfied from the tenor and general effect of the whole summing up that substantially the Jury were given a proper direction. No two minds approach a subject from quite the same angle and it may be that another Judge could have framed his charge in different, though I do not say better, language. See in this connection the judgment of Lord Shaw in Arnold v. Emperor (153). But the test to be applied in this as in every case is whether on the facts of the particular case the summing up can in the light of the principles discussed above be legitimately challenged. In my judgment, Mr. Justice Page's, up cannot be so challenged.

In this case certain considerations arising out of what was stated to and by the learned Judge before the trial were forced upon our attention and we have had to consider whether the accused has had a fair trial. After much anxious consideration I have come to the conclusion that nothing was left unsaid or undone which could have been said or done on behalf of the accused on the facts of this particular case. The considerations to which I have alluded may call for our judgment on a future occasion; for the present I prefer not to say anything further on the same. But I have this satisfaction that all the facts in connection with this trial have been made known to us. The extreme importance of avoiding any grounds for suspicion in trials, civil and criminal, cannot be too strongly emphasised; suspicion feeds on secrecy and the best way to get rid of suspicion is to let all the facts be known. That has been done in this case. The object of a trial is the administration of justice in a course as free from doubt or chance of miscarriage as merely human administration of it can be—not in the interest of either the Crown or the accused. I have tried to steadily keep this in view and the conclusion I have come to is that the two points raised on the learned Advocate-General's fiat fail and that this application should be dismissed.

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

CUMING, J.—I have given my best attention to the elaborate arguments that have been addressed to us by Mr. Chatterjee and the Standing Counsel and after giving them my most careful consideration am of opinion that this certificate of the learned Advocate-General is misconceived and this application for review under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent should be refused.

It is unnecessary for me to set out the facts of the case which will be found in the judgment of my learned brother Mookerjee.

Mr. Chatterjee has urged three points.

His first point is that Mr. Justice Page in his charge to the Jury laid down the law as follows :—

"Therefore in this case if these three persons went to that place with a common intention to rob the Post Master and if necessary to kill him and if death resulted, each of them is liable whichever of the three fired the fatal shot."

Mr. Chatterjee's argument seems to be that this may be the law in England, he does not seem to dispute that it is so, but he would contend that it is not the law in India. His contention seems to be that those who did not actually fire the fatal shot may be charged with abetment but not as principals; that in the present case there is no charge of abetment neither did the learned Judge put such a case to the Jury; further that sec. 34 and the cognate secs. 35, 36 or 37 of the Indian Penal Code have no application to the present case and that the persons who did not actually fire the fatal shot that killed the Post Master could not be guilty as principals. The major portion of his argument has centered round the correct interpretation of sec. 34, Indian Penal Code, and with that argument I now propose to deal. That section runs as follows :—

"When a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone."

Mr. Chatterjee admits that the expression "act" includes a "series of acts" but he would contend that the section contemplates that each of the persons should participate in each of the acts or series of acts and that it does not cover a case where one act of the series is done by one person and another by another person even though these individual acts had a common intention and result, or different persons do different parts of the same act even though they were acting with a common intention.

Now in considering whether the learned Judge correctly put the law to the jury, we are not necessarily restricted to the provision of sec. 34.

Sec. 34 and the connected secs. 35, 36, 37 and 38 create no substantive offence. They are merely declaratory of a principle of law and in charging an accused person it is not necessary to cite them in the charge. If therefore the view of the law given by the learned Judge to the jury fall within any one of these sections it will be sufficient. Taking first of all sec. 34 I am not prepared to accept the extremely restricted view which has been urged by the learned Counsel. The expression criminal act includes also a series of acts.

A criminal act may well consist of parts, each of which is more or less necessary to the accomplishment of the act. Thus one man may keep guard at the door, while another man holds the victim and a third man kills him. Or one man may be there in order by his presence to encourage, support or protect the man who is actually killing the victim. They would to my mind be all of them doing some parts of the act because it may well be that without their support the act could not be done. They must therefore be considered to be all doing the act though each is executing a different part of the act.

Further if the expression act includes a series of acts then all the different acts of the conspirators, such as keeping guard, terrorising the onlookers or victim must be considered as one act. It is impossible to conceive two individuals doing the identically same act. Such a thing is impossible. Therefore to have any meaning the expression "criminal act done by several persons" must contemplate an act which can be divided into parts each part being executed by a different person, the whole making up the criminal act which was the common intention of all. To put it in another way the one criminal act may be regarded as made up of a number of acts done by the individual conspirators, the result of their individual acts being the criminal act which was the common intention of them all.

I think that the expression "criminal act done by several persons" includes the case of a number of persons acting together for a common object and each doing some act in furtherance of the final result, which various acts make up the final act.

Mr. Chatterjee had cited in support of his contention a number of authorities drawn from every High Court in India. I do not myself propose to travel beyond the decision of our own Court.

Mr. Chatterjee had laid much stress on the ruling of Stephen, J., in the case of Nirmal Kanta Roy (9). No doubt this case strongly supports his contention but it must be pointed out with great respect to the learned Judge that it is the decision of a single Judge sitting on the Original Side and therefore cannot be considered as an authority so far as we are concerned. It is moreover in direct conflict with a large number of cases in this Court and so far as I can see has never been followed. I will first of all consider the case of Gauri Das Namasudra v. Emperor (40) where the late learned Chief Justice remarked: "Recourse has, therefore, to be had to sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code, but in the circumstances of this case we are not prepared to hold that the Appellant who did not strike the fatal blow must have contemplated the likelihood of such a blow being struck."

Another case which may be referred to is the case of Keshawar Lal Shaha v. Giris Chandra Dutt (37). In this case the servant received the money in payment for ganja sold by his master, both master and servant being present. The learned Judges, one of whom was Stephen, J., held that both master and servant were guilty applying the principles of sec. 34 and that sec. 114 was not applicable. Now in this case it will be seen that the two men did different parts of the criminal act which was the sale of the ganja, for one handed out the ganja and another took the money. It cannot therefore be said that they each did the whole act for they each did a distinct part of the criminal act.

In the case of Khudiram Bose v. Emperor (39) Brett, J., states :—

"We may add that even if such had been the case the guilt of the accused would have been equal. If he and Dinesh went that night with the intention of committing murder by means of the bomb and if in prosecution of this common object the accused stood by and held the heavy articles and the coat of Dinesh so as to facilitate the commission of the offence by Dinesh and to facilitate his escape afterwards and if Dinesh threw the bomb the accused (Khudiram) would be equally guilty with Dinesh of committing the offence of murder (sec. 34, Indian Penal Code)."

In the case of Nibaran Chandra Ray v. King-Emperor (38) the learned Judges (Mitra and Fletcher, JJ.), remark :—

"If, however, two persons are found under circumstances as assumed in the hypothetical case, with guns in their hands and they had been acting in concert or each was an assenting party to the action of the other, the criminal act done by one must be presumed to have been done in furtherance of the common intention of both and sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code may be invoked to impose penal liability on any one of the persons in the same manner as if the act was by him alone."

In support of this proposition the learned Judges refer to Queen v. Gora Chand (19).

The case of Foezullah v. The King-Emperor (47) on which Mr. Chatterjee apparently relies really supports the case of the prosecution, for the learned Judges held "that when two or more persons join actively in an assault on a third person there is ample authority for the view that they are directly responsible for the injuries caused to the extent to which they had a common intention" and surely to fire a pistol at a man or to stand guard at the door with a loaded pistol is actively joining in murdering him.

Learned Counsel has further contended that if sec. 34 is read as Page, J., would read it in his charge the enactment of sec. 149, Indian Penal Code, would be entirely unnecessary. But a consideration of sec. 149 will shew that it is wider in its scope than sec. 34 for it covers not only the acts committed in prosecution of the common object but also any act that the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed. I am therefore of opinion that Page, J., correctly laid down to the jury the laws in this portion of his charge. It is the interpretation which has consistently been put on the section by this Court and I see no reason to differ from it.

Mr. Chatterjee has then urged that the learned Judge mis-directed the jury in that portion of his charge where he stated :—

"If you come to the conclusion that these three or four persons came into the Post Office with that intention to rob and if necessary to kill and death resulted from their acts, if that be so, you are bound to find a verdict of guilty." Learned Counsel contends that the implication in that portion of the charge is that one person stood outside the room (which was the defence set up by the accused). He contends that the learned Judge should have specifically put to the jury that they should consider whether the man who stood at the door could be affixed with the same intention as those who entered the room, and whether he could be held to know that murder would be done.

The accused's case in his statement is that he was the man who stood outside.

The answer to this argument must I think depend on the facts of the case. The evidence shews that three men entered the Post Office and the 4th stood on the step. He was within a foot or two of the three who actually entered the Post Office door. This man was according to the evidence armed with a pistol and the accused who contends that he was this man also admits he was so armed. In view of his proximity to the other three and the fact he was also armed it is difficult to see how the learned Judge could have differentiated his case from the other three or asked the jury to do so and separately consider it.

Mr. Chatterjee has next contended that the learned Judge omitted to put the defence of the accused to the jury beyond making a mere reference to the statement of the accused.

He argues that sec. 297 applies to High Courts.

Sec. 297 provides that in cases tried by jury, when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court shall proceed to charge the jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided.

Now it is difficult to see what evidence the learned Judge could have put to the jury on behalf of the accused. The accused himself had examined no witnesses. Mr. Chatterjee, however, argues that here was evidence to support the case of the accused that a live-cartridge came out of his pistol and he says this evidence was the finding of a live-cartridge. But there is no evidence on the record to prove where this live-cartridge was found. The prosecution were unable to put into the box the man who found it as he could not be found and the defence opposed any other evidence as to the finding of the live-cartridge. Nor is there any evidence that this live-cartridge, Ex. X, fitted the accused's pistol. No attempt was made by the accused to examine Mr. Todd, the gun-maker on this point. There is no evidence therefore to connect this live-cartridge with the present case and clearly no evidence on the point for the learned Judge to put to the jury. Another point which Mr. Chatterjee contends should have been put to the jury is that Mr. Bavin had deposed that the accused was severely beaten after his arrest and the packer denied he was beaten. Mr. Chatterjee contends that the contradiction should have been put to the jury to shew the untrustworthiness of the packer's evidence.

The difficulty here is that the accused himself never suggested he had been beaten nor indeed does Mr. Bavin. Mr. Bavin states that accused was in a state of collapse and had bruises on him. That is not the same thing as saying that he had been beaten. Mr. Chatterjee then suggests that the learned Judge should have drawn the jury's attention to the fact that Sarkar's evidence contradicts the packer. The evidence has been put before us and I am bound to say I do not see that Sarkar's evidence does contradict the packer. Mr. Chatterjee says he did put this to the jury. If so, the jury had the argument in their mind. Learned Counsel then argues that the learned Judge did not put to the jury the argument and comments that he (Counsel) had advanced in support of the accused's case. But it seems to me that it is imposing an impossible task on the Judge to ask him to repeat again to the jury every argument and comment put forward either by the defence or the prosecution's Counsel.

The jury had these arguments in their mind, for the defence had in this case the right of reply. The contention that the Judge should in such circumstance endeavour to repeat to the jury the arguments they had just heard is imposing on him an impossible mnemonic feat and which could only confuse the jury for it is difficult to see how the Judge could put them exactly as the Counsel did. The probable result of such an attempt could only be an inaccurate version of what Counsel said. Sec. 297 provides that the Judge must put the evidence for the accused to the jury and so far as I can see this is what the learned Judge did. I cannot find that, beyond his own statement which was put to the jury, there is any evidence on his behalf which could have been put to the jury and which was not put. Putting the accused's case to the jury cannot possibly mean putting to the jury every argument and comment of the learned Counsel for the defence. A charge to the jury must be read as a whole and also in the light of the question raised by Counsel during the conduct of the trial. The Crown case was that there were four men one of whom stayed outside and did not fire and that accused was one of those that entered and fired. The accused's case was that there were three men one of whom stayed outside. The learned Judge did put this case of the accused to the jury. See pp. 20-22

Mr. Chatterjee then argues that the learned Judge was bound to read the sections of the Code to the jury.

Now the law on murder is contained in secs. 299, 300, 301 and 302 and I am prepared to say that to read these sections to a number of lay-men would be to convey nothing to them and to hopelessly confuse them. Then again with regard to sec. 34 apparently Mr. Chatterjee argues that this section should have been read to the jury and they should have been left to put their own construction on it.

Seeing that it had taken learned Counsel some three days to argue what the section does mean it seems at the best doubtful if anything would have been gained by reading it to the jury. The learned Judge put to the jury in simple language what he considered was the principle which the section contained and this to my mind is the proper way of putting the law to the jury.

In view of the above finding it is unnecessary to consider what course the Court should adopt in the event of it being found that there had been a misdirection or error on a point of law. With regard to the sentence I do not think, bearing in mind the findings come to above, that there has been no error in law; it is open to the Court to review the sentence passed by the learned Judge in this case.

It is not contended that the sentence is an illegal one.

Cl. 25 of the Charter provides that there shall be no appeal from any sentence or order passed or made on any criminal trial before the Courts of Original Jurisdiction which may be constituted by one or more Judges of the said High Court but it shall be in the discretion of such Court to reserve any point or points of law for the opinion of the High Court.

Cl. 26 provides that on such point or points of law being reserved or on it being certified by the Advocate-General that in his judgment there is an error in the decision of a point or that a point requires to be further considered the High Court shall have full power to review the case or such part as may be necessary and finally determine such point or points of law and thereupon to alter the sentences passed and to pass such judgment and sentence as the High Court may seem right.

The expression "thereupon" would I think show that it is only where there has been an error in law that the High Court has any power to re-open, review and deal with the case. If there has been no error in law I do not think there can be any power to deal with the case further. Otherwise the position would become this. An accused person who could obtain a certificate that there had been an error in law or that the law required to be further considered even though unsuccessful could obtain an appeal on the severity of his sentence while the accused person in whose favour a certificate could not be obtained would not enjoy the same privilege. Such an anomalous position could not be contemplated.

A little further consideration would shew that what the Advocate-General would in this view of the law be doing when he granted a certificate would be granting leave to appeal to the High Court against an order which cl. 25 expressly says is not appealable.

In the view which I take of the meaning of cl. 26 I am supported by the case of King-Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (1). That case was similar in many respects to the present case. In that case which was also a capital sentence case a certificate had been granted by the Advocate-General that certain points of law had been wrongly decided by the trial Judge (Stephen, J.) and hence that the Jury had been misdirected.

The Full Bench decided that the certificate of the Advocate-General was misconceived and that no error of law had in fact been made. The learned Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins concluded his judgment as follows :—

"In this view of the case it is not within my power to re-open the case and I regard myself as not entitled to express any opinion on its merits. In fact I am not in a position to deal with the merits; for they have not been discussed before us, nor have those conditions been established on which alone they could be considered by us.

"Our powers are circumscribed for we can only act in conformity with cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. If there was no misdirection or other error as certified the certificate was misconceived and we have no power to interfere. If the merits of the case or the sentence are to be further considered, then that must be not by this Court, but by some other authority vested with the requisite power."

Woodroffe, J., remarked: "With the merits we are not concerned until it is established that there has been an error in law which opens out the case for our judgment. The same ground precludes me from dealing with the question of sentence which may arise on the facts above stated and the possibility if the verdict be correct of the act having been committed without premeditation on a sudden access of passion. This is, however, a matter for the Crown to consider. I can only hold no error of law has been shown which entitles me to re-open a verdict or to consider a sentence which has been already passed."

Mookerjee, J., concluded his judgment with these words: "In the view I take no error of law has been established and consequently the Court is not called upon to express an opinion as to the propriety of the conviction and sentence although as Woodroffe, J., has pointed out if the Court could examine the case on the merits, there might be matters for careful consideration."

Two cases have been brought to my notice in which on a certificate from the Advocate-General the Full Bench did interfere with the question of sentence

THE KING-EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

[Rex v. Sheikh Talet (176) and Emperor v. Narayan Raghunath Palki (189)].

But an examination of these two cases makes it at once apparent that they are distinguishable and in fact support my opinion. In the case of Rex v. Sheikh Talet (176), it was found that evidence had been wrongly admitted. This mis-reception of evidence was held to be a point of law. Then the case was re-opened and reviewed. The Court excluded the inadmissible evidence and dealt with the case.

In the other case, Emperor v. Narayan Raghunath Palki (189), the same point arose. It was held that inadmissible evidence had been admitted and the Court dealt with the whole case on the evidence properly admitted. The same principle was followed in O'Hara's case (35). I am aware of no case in which the Courts where it has found the certificate misconceived has dealt with the case and interfered with the sentence.

In my opinion therefore the certificate in this case has been misconceived and the application must fail.

Certain other points and incidents have arisen during the hearing of this case and in the course of the trial. These points have not been argued by Counsel and form as far as I know no part of the case of either party. In these circumstances I do not think it necessary that I should discuss them and I have confined myself to the case of the parties as presented to me in Court.

PAGE, J.—I should have felt it to be my duty to state in my own words what I conceive to be the meaning and effect of sec. 34 and the kindred sections of the Indian Penal Code, were it not that I have had an opportunity of reading the judgments which have been delivered by my brothers Richardson, Ghose and Cuming.

In more felicitous language, and with greater analytical power, than I could command they have expressed my own view as well of the law as of the facts to which it is to be applied.

To re-state their arguments in different language would be a work of supererogation.

At the trial I found myself unable to accept the construction which Stephen, J. had placed upon sec. 34 in Nirmal Kanta Roy v. King-Emperor (9). With great respect to the learned Judge I stated—and I adhere to what I then said—that if sec. 34 bore the meaning attributed to it by Stephen, J., the section would prove to be a menace and not a safeguard to the community. The case of Nirmal Kanta Roy v. King-Emperor (9), at any rate so far as it relates to the construction of sec. 34, must now be regarded as having been incorrectly decided.

Notwithstanding the exhaustive argument of Counsel for the accused I have been unable to persuade myself that the issue of law presents any real difficulty, and the decision of this Court follows in the wake of a long and almost unbroken series of judicial pronouncements in the Calcutta High Court and other High Courts in India. With respect the facts I will content myself with saying that if the charge was sound in law, and the jury accepted the evidence which was adduced before them, the issue of fact, in my opinion, was as simple an one as ever was tried. The jury found an unanimous verdict; it was adverse to the accused, and there was ample evidence to support it.

In these proceedings the Court has decided that there was no mis-direction or non-direction as set out in the certificate of the learned Advocate-General. The certificate, therefore, is misconceived, and, in my opinion, the jurisdiction of this Court is exhausted, and the matter is at an end.

Certain other questions relating to procedure and the conduct of Counsel who had appeared for the accused were canvassed at some length before us, but as to them I express no opinion. With great respect I take leave to postpone consideration of these matters until they can effectively be determined. In my opinion, this is not a suitable occasion, and this Court is not the proper tribunal for disposing of them.

There is only one other matter to which I desire to refer. That Judges exercising Original Civil or Criminal Jurisdiction should be compelled to transact business without the assistance of shorthand writers is false economy, and an anachronism which I trust in the near future will come to an end. But shorthand writers are not infallible, and these proceedings emphasise the importance of rigidly maintaining the rule that a statement by a learned Judge as to what took place during the course of a trial before him is final and decisive: It is not to be criticized or circumvented; much less is it to be exposed to animadversion.

Postscript.

As I was seriously ill when judgment was given and had no notice of the statement which Mookerjee, J., thought it right to make as to what he would or might have done if Counsel had sought an interview with him, I desire to place on record that it was well-known that the two Counsel who came to my chamber were appearing for the accused Ghose, who might have been prejudiced if they had withdrawn from the case at the last moment. I understood that Counsel were anxious to obtain my advice in the difficult position in which they were placed, and that they proposed to advise the accused to plead guilty to the charge of murder if, having regard to the alleged facts disclosed in the depositions, I thought that the offence did not merit the infliction of the extreme penalty, I told them that I could give them no information as to what might happen at the trial; that they must make up their own minds as to whether they should conduct the defence or not, but that if they were satisfied that the accused was guilty, while it was their duty by cross-examination to test the evidence of the witnesses they were not entitled to set up a substantive case, such as an alibi, in opposition to the case for the Crown.

It now appears that after a conference with the accused these Counsel came to the conclusion that the accused possessed a sound defence, and that they conducted the defence at the trial upon that assumption, and in accordance with instructions which they had received from the accused without regard to what had passed at the interview in my chamber. The question raised by Mookerjee, J., who presided in this Court, after having received the same information which I possessed before the trial, would seem to be an ethical rather than a legal one, about which more than one view may legitimately be held. But as, in my opinion, it is not germane to any issue in this case, I think that the question is not one which may properly be discussed in these proceedings and I say no more about it.

RAMAN BEHARI ROY,
Petitioner,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR,
Opposite Party.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec 415, sending an insured cover falsely purporting to contain currency notes and causing addressee to sign a receipt for the cover, if constitutes "cheating."

Accused sent an insured cover purporting to contain eight Government Currency Notes of Rs. 100 each, but the addressee on opening the same found no currency notes in it:

Held—That it is difficult to say that the person deceived has been induced to deliver any property to any other person or to consent that the said other person should retain any property, or that the person deceived has been induced to do or omit to do anything which he would not have otherwise done, and which act or omission has caused or was likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property. All that the person deceived has been induced to do is that he has signed a receipt acknowledging the delivery of a cover. He has not acknowledged by that the receipt of any sum of money alleged to be contained in the cover. That being so, the charge of cheating has not been brought home to the accused.

This was a Rule on the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet, against an order of conviction of the Petitioner.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Babus Manmotha Nath Mukerjee and Nikunja Behari Ray for the Petitioner.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This Rule was issued calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet to show cause why the conviction of the Petitioner and the sentence passed upon him should not be set aside on the ground that on the facts alleged by the prosecution, no offence under sec. 417, I. P. C. has been made out. We have heard Mr. Manmotha Nath Mukerjee in support of the Rule and Mr. Orr on behalf of the Crown and for the reason given below, we are of opinion that Mr. Mukerjee's contention must prevail.

The facts alleged by the prosecution, shortly stated, are as follows:—It is alleged that the accused sent to one Nobin Chandra Choudhury an insured cover purporting to contain eight Government Currency Notes of Rs. 100 each. The envelope in question, it appears, was handed over by the accused in person to the Post Master at Nilamsbazar Post Office on the 16th November 1920. The cover was received at the Beliaghata Post Office on the 18th November 1920, and was delivered to an agent of the said Nobin Chandra Choudhury. On the addressee opening the envelope, the same was found to contain a letter advising the despatch of a sum of Rs. 800 and several bits of waste paper. No Government Currency Notes was found inside the cover. Thereupon the Post Master of the Beliaghata Post Office was communicated with by the addressee and Police were also called in.

These facts have been found to be correct by the learned Sessions Judge and, as stated above, the argument on behalf of the Petitioner is that assuming that these facts are correct, no offence under sec. 417, I. P. C. has been made out.

Now, in order to find out the ingredients of the offence of cheating, we must turn to sec. 415, I. P. C. The ingredients by that section are:—

RAMAN BEHARI ROY v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

(1) Deception of any person.

(a) Fraudulently or dishonestly inducing that person

(i) to deliver any property to any person; or

(ii) to consent that any person shall retain any property; or

(b) Intentionally inducing that person to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.

Now, in this case, having regard to the facts found, it is difficult for us to say that the person deceived has been induced to deliver any property to any other person, or to consent that the said other person should retain any property, or that the person deceived has been induced to do or omit to do anything which he would not have done or omitted, if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission has caused or was likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property. All that the person deceived has been induced to do is that he has signed a receipt acknowledging the delivery of a cover. He has not acknowledged by that the receipt of any sum of money alleged to be contained in the cover. That being so, we are unable to say that the charge of cheating has been brought home to the accused in the circumstances which appear on the record before us.

The result, therefore, is that the Rule is made absolute. The Petitioner will be discharged from his bail bond and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

BRIJ NARAIN RAI, Appellant, v. MANGLA PRASAD, Respondent.

Hindu law—Mitakshara—Joint family property Mortgage by father as managing member to pay previous mortgages—Latter, if "antecedent debts"—"Antecedent debts," what are—Son's pious obligation to pay off father's debt, if arises in father's lifetime—Right of creditors of father to execute decree against ancestral property—Conflicting principles, equally supported by authority—Stare decisis.

Where the managing member of a joint Mitakshara family, being the father of the other members, executed a mortgage of joint ancestral property in order to pay off two mortgages previously executed by him on the same property:

Held—That the later mortgage having been executed to pay off an "antecedent debt" bound the estate.

The managing member of a joint undivided Mitakshara family cannot alienate or burden joint ancestral property qua manager except for purposes of necessity.

If he is the father and the other members are the sons, he may, by incurring debt, so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt.

There is no rule that this result is affected by the question whether the father who contracted the debt or burdened the estate is alive or dead, and observations to the contrary in SAHU RAM CHANDRA v. BHUP SINGH (1), which were not necessary for the judgment in that case, cannot be supported.

If he purports to burden the estate by mortgage, then unless that mortgage is to discharge an antecedent debt, it would not bind more than his own interest.

Antecedent debt means antecedent in fact as well as in time, that is to say, that the debt must be truly independent and not part of the transaction impeached.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 14th August 1919, of the High Court at Allahabad, which affirmed a decree, dated the 23rd December 1915, of the Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur.

The suit was filed by their mother on behalf of her minor sons Mangla Prasad and Jamna Prasad for a declaration that a mortgage executed by their father and a decree obtained on that mortgage were void as against them.

The father Sita Ram and his sons were members of a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law. On the 12th December 1905 and again on the 19th June 1907, Sita Ram mortgaged the joint and ancestral family property. The evidence did not disclose the purpose for which the money was borrowed.

On the 4th March 1908, Sita Ram executed the mortgage in suit in order to pay off the earlier mortgages. The mortgagees—represented in this appeal by the Appellant—brought a suit on this mortgage and obtained an ex parte decree on the 27th November 1912, and on the 13th March 1915 the present suit was filed. The Subordinate Judge held that the sons were not bound by the decree of 1912 and his decision was affirmed by the High Court on appeal (Tudball and Rafique, JJ.).

The Appellant applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and in granting a certificate the learned Judges of the High Court (Grimwood Mears, C. J. and Banerji, J.) stated as follows :—

"The value of the subject-matter of the suit and of the proposed appeal exceeds Rs. 10,000, but this Court affirmed the decision of the Court below. We have therefore to see whether the case involves a substantial question of law. The question of law which arises is what constitutes antecedent debt so as to justify a transfer of joint family property by the manager of the family in the case of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law. This Court has applied in this case the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). The Madras High Court in the Full Bench case of Armugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (4) have taken a different view, and so have the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in the case of Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (14). The Patna High Court has held the same view as that adopted by this Court in the present case and the judgment of the learned Judge of the Patna High Court was passed in the case of Sukhdeo Jha v. Jhapat Kamat (15). There is thus a conflict of opinion as to what was intended by their Lordships of the Privy Council to be laid down in the case of Sahu Râm Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) and what is the effect of the observations made by their Lordships in that case. It is desirable that the question, which is one of general importance, be authoritatively settled. We therefore certify that this case fulfils the requirements of sec. 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

The appeal was argued before the Judicial Committee on 19th and 20th April 1923 and was re-argued before a Full Board on 18th October 1923.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Appellant.—It is fully established that in the absence of immorality the sons cannot impugn their father's alienation of the family property for the discharge of an antecedent debt.

Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun Mohun (2).

Further it is settled law that if a decree has been passed against a father in regard to his debt, that decree can be enforced against his sons even during their father's life-time.

Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (16).

In the present case there is no connection between the debt for which there was a new mortgage and the prior antecedent debts, except that the latter were discharged out of the new mortgage.

In that way the present case is distinguishable from Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1).

There the incurring of the debt was the creation of the mortgage itself and there was no antecedency either in time or in fact. The High Court have erroneously construed the judgment in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) to confine the definition of an antecedent debt to a debt which has not been secured on joint family property.

That view is opposed to the whole tenor of Hindu law. See Khallilul Rahman v. Gobind Pershad (17), Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 321.

If the construction placed by the High Court on Sahu Ram's case (1) were correct, the only conclusion that can be drawn is that the lender makes the loan with no expectation of ever being repaid.

A reasonable construction has been taken in Peda Venkanna v. Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (3), Armugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (4) and Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (14).

The following cases show that sons are under an obligation to pay their father's debts even in his life-time.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—The facts in this case may be very shortly stated. On the 4th March 1908, Sita Ram granted a mortgage for Rs. 11,000 in favour of Raja Narain Brij Rai and Jagdish Narain Rai. The mortgage was secured on ancestral and joint property of which Sita Ram was at that time manager, the other members of the joint family being his two sons, minors. In 1912 the mortgagees brought a suit on the mortgage and obtained a decree ex parte. In 1913 the present suit was filed by the mother on behalf of her two minor sons (the elder has since become major) to have it declared that the mortgage was not binding on them and that the decree granted was so far as they were concerned null and void.

The mortgage in suit purports to have been executed in order to pay off two prior mortgages on the same property of date the 12th December 1905, and the 19th June 1907, respectively.

In the suit the Plaintiffs cited as Defendants the two mortgagees and their father Sita Ram, who had granted the mortgage. Sita Ram did not appear to defend. Jagdish Narain Rai made over his interest to his brother Raja Narain Brij Rai, who appeared to defend and pleaded that the mortgage in question having been granted to pay off an antecedent debt of the Plaintiffs' father, it was binding on the estate.

The Subordinate Judge found as facts:

(1) That the property was ancestral and joint.

(2) That the money raised under the mortgage was to the extent of Rs. 10,265 employed in paying off the earlier mortgages.

(3) That the sons had not been properly represented when the ex parte decree of 1912 was granted.

He then found in law that the Plaintiffs' sons were not bound by the decree of 1912, and he accordingly set aside the decree of 1912 so far as the sons were concerned; he made no further declaration. The Defendant appealed. The learned Appeal Judges affirmed the findings of fact of the Subordinate Judge with the variation that they found that the whole Rs. 11,000 had been employed in paying off the earlier mortgages; but in view of what had been said by this Board in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) decided after the date of the judgment under appeal, they remitted to the Subordinate Judge to find whether the earlier mortgages were incurred to discharge obligations not only previously incurred but incurred wholly irrespective of the joint family property. The learned Subordinate Judge set out additional evidence as to the two earlier mortgages. On this evidence being taken up by the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal, they came to the conclusion that it was impossible to say for what precise purpose the money raised by the two earlier mortgages had been used, or that the debt then incurred was incurred wholly irrespective of the family property. They accordingly dismissed the appeal. Appeal was then taken to the King in Council.

The Defendant admits that the ex parte decree is not binding on the minors in respect that they were not properly represented, but contends that there ought to have been a declaration that under the circumstances the property became bound and is liable to be taken in execution.

In the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) the suit was brought upon a mortgage 27 years old for Rs. 200, and Rs. 15,000 was demanded in respect of the principal and accrued interest. It was pleaded that the Rs. 200 had been borrowed for family necessity, but this contention was negatived in fact. It was, therefore, a simple case of a debt having been constituted by way of mortgage on the family estate by the father manager and been allowed to swell to gigantic proportions, no money having been paid thereon. The creditors had put forward the universal proposition that if debt was found to incumber the estate, it was necessary for the other members of the family who wished to affirm its non-efficiency to prove that it was incurred for immoral purposes. If they failed to do so, then the incumbrance must stand without further question. This view was negatived by the High Court, and in order to allow the point to be settled leave was given to appeal to the King in Council. The appeal was heard ex parte. At the appeal it became clear that there was in no sense an antecedent debt. The incumbrance itself was the debt, the money being advanced as the incumbrance was granted. In the course of the judgment, however, Lord Hobhouse's opinion in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun Mohun (2) was cited, and commenting on this it was said :—

"In their Lordships' opinion these expressions, which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate."

The learned Judges interpreted that to mean that a mortgage per se could not be an antecedent debt, for a mortgage is obviously a security which is not apart from the security of the estate over which it is constituted. If, therefore, it could not be shown that an anterior mortgage had been incurred in respect of an antecedent debt unconnected with the estate, then the anterior mortgage could not be held to be debt antecedent to the subsequent mortgage, and that subsequent mortgage could not stand though its proceeds were entirely used to pay off the prior mortgage.

Before the present case came up to their Lordships, the expression used in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra (1) had come before the consideration of the High Court in Madras in the cases of Vinjamampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (3) and again in Armugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (4), where the question was referred to a Full Bench. In the latter case the pleader had gone the whole length of saying that no mortgage could ever be an antecedent debt the payment of which was capable to support a new mortgage. In both cases the Madras Court came to the conclusion that the judgment of the Board in Sahu Ram's case (1) ought not to be so interpreted.

Upon this appeal when their Lordships were satisfied that there was this discrepancy of opinion between the judgments of the High Court of Allahabad in this case and that of Madras in the others, they thought it advisable to have the question argued before a Full Board, which has been done. Their Lordships have had the advantage of a very full and able argument in which many authorities have been quoted. It is to be regretted that this case also is ex parte, but their Lordships are satisfied that the whole of the authorities bearing on the question have been fairly brought to their notice.

It cannot be denied that the law on the subject of what binds an estate when the manager of the joint family estate is the father, and the other members are the sons, is in a state which is somewhat illogical and in the absence of binding authority could not be accepted. On the one hand it is settled law that the manager as such cannot bind the estate at his own free will and without any compelling cause so as to bind the reversionaries. He can bind it for necessity, the necessity being the necessity of the family, and so far there is no difficulty in principle, though the question of whether in any particular instance there was a necessity, may, like other questions of fact liable to be involved in a decree, be difficult to decide. But then there comes in the further doctrine that debt has been contracted by the father, and the pious obligation incumbent on the son to see his father's debts paid prevents him from asserting that the family estate, so far as his interest is concerned, is not liable to purge that debt. It may become liable by being taken in execution on the back of a decree obtained against the father, or it might become liable by being mortgaged by the father to pay the debt for which otherwise decree might be taken and execution be sought. It is more than apparent how in practice these two principles may clash, nor is this in any sense a new discovery. Nothing clearer could be said than what was said by Lord Hobhouse delivering the judgment of the Board in Nanomi's case (2) already quoted:—

"Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent co-parcenary rights in the sons, the decisions have for some time established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditors' remedies for their debts, if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate, their Lordships think that there is now no conflict of authority."

It is probably bootless to speculate as to how these seemingly conflicting principles were allowed to develop. On the one hand there is the general rule of the Mitakshara law that the manager cannot burden the estate for his own purposes. This is set forth at some length in the judgment in Sahu Ram's case (1). On the other hand there is the obligation of the son to discharge his father's debts, based on the doctrine of pious duty, but perhaps reflecting a remanet, as suggested by Sadasiva Ayyar, J., in the case reported in 42 Madras at page 730, from the older laws of Manu under which the son had no interest during the father's lifetime. It is enough to say that both principles are firmly established by long trains of decision, and it certainly occurs to the view that the term "antecedent" debt represents a more or less desperate attempt to reconcile the conflicting principles. For after all, if looked at straight in the face, what position could be more anomalous than this. A father, who is manager, borrows a like sum from A and B. To A he gives a mortgage on the family estate containing a personal covenant. To B he gives a simple acknowledgment of loan. B sues and gets a decree; on this decree execution can follow and the estate can be taken. A, suing upon his mortgage, cannot recover. It seems to have been felt that if the debt for which a mortgage was given was in any proper sense antecedent, then it, so to speak, escaped the direct infringement of the principle that the father manager could not burden the estate except for necessity.

In such a matter as the present it is above all things necessary, stare decisis, not to unsettle what has been settled by a long course of decisions. Their Lordships entirely agree with the views of the learned Chief Justice in the Full Bench Madras case. They think that the case of Sahu Ram (1) must not be taken to decide more than what was necessary for the judgment, namely, that the incurring of the debt was there the creation of the mortgage itself and that there was there no antecedency either in time or in fact. Moreover, if proper attention is paid to the word "incurred," they think that it will be seen to be a proper interpretation of the sentence which has caused the doubts.

There are, however, some observations in Sahu Ram's case (1) which are not necessary for the judgment but which their Lordships are bound to say that they do not think can be supported. Founding upon them the learned Counsel in this case argued in the Court below that no liability of the sons, based on the pious obligation to pay a father's debt, could be made available to the creditor while the father was still alive. Here again, if the point was open, there would be much to be said in favour of a position which seems consonant with common sense. But their Lordships are satisfied that a long train of authorities have settled the question. Instances of sale being permitted when the father for whose debt the sale was made was still alive may be found in the cases reported as follows:—

Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (5), Deendyal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (6), Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun

It is true that the point was not actually taken so far as appears in any of these cases, but when a long series of cases extending over a long period of time where the parties were represented by eminent Counsel is decided in a way in which if a plea that was evident had been taken and upheld the decision would have been the other way, there arises an irresistible conclusion that the plea was not taken because it was felt to be bad. The plea, however, was actually taken in Badri Prasad v. Madan Lal (11) and was rejected by a Full Bench. In Govind Krishna Gujar v. Sakharam Narayan (12), Chandavarkar, J., says :—

"The law is now well established that under the Hindu law the pious obligation of a son to pay his father's debts exists whether the father is alive or dead."

The point was again taken and negatived in Ramasami Nadan v. Ulaganatha Goundan (13).

Their Lordships may sum up the propositions which they would wish to lay down as the result of these authorities as follows :—

(1) The managing member of a joint undivided estate cannot alienate or burden the estate qua manager except for purposes of necessity.

(2) If he is the father and the other members are the sons he may, by incurring debt, so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt.

(3) If he purports to burden the estate by mortgage, then unless that mortgage is to discharge an antecedent debt, it would not bind more than his own interest.

(4) Antecedent debt means antecedent in fact as well as in time, that is to say, that the debt must be truly independent and not part of the transaction impeached.

(5) There is no rule that this result is affected by the question whether the father, who contracted the debt or burdens the estate, is alive or dead.

Applying these propositions to the present case, their Lordships consider that the present mortgage was raised in order to pay an antecedent debt, namely, the two older mortgages and consequently binds the estate.

The result will be that the appeal will be allowed and the decrees of the Courts below set aside with costs and a declaration made that the mortgage of the 4th March 1908 affects the estate which may be brought to sale.

Their Lordships will advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Respondents will pay the costs of the appeal.

SUIT NO. 3042 OF 1921.

BUCKLAND, J. 1923, 19, November. | CHANDMUL MULCHAND v. S. & C. NORDLINGER.

Award—Reasons given by arbitrators in the award, erroneous on a point of law, if an error of law apparent on the face of the award—Arbitration clause, stipulation for survey of goods before award is made—Award, if valid when made before such survey—Seller's duty to prove that goods are of contract quality.

In a contract for the sale and purchase of goods, it was agreed that "in the event of any dispute arising as to inferiority of quality, defects or differences in the goods, the same shall be referred . . . to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce." A dispute having arisen as regards the quality of the goods, the parties referred the same to arbitration. The award was in these terms: "We have considered the paper and as buyers . . . . are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of the contract." The buyers brought this suit to set aside the award.

Held therefore—That there being an error of law on the face of the award, the award was bad and should be set aside.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

BUCKLAND, J.—This is a suit for a declaration that an award dated the 3rd September 1921 made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce is invalid and inoperative.

On the 2nd January 1918 the parties to this suit entered into an agreement containing terms under which they would conduct business with each other, and amongst other terms the second provides that "in the event of any dispute arising as to inferiority of quality, defects or differences in the goods, the same shall be referred within 90 days of the arrival of the goods in Calcutta to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce unless a special agreement exists on the subject between the said parties, and no claim will be entertained if made after 90 days from date of arrival of goods." The latter part of the same clause provides that "the Chamber shall arrange for survey in accordance with its rules, that surveys shall be held on the actual goods and not on shipment samples, and that all survey reports, accompanied by samples, signed and sealed by the surveyors, showing the basis on which their award has been made must be forwarded to the sellers whenever the award has been given against them." On the 7th December 1920 the parties entered into a contract whereby the Plaintiffs agreed to buy from the Defendants 60 bales finished Dhootis of rangin descriptions at prices stated in para. 1 of the plaint. The goods in due course arrived and disputes arose with reference to the number of counts and lengths of the Dhootis. The parties accordingly went to arbitration and on the 1st March 1921 there was submitted to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Tribunal an application signed by the Plaintiffs applying for the "appointment of two arbitrators and the issue of an award for cancellation of the contract or allowance or such other relief as the arbitrators may think fit to award upon the under-mentioned complaint and upon investigation of all facts arising out of the contract." On the same form against the printed title "Buyer's Complaints" are the words "see letter dated the 1st March," and against the printed title "Seller's Remarks" some five lines of typed matter are succeeded by a copy of a letter dated the 15th November 1920 from the Defendants to the Plaintiffs. This is succeeded further type-written matter which is signed by the Defendants. At the conclusion appear the words: "The survey should be held on the goods and not on the shipment samples." For some reason or other which is not clear, a further document had to be, or, at all events, was filed before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. It purports to be a brief memorandum of agreement made on the 5th April between the parties and recites that disputes have arisen between the parties per Buyer's Statement of 1st March 1921 submitted with Application Form No. 1 and as per Seller's Statement of 1st March 1921 submitted with Application Form No. 1, and then proceeds to say: "The matters in dispute are referred to the Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce to be determined in accordance with the rules for the time being of the said Tribunal as far as such rules be applicable to the submission." This document which bears an eight annas stamp is signed by the parties. In due course the arbitration was held and on the 3rd September 1921 the award was communicated to the parties over the signature of the Registrar of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Tribunal of Arbitration and is in the following terms:—

"We have considered the papers and as buyers Messrs. Chandmul Mulchand are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of the contract.

Buyers to pay cost of this reference, amounting to Rs. 101."

It is now contended that the award should be set aside, firstly, for an error of law apparent on the face of it and secondly on account of the arbitrators having exceeded their jurisdiction in that they made an award without first having held a survey of the goods in question.

The first point, therefore, which I have to consider is whether or not there was an error of law apparent on the face of the award.

The most recent decision on this subject is that of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Champsey Bhara & Co. v. Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co., Ld. (1). There, in approval of the statement of the law of Mr. Justice Williams in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2), which is quoted in the judgment of the Board, "an error in law on the face of the award is taken to mean that you can find in the award or a document actually incorporated thereto, as for instance, a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment, some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which you can then say is erroneous." The passage quoted from the judgment in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2) also shows how very narrow is the compass which, in fact, is limited to the award itself or matter incorporated in it, within which the error upon which the award may be impeached is to be found.

(1) [1923] A. C. 480; I. L. R. 47 Bom 578

In this case there is no note appended by the arbitrator and I have to look at the award itself alone. It is contended that the words "as the buyers Messrs. Chandmul Mulchand are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld" state reasons for the award which are erroneous in law.

With reference to consideration of the reasons stated by arbitrators in an award as grounds for impeaching it, the passage from the judgment of the Judicial Committee itself indicates that reasons stated by an arbitrator for his award are matters to be considered and in this connection learned Counsel has also drawn my attention to Landauer v. Asser (3). In that case the umpire in his award said: "I decide that as the parties to the contract, dated 3rd November 1903, were by the terms thereof principals thereto, their interest and liability in insurance is defined to be the value of the invoices plus 5 per cent. etc." This led to the award being set aside, and the concluding passage from the judgment of Mr. Justice Kennedy indicates the ground, for he says: "My view is that as the award wrongly decides that in point of law under the contract Messrs. Asser have a title in the sum in dispute, it is bad on point of law and must be set aside."

I may therefore consider whether or not in this case the arbitrators' reasons for the award are sufficient or good in law. In my judgment they are not. The Plaintiffs were the buyers: the Defendants were the sellers. The contract related to 60 bales. There was a dispute as to quality. The mere fact that the buyers were unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection is not by itself a sufficient reason for making an award against them. I do not desire to go further than I should having regard to the strict limitations laid down by the authorities as to what may be considered in a case such as this, but, ordinarily, where there is a dispute between a buyer and a seller with reference to quality, it could be the duty of the seller to prove that the goods were of the quality contracted for. No question such as this might have arisen and it might have been extremely difficult for the Plaintiffs to succeed had no reasons been stated for the award. But in view of the reasons stated for the award, in my opinion, the Plaintiffs are entitled to impeach it and I hold that the award is bad upon the face of it.

The other question that has been argued is as to the arbitrators' having exceeded their jurisdiction. This is based upon the contention that it was the duty of the arbitrators before making any award to survey the goods. This contention is met by learned Counsel for the Defendants by the submission that the original agreement of the 2nd January 1918 did not contain the submission under which the arbitration was held, for which the subsequent documents to which I have already referred must alone be looked at. Incidentally I may observe that notwithstanding the cross-examination of the record-keeper of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce I have no doubt that the copy of the agreement of the 2nd January 1918 which has been produced by the Defendants was before the arbitrators. Learned Counsel's cross-examination, in the course of which he put a number of questions suggesting fraud against some individual or individuals whom he did not name, was not pressed to the extent of making a definite charge though I pointed out to him that if he were going to argue anything of the sort it would be his duty to do so. Why a subsequent document in the form of a submission had to be signed or filed before the Chamber of Commerce has not been made clear. One may possibly conjecture that it was required, among other reasons, because the copy of the agreement which had been produced before them was not stamped, though the copy in the hands of the Defendants does bear a stamp. Be that as it may, it is clear that according to the original agreement the parties intended that there should be a survey of the goods and that any award made by the arbitrators should be upon the basis of such survey. The subsequent application was not signed by both parties, and I am relegated to the agreement of 5th April which incorporates the points in dispute by reference to the parties' statements of the 1st March 1921 submitted with the application form bearing that date. In the remarks offered by the Defendants it is stated that the survey shall be held on the goods shipped and not on the shipment samples. The language does not merely suggest that a survey is necessary but takes it as a matter of course that there will be such a survey, the gist of the observation relating to what should be surveyed. I do not think there can be any question but that there was a common agreement between the parties which was never rescinded or varied in that respect, that there should be a survey by the arbitrators of the goods out of which the disputes arose and that that must be taken to have been a term of the submission. That being so, unless the arbitrators held their survey they were not entitled to make an award and the award made by them must be deemed to have been made without jurisdiction.

In the result, the suit must succeed and I declare that the award, dated the 3rd September 1921, is invalid and inoperative. The Plaintiffs are entitled to the costs of the suit on Scale No. 2.

MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDI, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
KAULAT SHEIKH, Defendant, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 29 agreement to pay enhanced rent without consideration, whether enforceable—Compromise—Enhancement, if allowable when cost and labour of provement borne by tenant - Sec 52, scope and object of—Claim for additional rent for excess area, how far tenable when landlord fails to prove what the area was for which the rent was originally reserved and what were the original conditions of the tenancy—Entries of area and rate on back of dakhilas, if warrant inference of contract of assessment on basis of measurement—Onus.

In a suit for additional rent for excess

area, the landlord sought to prove the area for which rent had been previously paid by some entries on the back of some dakhilas showing areas and rates. The landlord also claimed enhancement of rent on the ground that the land had improved and that the tenant had agreed to his demand for enhancement:

Held—That apart from proof, with or without the aid of a custom, of a term in the original contract of tenancy that the tenant should hold at a rent varying from time to time according to the quality or user of the lands, this ground of claim for enhancement is untenable in the absence of proof of bonâ fide dispute and the compromise thereof as affording consideration for an agreement as to excess area or as justifying an enhancement of rent contrary to sec. 29.

It may not be laid down as an abstract and universal proposition applicable to all cases and all circumstances that it is inequitable to grant enhancement where all the cost and labour of improvement had been borne by the tenant, for the tenant may conceivably have been so overpaid for his labour by its results that part of the latter should be attributed after a certain time to the land whereon he laboured. But in the present case there was no evidence to deal with any sensible case made by the landlord to that effect.

That, the question of the original conditions of the tenancy arises also when the claim to alteration of rent for excess area is considered under sec. 52.

Entries of area and rate on the back of dakhilas cannot be treated as though they were the vital words in the operative part of a written instrument of tenancy.

The landlord has to prove that there is an excess in area and he does not prove this unless he proves what the area in fact was for which the rent was originally reserved. This involves proof of the terms of the original settlement and whether it was by any and if so by what process of measurement. The statement of area in a dakhila does not prove measurement or the area actually let out or whether the subject-matter of the contract was a definite or ascertainable tract of land. Besides, on the mere proof that a tenant's rent has been calculated at some date in the past upon the supposition that his holding is of a certain size, no contract can be inferred that he is liable at any time to re-assessment upon the actual area.

When a letting upon the basis of a measurement has been proved, the tenant has primâ facie to show that the rent was a consolidated rent for all the land within specific boundaries.

Per RANKIN, J.—Primâ facie sec. 52 would seem to be concerned with cases of alteration of area and not miscalculation of area: nor is it easy to suppose that it intended to provide an exceptional form of relief against mutual mistake.

MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDI v. KAULAT SHEIKH.

These were appeals preferred on the 7th of September 1920 against the decree of Babu Satish Chandra Basu, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Maldah in Rajshahi, dated the 12th of June 1920, affirming the decree of Babu Kiran Chandra Mitra, Munsif, 2nd Court at Maldah, dated the 15th of August 1919.

The facts briefly stated are as follows:—The Maharajah of Kasimbazar brought the present suits for additional rent for excess area and also enhancement of rent on the ground that the rate of rent hitherto paid was lower than the rates prevailing in the locality. The Plaintiff alleged in one of the suits that the land which had been formerly partly mulberry had now become wholly mulberry and in the other suit that the land which had been mulberry had now become wholly orchard and that in both the suits the areas stated in the dakhilas were less than their actual areas. The Plaintiff claimed rent for the years 1322 to 1324 in each case and the first ground of claim was that the tenants had agreed to his demand in or about 1321. The Munsif of Maldah disallowed both claims and appeals to the Additional Subordinate Judge of Rajshahi were dismissed. Hence the Plaintiff preferred the present second appeals to the High Court.

Babus Dwarkanath Chakrabortty, Hemendra Nath Sen, Ram Charan Mitra, Ram Chandra Majumdar and Sarat Kumar Mitra for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

RANKIN, J.—These two second appeals (Nos. 2325 and 2420 of 1920) arise out of two suits for increased rent (Nos. 1484 and 1495 of 1918) brought by the Maharaja of Kasimbazar against Kaulat Sheikh and Lagnu Mandal respectively. The Plaintiff claimed additional rent for excess area and also enhancement of rent on the ground that the rate of rent hitherto paid was lower than the rates prevailing in the locality. The Munsif of Malda disallowed both claims and appeals to the Additional Subordinate Judge of Rajshahi have been dismissed by him with costs.

In Kaulat's case the tenancy has hitherto stood as comprising an area of 1 bigha 8 cottahs 8 chattaks bearing a jama of 14 annas 9 pies. The Plaintiff claimed that this should be found to be a tenancy of 2 bighas 1 cottah bearing a jama of Rs. 2-12-7½.

In Lagnu's case the tenancy has hitherto stood as of 10 bighas 15 cottahs bearing a jama of Rs. 15-6-0. The Plaintiff claimed that this should be 13 bighas 15 cottahs 1 chattack at a jama of Rs. 26-12-9.

The Plaintiff's case is that the whole of Kaulat's land is now mulberry land and the whole of Lagnu's land is now orchard. That the land originally settled with Kaulat was partly mulberry land but chiefly paddy land and that of Lagnu was mulberry land. The plaint sets forth the "prevailing rates" per bigha as these:

Paddy 14 annas.
Mulberry Rs. 1-5-9.
Orchard ,, 1-15-2.

The Plaintiff's claim is for the years 1322-1324 in each case. The first ground of claim was that the tenants had agreed to his demand in or about 1321. Apart from proof, with or without the aid of a custom, of a term in the original contract of tenancy that the tenant should hold at a rent varying from time to time according to the quality or user of the lands, this ground of claim is in the present case quite untenable and the findings of the Courts below are in no way incorrect. I see no proof of bonâ fide dispute and the compromise thereof as affording consideration for an agreement as to excess area or as justifying an enhancement of rent contrary to sec. 29. The landlord claims by agreement to have got all he can possibly claim.

The question of the original conditions of the tenancy arises also when the Plaintiff's claim to alteration of rent for excess area is considered under sec. 52. The difficulty here is the plentiful lack of evidence. Save that the holdings were not in existence in 1266 the only evidence which is of use to the Plaintiff is the mention of the areas in the karchas on the back of the dakhilas. In Kaulat's case there seem to be eight of such indorsements, the earliest being 1311. In Lagnu's case there seem to be three only, the earliest being 1320. The details are as follows :—

Kaulat's case :—

Mulberry land : 7½ cottahs—Rate per bigha Rs. 1-5-9.—Total Re. 0-8-3.

Crop bearing land : 1 bigha 1 cottah.—Rate per bigha Re. 0-6-0.—Total rent Re. 0 6-6.—Total rent—Rs. 0-14-9.

Lagnu's case :—

Mulberry land :—10 bighas 15 cottahs—Rate per bigha Rs. 1-4-7.—Total rent Rs. 15-6-0.

These are short particulars written on the back of rent receipts : nothing more. The question is how much can be distilled from them and in answering that question they cannot be treated as though they were the vital words in the operative part of a written instrument of tenancy.

There is no evidence that the lands were originally settled, or at any time re-settled, after any measurement. There is no evidence that the tenants have overstepped any previous boundaries. There is no evidence that any waste lands lay adjacent to these lands. There is no written instrument creating or re-affirming either tenancy; no mention anywhere of boundaries or that the land was within certain boundaries.

The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the Plaintiff's claim by reason of the insufficiency of his own evidence. He has not dealt with or relied upon any evidence for the defence as to this matter. The question therefore is whether on the face of the dakhilas he was bound to infer such conditions of tenancy as would entitle the Plaintiff to succeed; and if not, whether he has properly applied the law in considering the problem.

The Respondents, who seem to be small cultivators, have not appeared to contest these appeals but we have had the great advantage of an argument by Babu Dwarkanath Chakrabortty on behalf of the Appellant.

The Courts below have been led to their conclusions by a consideration of the case of Gouri Pattra v. Reily (1). This case has often been followed and so far as I know has never been dissented from in this Court. The facts as they appeared to Prinsep and Beverley, JJ., were these. Areas were specified in rent receipts and zemindari papers. There was no proof that the lands had ever been measured until recent proceedings under Chap. X had resulted in a measurement. The holdings were very old holdings. There was no trace of any sort of description by boundaries. There was a custom under which remissions of rent had been granted for fallow land. I cannot find from the report that the rent receipts showed the total rent as worked out by applying a certain rate to the area given : otherwise Gouri Pattra's case (1) and the cases now under consideration appear to me to be alike in all material respects. The decision was that the landlord has to prove that there is an excess; that he does not prove this unless he proves what area of land was originally let. This involves proof of the terms of the original settlement and whether it was by any and if so by what process of measurement. The statement of area in a dakhila does not prove measurement: it does not prove that the land originally let was in fact so many bighas: it does not prove or disprove that the subject-matter of the contract was a definite or ascertainable tract of land.

Surja Kanta v. Baneswar (2) repeats that the landlord must prove "for what quantity of land the Defendant is paying rent." Rajendra Lal v. Chunder Bhusan (3) is a decision addressed to the question of the terminus a quo: it holds that the landlord must prove the area of the tenure at its inception—not the area of the land at some intermediate stage after fluvial action may have lessened it but the area with reference to which the rent had been assessed or adjusted.

Leaving aside the case of Ratan Lal Biswas v. Jadu Halsana (4), where there was a finding that the tenant was holding the same lands without any variation in the boundaries, the case of Rajkumar v. Ram Lal (5) re-affirmed the principle that even if it is proved that the original rent was settled with reference to a quantity of land let out—as distinct from the case of a consolidated rent for land within specified boundaries—even then, the landlord must first prove what the original area was and with reference to what standard that area was determined. For this purpose a statement of areas in zemindari papers and rent receipts was held insufficient. In Lakhhi Narain v. Sriram Chandra (6), we come across a case where the landlord was able to prove measurement at the inception of the tenancy according to a known standard and that the rent was assessed thereon. The kabuliyats mentioned the area as well as the rent. I do not gather that they mentioned any boundaries. In these circumstances (I understand the decision to lay down) the onus was on the tenant to show that the rent was a consolidated rent for an area within specified boundaries: otherwise excess area was completely proved. This case does not affirm that there is a presumption against the rent being a consolidated rent apart from the circumstances proved in that case. Indeed the two cases previously cited [Ratan Lal v. Jadu (4) and Rajkumar v. Ram Lal (5)] seem to show that there is no initial presumption either way.

In Akbar Ali v. Hira Bibi (7), it was proved that in 1301 the lands had been measured and that the rents had then been adjusted at the old rates according to that measurement. Some years later upon a re-measurement it was found that the measurement of 1301 had been very badly done and had much understated the areas. It was held in second appeal that the finding that in 1301 the rents had been adjusted according to that measurement excluded the theory that the parties intended to settle such and such a piece of land, be the area what it may. The case was therefore held to be such that "the area for which rent has been previously paid" was less than the area actually occupied at the time of the claim, though the area actually occupied was the same throughout.

This decision was not apparently intended as narrowing the rule in Gouri Pattra's case (1). Nevertheless it marks a certain change in the current of authority. In Akbar Ali's case (7) the tenants were clearly intended to go on occupying their holdings as they stood in 1301. For these holdings the rent was miscalculated because the area was under-measured. The phrase of Banerjee, J., in Rajendra v. Chunder (3) by which he paraphrases the words of sec. 52 is cited but apparently without reference to its real intention. "The area with reference to which the rent previously paid had been assessed or adjusted" meant the area of the tenure as originally created as distinct from the area of any intermediate year in which the size of the holding may have been lessened by fluvial action. The whole point of Gouri Pattra's case (1) was that a rent receipt might very well show that, upon a rough estimate that the land was of such and such size, a rent of so much may have been imposed and accepted; but unless there was a measurement and an assessment on the basis of measurement there was no presumption that the land was not an ascertained tract of a size differing from the area stated. The statute says "the area for which rent has been previously paid." I think it quite possible that it means that. Primâ facie sec. 52 would seem to be concerned with cases of alteration of area not miscalculation of area: nor is it easy to suppose that it intended to provide an exceptional form of relief against mutual mistake. I find it difficult to think of the tenant in Akbar Ali's case (7) saying or meaning, "I will take so many bighas, be the actual piece of land what it may," though there is no difficulty in seeing that the rents were re-adjusted according to the measurement. What the bargain was is this:—"Now at last we both know what the extent of my land is: we agree to it and we agree that for it I shall pay you so much per bigha being 10 rupees." Still there was a measurement and an intention to pay according to actual area.

Now Akbar Ali's case (7) was followed by Dhrupad Chandra v. Hari Nath (8). The facts were in dispute but as found they were these. There had been a measurement to which the tenants were parties in 1227 and a chitta of that year recorded them. It was invariably consulted whenever a transfer took place. A rent roll was prepared from it in 1305 giving the area and annual rent. The area as there recorded gave exact and minute quantities running to karas and krantis. The area at the time of suit was in excess. There was thus proof of actual measurement and of assessment of rent upon the measurement and it was held that the burden lay upon the tenant to prove that the rent was a consolidated one for an area within specified boundaries. In saying quite correctly that it was not for the landlord to prove how the excess area came to be held, the Subordinate Judge made a remark that it must be due either to encroachment or to erroneous or fraudulent measurement on the previous occasion. The case seems to have raised no new question of law and no question whatever as to the correct presumption in the absence of any proof of measurement. But Richardson, J., states two ways as open to a landlord, generally speaking, to prove an increase in "the area for which rent has been previously paid." The first is the simple case where he proves that the tenant has overstepped original boundaries. The second is by proving that the rent was fixed at a rate per unit of area and that "in fact and substance the agreement was that the tenant should pay at that rate for all the land of which he was put in possession according to its true area" and by further proving that the existing rent is less than the rent payable under such agreement. This is the reasoning upon which the learned Vakil for the Appellant chiefly insists in the present cases. Now a landlord who can prove such a contract is entitled to additional rent by virtue of his contract and without the aid of any statutory provision. No doubt a landlord anxious to bring jungle and waste lands into cultivation may well make such a contract. It accords well with primitive notions of rent as a share of the produce. There have been times when cultivating tenants were hard to get. Moreover I do not doubt that many holdings now hemmed in by land grabbing neighbours were originally taken on some such terms. Still there are the very conditions with reference to which the very old holdings in Gouri Pattra's case (1) were considered. When all is said, it can hardly be true throughout Bengal to-day that on the mere proof that a tenant's rent has been calculated at some date in the past upon the supposition that his holding is of a certain size a contract can be inferred that he is liable at any time to re-assessment upon the actual area. This is to read the Act into the contract, not to apply the Act to the contract. How far such a view may take us is I think well illustrated by the Patna case, Kesho Prasad Singh v. Tribhuan (9). "The jamabandi of 1272, if it recites a certain rent for a certain area at a certain rate per bigha, is evidence of a contract and the learned Judge must take that evidence into consideration with the other evidence in the case and determine whether the tenancy was created on a consolidated rental. The landlord may ask the Judge to find on the strength of the jamabandi that the original contract was that the rent would vary with the area. If upon a consideration of the evidence adduced by the landlord the Judge declines to believe this and he finds that notwithstanding the jamabandi and the rent receipts the tenant has succeeded in showing that the original jama was a consolidated one, then the landlord cannot succeed. And again in my opinion it is not incumbent upon the landlord to prove that there was an actual measurement or there has been a practice of measurement." Now whatever may be thought of the decision in Akbar Ali's case (7), it is clear that nothing was then inferred in the absence of proof of measurement. Measurement was proved in the cases of Lakhhi Narain v. Sriram Chandra (6) and Dhrupad Chandra v. Hari Nath (8). Chatterjea, J., in the Full Bench case of Nilmani Kar v. Sati Prosad Garga (10) both at the beginning and the end of his judgment seems to me to re-affirm the law of Gouri Pattra's case (1). I take it to be the settled rule of this Court that when a letting upon the basis of a measurement is proved the tenant has primâ facie to show that the rent was a consolidated rent for all the land within specific boundaries, but that in the absence of such proof the mere production of such dakhilas as those now in evidence does not suffice to throw any onus on the tenant. The position then is simply that the landlord has failed to establish the fact of excess area because he has failed to show with sufficient certainty what the area in fact was for which the rent was originally reserved. There is no reason whatever forbidding a landlord from proving, if he can, a contract of the nature indicated in Dhrupad Chandra's case (8) but entries of area and rate in dakhilas or jamabandis do not suffice to prove this by themselves in the absence of further material throwing light upon the original conditions of a holding whose origin is beyond the reach of direct evidence.

The remaining question is as to whether the Plaintiff is entitled to enhancement of rent. The only case made as to this rests upon the allegations that the tenant Kaulat has converted or improved paddy land into mulberry land and that Lagnu's mulberry land has been made orchard. The Plaintiff appears to have claimed for the higher class of land at the prevailing rate therefor in each case. The learned Subordinate Judge has held it to be inequitable to grant enhancement as all the costs and labour of the improvements had been borne by the tenants. No doubt as an abstract and universal proposition applicable to all cases and in all circumstances there is room here for qualification or for criticism. A tenant may conceivably have been so over-paid for his labour by its results that part of the latter should be attributed after a certain time to the land whereon he laboured. I see no ground for thinking that in these cases the learned Judge was called upon by the evidence before him to deal with any sensible case made by the landlord to that effect. For all that appears, the suggestion of such a theory now is quite in nubibus. It is to be presumed that the Courts below are well aware that enhancement of rent is equitable or inequitable in all the circumstances of each case and the fact that as in duty bound they indicate the general considerations that weigh with them, in no way warrants the conclusion that their discretion was not properly exercised upon the facts before them.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 375 OF 1921.

RANKIN, J.
B. B. GHOSE, J
1923,
5, July.

MOHINI MOHAN ROY, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
RAMDAS PARAMHANSA, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Covenant to pay an annual sum by vendee to vendor, so long as vendee and his family retained the land, if enforceable against purchaser from vendee—Covenant, if runs with the land—Suit, of a Small Cause Court nature, brought in Munsif's ordinary jurisdiction and dismissed by him—Appeal, if lies—Decree on appeal without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside in revision—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 115—High Court, if may treat memorandum of appeal as application for revision—Previous decrees of Small Cause Court and Civil Court, if res judicata.

The Plaintiff's predecessor-in-title executed a conveyance of his putni and jamai right in a certain mouza in favour of the Defendant's predecessor-in-title and contemporaneously with it the latter executed an ekrarnama in favour of the former covenanting on behalf of himself and his heirs and legal representatives so long as he or they should hold the land to pay to the Plaintiff and his legal representatives the sum of Rs. 20 annually for the sheba of Jugal Kishore Thakur. The Defendant purchased the land conveyed to the vendee from a purchaser from the latter:

MOHINI MOHAN ROY v. RAMDAS PARAMHANSA.

Held—That the covenant did not run with the land and bind the Defendant.

There is no such thing as between a vendor and a purchaser as a covenant to pay money running with the land.

That the Plaintiff's suit to recover upon the covenant was of a nature cognisable by the Small Cause Court, and no appeal lay from the Munsif's dismissal of the suit, though it was tried by him in his ordinary jurisdiction; and although a second appeal against a decree of the District Judge passed on appeal from the decision of the Munsif was barred by sec. 102 of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Court could treat the memorandum of appeal as an application for revision and set aside the decree of the District Judge which was passed without jurisdiction

SHANKARBHAI v. SOMABHAI (2), INDRA CHANDRA MUKHERJEE v. SRISH CHUNDER BANERJEE (3), GANGADHAR v. SEKHARBASHINI (4), ADURAM HALDAR v. NAKULESWAR ROY (5) and BAIKUNTA NATH GOSWAMI v. SITA NATH GOSWAMI (6) referred to.

That assuming that the suit was not of a Small Cause Court nature, a decree for money upon the covenant made in a previous suit instituted in the Small Cause Court did not operate as res judicata, nor did the decision of the High Court refusing to interfere with that decree in revision.

A subsequent decree in a suit instituted in the ordinary Civil Court as for rent also did not operate as res judicata.

This was an appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Nadia, dated the 4th January 1921, reversing that of the Munsif of Ranaghat, dated the 12th April 1920.

The facts as well as the findings material to this report will appear from the following portions of the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court :—

"This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 60 at Rs. 20 per annum from 1323 to 1325 B. S. with interest of Rs. 14 at 12½ per cent. per annum on the basis of an ekrarnama, dated 5th Chaitra 1297 B. S.

The Plaintiff's case was that he as a shebait of idol Jugal Kishore Thakur sold one anna 13 gandas share of a putni and certain other jamai lands to one Prasanna Kumar Ghose by a kobala, dated 5th Chaitra 1297 B. S. and Prasanna Kumar executed an ekrarnama on the same date in his favour agreeing to pay Rs. 20 per annum for the sheba of the said idol.

The executors to the estate of Prasanna Kumar subsequently sold the 16 annas properties including the said purchased shares to the Defendant by a kobala, dated 27th Magh 1306 B. S. The amount due to the idol from 1323 to 1325 not having been paid by Defendant, the Plaintiff brought this suit.

The Defendant's main contention was that the covenant in the ekrarnama was a personal one and he was not liable to pay the amounts stipulated therein as he had no notice of the said agreement.

The learned Munsif has dismissed the suit. The only point for decision is whether the Plaintiff can recover the amount claimed from the Defendant on the basis of his alleged ekrarnama executed by Prasanna Kumar, and predecessor-in-interest of the Defendant.

Plaintiff previously brought two suits for similar reliefs against heirs and representatives of Prasanna Kumar and also against this Defendant in Small Cause

Court and obtained decrees against them. The Defendant moved High Court over the grounds similar to those taken in this case for setting aside the decree, but he was unsuccessful. Ex. 6 will show that the Plaintiff got a decree against this present Defendant for the amounts due from 1315 to 1317 but that suit was brought as a rent suit. Plaintiff again sued this Defendant for the amount due for 4 years from 1319 to 1322 in Small Cause Court and obtained a decree.

The learned Munsif found that as the Plaintiff's claim is for an amount which is an interest in the landed properties, the suit cannot be tried in Small Cause Court and as such the Small Cause Court decrees are of no use to the Plaintiff as they were passed by Courts having no jurisdiction to try the same . . . . The learned Munsif has held that it is merely a money suit and upon construction of the ekrarnama he has found that the covenant in the ekrar was a personal one with Prasanna Kumar and Defendant is not bound by that . . . The ekrarnama clearly shows that the amount of Rs. 20 per annum is not a right to or interest in the immoveable property as contemplated by Exception No. 11 of Sch. 2 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act IX of 1887. It is only an amount due to the Plaintiff by virtue of a covenant running with the land sold by Ex. A kobala which was a part of the same transaction, viz., the ekrarnama. The consideration of Ex. A kobala was only Rs. 204. It may be that in consideration of the payment of this sum of Rs. 20 per annum for the sheba of the idol, the consideration for the kobala was a small one and the vendee of the Plaintiff undertook to pay this amount annually to make amends for the small amount of consideration. So the covenant in Ex. A to pay Rs. 20 per annum to the Plaintiff was neither an interest in the land nor a rent but some compensation to be paid by the holder of the land. In this view of the case I think that the amount agreed to be paid is really realisable as compensation by a suit in Small Cause Court from any person who will hold the land. The Defendant having purchased the land from the executors to the estate of Prasanna Kumar is, therefore, bound to pay the said amount. In my opinion Small Cause Court decrees and High Court judgment operate as res judicata.

Even if judgment of High Court does not operate as res judicata and even if it be conceded for the sake of argument that the suit is not triable by Small Cause Court, still the said judgment of High Court may be acted upon as an authority for holding that the Defendant has got constructive notice of the covenant in Ex. A and he is bound by it. . . . . . . The High Court having considered all the facts and circumstances of the case held in Ex. 4 judgment that the Defendant had constructive notice of the terms of the ekrarnama as it and the kobala were one and the same transaction. Then again the ekrarnama very distinctly shows that the executant Prasanna Kumar not only bound himself and his family but also the future holders of his zemindary by private transfer responsible for the amount stipulated therein. I therefore hold that either on the basis of the High Court judgment or independently of that on the basis of Ex. 1 ekrarnama the Defendant is liable to pay the amounts claimed by the Plaintiff."

MOHINI MOHAN ROY v. RAMDAS PARAMHANSA.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RANKIN, J.—In this case, the Defendant appeals from a decision of the District Judge of Nadia reversing a decision of the Munsif of Ranaghat. The Plaintiff brought the suit for a sum of money as due to him by the terms of a document called ekrarnama. That document is dated the 28th March 1891 and contemporaneously with it on the same day there was a conveyance of certain land by the predecessor-in-title of the Plaintiff to the predecessor of the Defendant. The terms of the ekrarnama have been discussed in the judgments of the Courts below and the first question is the question of construction. It is to be observed that the conveyance contains no reference whatever to any such covenant as I am now about to read from the ekrarnama. The ekrarnama which was executed by the Defendant's predecessor-in-title was as follows :—"When you expressed your desire to sell your share of the putni and jamai right in mouza Goid, village Salua Parga Ukhara, I had promised before you that, if the above share was sold to me by you, I and my heirs and legal representatives shall pay you and your legal representatives for the sheba of the Jugal Kishore Thakur the sum of rupees twenty yearly, year after year." Later on, these words occur: "Therefore, I make this ekrar that, by the grace of Jugal Kishore Thakur as long as there shall be any member in my family and as long as I shall have zemindari right in the above mouza, I and my heirs and legal representatives shall pay you and your legal representatives for the sheba of the Thakur the sum of rupees twenty per year." The conveyance of the same date contains no covenant to an equivalent effect and there is no recital whatever in it of this ekrarnama. Now, what has happened is this :—The purchaser of the property who made the promise contained in the ekrarnama conveyed this land to the present Defendant. The present Defendant is a purchaser from him. The Plaintiff accordingly brought the suit against the Defendant and he brought it upon the ground that the present Defendant was bound by the promise of the man who had sold the land to him. The Plaintiff says that the promise of the predecessor-in-title of the Defendant was intended to bind everybody who would come to own that land and that the covenant runs with the land.

Now, in this case, it will be simplest to begin by stating the legal position of the parties. The position of the Defendant in the face of a claim of that sort is that he is a person who is sued upon a claim which is unfounded in law. There is no such thing as between a vendor and a purchaser as a covenant to pay money running with the land. In the case of assignment of lease as between any one who may become interested in the term and any one who becomes interested in the reversion it is possible to talk of a covenant running with the land. At common law no covenant ever ran with the reversion. By the statute law, some covenants may run with the term and some with the reversion and the nature of the covenants that can be said in loose language to run with the land has been described in the case-law and in the Conveyancing Acts and made more or less precise. The present covenant is not one which can run with the land as it is in no way a covenant to pay rent. There is no lessor or lessee, there is no term and there is no reversion. There is no charge on the land. The position of a purchaser of land whose predecessor became bound by a restrictive covenant is dealt with upon the principle of Tulk v. Moxhay (1). If there is a restrictive covenant and the purchaser takes with notice of it, then the person in whose favour the covenant is made can restrain the purchaser from acting contrary thereto. The present case is far removed from anything of that sort. When one looks at the terms of the ekrarnama, and at the way in which these two documents of the same date were kept separate, it is abundantly plain that the vendor had a mind to sell the land with a clean title and that, as a part of the consideration, he took a personal covenant from the purchaser which was intended to bind the latter and his family and them only so long as they held the land. There is, therefore, upon the merits, no substance in the case against the Defendant and there never was.

Now, the position in this case is only half dealt with when the merits are dealt with. It appears that, in the protracted series of suits—mostly but not all brought in the Small Cause Court, these parties have litigated upon this matter and the Defendant has had very poor success. The present appeal is complicated by the further consideration that this suit was not brought in the Small Cause Court.

An objection has been taken by the Plaintiff's pleader to the effect that, under sec. 102 of the Code, there is no second appeal because the suit was of a nature cognizable by the Small Cause Court. I propose to deal with the case on both assumptions; but my opinion is that the suit is simply a suit for a sum of money giving a bad reason why the Defendant is bound by the covenant. That being so, I see nothing in Art. 4 or Art. 11 of the second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to take away the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court.

If that be the true view, then the fact that the case was tried by the Munsif in his ordinary jurisdiction does not take away the prohibition of an appeal contained in the Small Cause Courts Act. Authority for that is cited to us from Shankarbhai v. Somabhai (2) which has been followed in this Court in the case of Indra Chandra Mukherjee v. Srish Chunder Banerjee (3). The result, therefore, on this view is that the first appeal was without jurisdiction. The second result but for sec. 102, C. P. C., would be that this appeal would lie to set aside the decree made without jurisdiction on the first appeal. That would be on the well-known doctrines that are laid down in such cases as Gangadhar v. Sekharbashini (4) and Aduram Haldar v. Nakuleswar Roy (5). But, in this case, there is a further complication that there is a special prohibition against a second appeal. In that view, an objection has been taken by the Plaintiff that this appeal is incompetent. In my opinion, on the assumption which I think to be right that the case is cognizable by the Small Cause Court, the present appeal is not competent, and is barred by sec. 102, C. P. C. But it is open to the Appellant to ask us to treat his memorandum of appeal as an application in revision and to set aside the order made without jurisdiction. This has been done before now. One instance my learned brother points out to me is the case of Baikunta Nath Goswami v. Sita Nath Goswami (6). The question is whether on this assumption we shall exercise our revisional power. Primâ facie when a Court is faced with a decree which is made without jurisdiction, it is a very strong thing not to interfere in revision, because otherwise all sorts of troubles may arise. The decree which is a nullity may be contested hereafter by a suit and that may give rise to infinite difficulties. We have, therefore, to see whether there is any valid reason why the decree under appeal should not be set aside. As to that the position is this :—If there was no appeal to the District Judge, the Plaintiff who was non-suited by the Munsif might have applied in revision under sec. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act to this High Court. Now it may be that if we had been of opinion that the Plaintiff's case was a very good one on merits we would not necessarily in the circumstances of this case have felt bound now to give leave to apply in revision to set aside the decree of the learned Judge of the Court below. That is the position on that hypothesis. We think that the decree of the Court of Appeal below is without jurisdiction. We are satisfied that it is wrong on the merits and we propose apart from any question of res judicata to interfere.

The other view may also be considered. It may be said that the case is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. In that event, what is the position? The position then is this : There is a second appeal and we are entitled to deal with the case upon the facts found. Now, the only case on that footing which the Plaintiff can make is the case of res judicata and, on the footing that the case is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court, what is the Plaintiff's case for res judicata? It appears that the first suit to which the present Defendant was a party, was a Small Cause Court Suit of 1901. Well, if the Small Cause Court was not competent to try this case, there is no res judicata. It so happened that in that first suit an application in revision came up to this High Court and two learned Judges for reasons which do not appeal to me refused to interfere with the decree of the Court below holding that the Defendant was liable. I am quite prepared to pay respect to that decision so far as it contains propositions not inconsistent with other decisions. But that judgment is in no way res judicata any more than the Small Cause Court Judge's judgment in connection with which it arose. The next suit was one of 1909 which was a suit in the ordinary Civil Court - a decree dated the 26th April 1901 being made for rent. I entirely demur to the proposition that this case can be governed by any result of a suit for rent. The next case was one of 1916 brought in the Small Cause Court and there it is perfectly true all points appear to have been canvassed. The Defendant was then held liable but on the assumption that the suit was not cognizable by the Small Cause Court, the Judge was not entitled to try the suit. So there is no res judicata. Whichever way, therefore, we look at this matter, inspite of the tangle arising from the procedure adopted in this case and from the procedure adopted in the previous litigation, we see our way to decide this case according to our opinion on the merits. We propose to do so treating the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court by the Defendant as an application in revision and set aside the decree of the learned District Judge with costs in that Court as having been made without jurisdiction. The Defendant is entitled to recover his costs in this Court from the Plaintiff. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or 41, r. 27 (b) and Or. 47, r. 1—Appeal—Gap in the evidence—Fresh evidence discovered pending appeal —Party, if may apply for its admission in appeal —Power of Appellate Court to admit fresh evidence suo motu and on the prayer of parties—Power of Judicial Committee to admit fresh evidence—Rules of procedure, proper function of.

Where fresh evidence to fill up a gap in the record is discovered pending appeal in circumstances which, if no appeal was pending, would have given the party a right to apply for review under Or. 47, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, the proper course for the party (a review being out of question) is to apply for the admission of additional evidence either under the general principles of law or under the specific provisions of Or. 41, r. 27, which lays down that the Appellate Court may for any other substantial cause (viz., other than those particularly specified) allow such evidence or documents to be produced or witnesses to be examined

Both in the cases of SREEMANSHUNDER DEY v. GOPAULCHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY (2) and KESSOWJI ISSUR v. THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY (1), the Judicial Committee were dealing with the power of the Appellate Court in India suo motu to require evidence to be produced for the purpose of enabling the Court to pronounce judgment. They did not refer to the right of one or other of the parties to produce evidence which he considered essential for the determination of the action.

There is no restriction on the powers of the Judicial Committee to admit such evidence for the non-production of which at the initial stage sufficient ground has been made out.

"Rules of procedure are not made for the purpose of hindering justice."

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 25th June 1919, of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 29th April 1916, of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gaya.

The main questions for determination on this appeal were—(1) whether the present suit was barred by limitation, and (2) whether on the proper construction of documents the estate mentioned in a mokarari pattah, dated the 30th May 1880, as Damodarpur Lakhawar, meant the said village alone or included within it its two dependencies, namely, Lakhawar Khas and Lakhawar Makhlut Faridpur (Malpur).

The lower Courts had decided both questions against the Appellant.

The facts which gave rise to the litigation may be shortly stated as follows:—The Appellant was the Raja of Tamkuhi, and the Defendant No. 2, Respondent, the Rani of Tikari. On the 5th April 1868, the Tikari Raj granted a Ticca (Ex. L) for a term of 15 years of 7½ annas out of the entire 16 annas of Mauza Damodarpur Lakhawar original with dependencies for an annual rental of Rs. 757 in cash and 15 maunds of rice. Subsequently on the 15th September 1875, the Tikari Raj granted a Ticca (Ex. G) for a term of 13 years of 8½ annas of the entire 16 annas of Mauza Damodarpur Lakhawar original with dependencies at an annual rental of Rs. 749-12-0 in c. s and 15 maunds of rice.

It was admitted by the parties that these two leases comprised Damodarpur Lakhawar and its two dependencies named above. The total of the annual rent in cash was Rs. 1,506-12-0.

On the 23rd January 1880, the Tikari Raj granted "a Ticca Settlement (Ex. 15) of the whole and entire 16 annas of Mauza Lakhawar Khas, Lakhawar Makhlut Damodarpur, Lakhawar Makhlut Faridpur, Mahal Supi, Pargana Okri, District Gaya, original with dependencies," at an annual rental of Rs. 1,507 in cash and 30 maunds of rice, in favour of Harihar Narain Singh.

In 1875, the Raja of Tamkuhi brought a suit (No. 181 of 1875) against the Rani of Tikari to recover possession of 16 annas of the villages and properties mentioned in the schedules attached to the plaint. The villages now in question, namely, Lakhawar Damodarpur, Lakhawar Khas and Lakhawar Makhlut Faridpur, were included in the claim. The suit was settled by a compromise, under which a mokarari pattah, dated the 30th May 1880, was executed by the Raja of Tikari in favour of the Raja of Tamkuhi. The portion of the pattah describing the property granted was in the following terms :—

"Therefore I have let out in perpetual mokarari . . . . the whole and entire 16 annas of each of Mauzas Mohamedpur and Mohamedpur Khurd and Nanakpur Belgari, Pargana Sanaut, Mahal Nemsar, Station Shibnagar. Lakhari Khurd Danabhiga, Mahal Sansa, Pargana Ikil, Hanswar, Pargana Maher, Damodarpur Lakhawar, Sitarampur. Betia, Pargana Bhelawar, Lat Nergawan and Narauh, Mahal Hatwa, Pargana Sanat appertaining to the said Lat Shibnagar and 7½ annas of exact of Mauzas Jarna, Pargana Mahar Lal Lado and Basantpur, Pargana Mahar Lal Lado, Mauza Ghatra, Pargana Pahra, appertaining to Lat Deokali, original with dependencies, the name of each Mauza with Tauzi number and Sudder Jama, Pargana, District, Sub-Division and Thana whereof are given at the foot hereof and at the foot of this document there is a schedule giving the names of these Mauzas."

The schedule attached to the said pattah of the 30th May 1880, specified that the grantor was in receipt of the annual rental of Rs. 1,506-12-0 in respect of "Damodarpur Lakhawar," and the grantee was put in possession of the mokarari villages in the following manner described in the deed :—

"I have put the said Raja Krishna Pertap Bahadur Shahi in possession of the said Mokarari villages, in the following manner that a Hukumnamah directing the Tikadars of those Mokarari Mauzas to pay Tika rent to the said Raja Krishna Pertap Bahadur Shahi has been written and made over to him and I have authorized the said Raja Saheb the Mokararidar to realize in full the Tika rent in my place from the Tikadars of the said Mauzas. After the expiry of the term of the Tika, he shall bring them into his Seer possession and shall enter upon possession thereof."

On the 29th April 1893, a suit (No. 170 of 1893) was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya by certain co-sharers of Mahal Lakhawar against the Raja of Tikari and the Raja of Tamkuhi and others. It was stated in the plaint that "Mauza Damodarpur Lakhawar, Lakhawar Khas and Lakhawar Makhlut Faridpur, formed the milkiat" of the Raja of Tamkuhi. The latter filed a written statement in which he stated that he was a mokараridar of Mauza Damodarpur Lakhawar, Lakhawar Khas and Lakhawar Faridpur, from the Raja of Tikari, and that he had been in possession thereof for a long time. These statements were not controverted in the written statement filed on behalf of the Raja of Tikari.

In 1914 the Settlement Officer made enquiries with the object of preparing the khewat or proprietary register, when the present Plaintiffs for the first time put forward the claim that they were the lessees of the two dependencies, namely, Lakhawar Khas and Lakhawar Makhlut Faridpur. After a prolonged investigation and examination of the evidence produced by the parties the Assistant Settlement Officer delivered judgment on the 16th April 1915, holding that the claim of the Plaintiffs was unfounded, and concluding it in terms following:—

"The village papers produced in support of the Jagir or Babu Janki Prasad are undoubtedly forged ones and no reliance can be placed upon these papers. It is also said that Tamkuhi Raj got Mokarari of only one village Damodarpur Lakhawar and in the Mokarari documents, dated 30th May 1880, copy of which has been produced before me on behalf of Sumer Singh and others, I find that only Damodarpur Lakhawar has been mentioned in the Mokarari deed. This Mokarari document was executed in favour of Raja Krishna Pertap Sahi Singh of Tamkuhi by Raja Ran Bahadur Singh. It is argued before me by Babu Dasrath Lal, pleader, on behalf of Tamkuhi Raj that Damodarpur Lakhawar is the Mashhoor Nam (Mashoor Nam) which comprises Lakhawar Khas and Malpur. This is also evidence from the deposition of Ramdhani Lal taken before the Munsif Court, Gaya, dated 17th June 1913. He says that Damodarpur is also called Sapurad and Malpur. The above three villages were given in Thica lease to Tanu Babu by Raja Krishna Pertap Sahi of Tamkuhi and in the Thica document the three villages are mentioned." . . . .

"Taking all the above facts into consideration I am of opinion that the Mokarari right granted to Amar Singh and others is undoubtedly a fraudulent transaction and that Janki Pershad Singh was never the Jagirdar in respect of the two Mauzas, namely, Lakhawar Khas and Malpur. The Tamkuhi Raj is in possession of the three villages and khewat of Mokarari (Part III) will be prepared in name of Raja Inderjit Pratap Sahi, under Tauzi No. 3898."

The Plaintiffs-Respondents filed the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya. In their plaint the Plaintiffs stated that by the pattah, dated the 30th May 1880, the Appellant had obtained the mokarari lease of one village only, that is, of Mauza Damodarpur Lakhawar. They further alleged that in 1888 the Raja of Tikari granted a Jagir to one Babu Janki Prasad Singh of the said two dependencies, Lakhawar Khas and Lakhawar Makhlut Faridpur, for the term of his life and that on the death of the said Jagirdar in July 1910, the said dependencies reverted to the Rani of Tikari, and that she had granted a mokarari pattah of the two dependencies to the Plaintiffs on the 24th January 1914.

The Plaintiffs therefore claimed the following reliefs:—

(1) That it might be declared that the Plaintiffs were the Mokararidars of the disputed Mauzas as specified below and that the Defendant No. 1 had no concern whatsoever, either in his capacity as Mokararidar or in any other capacity, with the Mauzas, the subject-matter of this suit.

(2) That on the adjudication of the above fact the Plaintiffs might be declared entitled to possession without any obstruction offered on behalf of the Defendant No. 1 and in case of necessity they might be put in possession.

(3) That mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit up till peaceful possession might be determined and awarded to the Plaintiffs as against the Defendant No. 1.

(4) Costs in Court with interest up till realization might be awarded as against the person and property of the Defendant No. 1.

The Appellant, who was Defendant No. 1, denied the claim of the Plaintiffs and filed a written statement. He pleaded, among other things, that he was the mokararidar of Damodarpur Lakhawar including the two dependencies which were claimed by the Plaintiffs. He also pleaded that he had been in adverse possession of the two villages in dispute for more than 12 years prior to the institution of the suit and that the Plaintiffs' claim was therefore barred by limitation.

The Rani of Tikari, who was Defendant No. 2, also filed a written statement in which she stated that she had put the Plaintiffs in possession of the villages in dispute as mokararidars, and that she had been unnecessarily joined as a Defendant in the suit.

The Additional Subordinate Judge of Gaya framed the following issues on the pleadings :—

1. Has this suit been under-valued? Is the court-fee paid sufficient?

2. Is the suit barred by limitation?

3. Are the Plaintiffs estopped from asserting their rights as mokararidars in respect of the villages in suit?

4. Were the villages in suit let out in mokarari to the ancestor of the Defendant No. 1?

5. Are the Plaintiffs entitled to get possession?

6. Are the Plaintiffs entitled to get mesne profits? If so, how much?

7. What reliefs, if any, are the Plaintiffs entitled to?

8. Whether the Plaintiffs are Furzidars of the persons named in para. 5 of the written statement of Defendant No. 1?

After examining the evidence the Additional Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 29th April 1916. He found all the issues in favour of the Plaintiffs, with the exception of the 1st and the 6th issues holding that the Plaintiffs were entitled to possession of the villages in suit, but without any mesne profits.

As already stated the case of the Plaintiffs was that from May 1888 till July 1910 the two villages or dependencies in dispute were in possession of Babu Janki Prasad Singh under a grant (Ex. 18) from the Raja of Tikari. They produced the grant, but the learned Additional Subordinate Judge found that it was a forgery. He said as follows :—

"I cannot believe this life' Jagir of Janki Prasad and Ex. 18. In my opinion that document Ex. 18 is a got-up one for the purpose of this case after the judgment of the Khanapuri Officer in the settlement proceeding. I do not also believe the collection papers of the time of Janki."

The lower Appellate Court has practically affirmed the above finding.

In support of his case the Appellant

relied upon Exs. L, G and 15 referred to in paras. 3 and 4. He also contended that the pattah (Ex. H), dated the 30th May 1880, expressly contained the words "with dependencies" in the body of the document, and that those words were applicable to Damodarpur Lakhawar. He also relied upon Ex. 14A which showed that Damodarpur Lakhawar with its two dependencies was entered in that document, as one revenue unit. The Appellant also relied upon a number of other documents and the acts and conduct of the parties which showed that the Appellant had been in possession of the villages in dispute as a mokararidar under his pattah, dated the 30th May 1880.

The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the mokarari pattah, dated the 30th May 1880, was unambiguous, and that under sec. 94 of the Indian Evidence Act no evidence was admissible to show that Damodarpur Lakhawar included its two dependencies. He held that the suit was not barred by limitation in the following words:—

"Harihar Narain got his Thika of the three villages from the 7 anna Raj, and became a tenant under him. As against him the 7 anna Raj could have no cause of action of a suit for possession, so long as his Thika lease lasted. If he did not pay any rent to the Raj, and attorned to a third party, that would give the Raj cause of action for a rent suit, and not for a suit for possession of the Thika villages against him. There is no evidence that he attorned to the Defendant No. 1 or his predecessor to the knowledge of the 7 anna Raj. On the contrary, the evidence in this case shews that the 7 anna Raj used to get a set-off of the advance of Peshgi money and interest every year. Under these circumstances I think limitation can never run before 1311, i.e., from after the Thika lease of Harihar Narain."

In the result the Additional Subordinate Judge made a decree allowing the claim of the Plaintiffs with costs, and from that decree the present Appellant appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Patna. The appeal was heard by Coutts and Das, JJ., and the former delivered judgment, the latter concurring, on the 25th June 1919. The learned Judges of the High Court agreed with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the mokarari deed, dated the 30th May 1880, was unambiguous, and that it granted the lease of only one village, namely, Damodarpur Lakhawar. They admitted that the learned Subordinate Judge had made a mistake in discussing the effect of Exs. L, G and 15, but they were of opinion that it was unsafe to act upon those Exhibits. In the course of his judgment Mr. Justice Coutts said as follows:—

"Mr. Hasan Imam relies strongly on these documents and his main contention on them is based on the fact that the sum of the Jamas fixed in Exs. L and G is almost the same as the Jama fixed in Ex. 15. In Ex. G the Jama of Damodarpur Lakhawar was fixed at Rs. 757 and 15 maunds of rice, the Jama in Ex. L was fixed at Rs. 749-12-0 and 15 maunds of rice and in Ex. 15 the Jama was fixed at Rs. 1,507 and 30 maunds of rice; that is to say, the sum of the Jamas in Exs. G and L is only 4 annas less than the Jama fixed in Ex. 15. From this similarity of Jamas we are asked to conclude that Mauza Damodarpur Lakhawar included the three Mauzas. In discussing this matter the learned Subordinate Judge had obviously made a mistake and it is an undoubted fact that the Jamas are almost identical." . . . "We are entirely in the realm of speculation as to how the Jama was arrived at, we have no evidence to assist in and it would be exceedingly unsafe under the circumstances to attempt to come to any conclusion based on this similarity of Jamas."

In other respects the High Court generally affirmed the findings of the Additional Subordinate Judge. Shortly before concluding his argument for the present Appellant, his Counsel filed an application praying for the admission of additional documentary evidence, but his application was rejected. The High Court therefore made a decree dismissing the appeal of the Defendant No. 1 with costs, and from that decree the present appeal was preferred.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and W. Wallach for the Respondents.

The arguments were directed towards the evidence.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The facts of this litigation are set out in detail in the judgments of the Courts in India; it is consequently not necessary to state them here at any length. The suit relates to two villages, named respectively Lakhawar Khas and Lakhawar Faridpur, lying within Mahal Margaon, appertaining to the Tikari estate in the Province of Behar. It appears that in 1843 there was a Government survey of Mahal Margaon, in the course of which a Khasra map was prepared by the Amin of these two villages along with another called Lakhawar Damodarpur. The map is Ex. 14 in this case, and the memorandum on the back is marked 14A.

In the middle of the nineteenth century the Tikari estate belonged to one Raja Mode Narain Singh. He died somewhere in the year 1856 or 1857 without any male issue, leaving him surviving two widows named respectively Rani Asmedh Koer and Rani Sunit Koer, a brother's son, Ran Bahadoor Singh, and a sister's grandson, Krishna Pratap Sahai, the ancestor of the present Appellant often named in these proceedings as the Raja of Tamkuhi. On Raja Mode Narain Singh's death, in the absence of any direct male heir, natural or adopted, his widows took possession of the estate for their lives. Ran Bahadoor Singh, who, under the circumstances, was the reversioner, appears, however, to have acquired possession by some arrangement with the widows.

In 1875 Raja Krishna Pratap Sahai brought a suit against Ran Bahadoor Singh and the two widows of Raja Mode Narain Singh, for recovery of the whole estate, on the allegation that he had been adopted by the widows subsequent to the death of the Raja under authority given by him in his life-time. This suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge; from his decision an appeal was preferred to the High Court of Calcutta. Whilst the appeal was pending the parties came to a settlement and an ekrarnama was executed by Krishna Pratap in which were embodied the terms of the compromise. This document is marked Ex. 20, and bears date the 30th of May 1880. By the terms of this agreement Raja Krishna Pratap Sahai undertook to withdraw all claims to the estate, in consideration of the grant to him by Ran Bahadoor Singh, of a Mokarari settlement of certain villages set out in detail in that document. Pursuant to this agreement Ran Bahadoor Singh, by a pattah of even date, granted to Krishna Pratap Sahai, the mokarari of the villages named in the ekrarnama and set out specifically in the grant. The pattah recites the agreement already referred to and then proceeds to describe the properties demised thereunder. One of these is named as Damodarpur Lakhawar.

The controversy in the present suit relates solely to the question, what does Damodarpur Lakhawar denote?

It should be noted here that the rental fixed for the Mokarari was Rs. 2,701 per annum.

Raja Krishna Pratap Sahai, the grantee, appears to have taken possession, under the pattah, of the properties conveyed to him thereunder by Ran Bahadoor Singh. The Plaintiffs' claim that under the designation of Damodarpur Lakhawar only one village was granted to Raja Pratap Sahai and that the grantor retained possession of the other two, viz., Lakhawar Khas and Lakhawar Faridpur, and that they on the 24th January 1914, obtained a grant of the same from the present owner of the 7½ annas share of the Tikari estate within whose property these villages lie; and they ask, as against the first Defendant, the representative of Raja Krishna Pratap Sahai, recovery of possession of these two villages with mesne profits. The Defendant No. 2 is the present possessor of the 7½ annas share and she supports the Plaintiffs' claim.

The contesting Defendant, on the other hand, alleges that "in the mofassil all the three villages are known by the name of Damodarpur Lakhawar," that they were "measured together" (in the survey of 1843) and that all three were entered under the name of Damodarpur Lakhawar in the zemindari office of the Tikari Raj; and he claims that what was granted to Raja Krishna Pratap under that name was not one village only but all the three bearing the common designation of Lakhawar. He further alleges that the grantee and his heirs have ever since been in possession of the three villages and that the present suit has been falsely instituted against him. As already stated the sole question at issue between the parties is, what does the name Damodarpur Lakhawar denote; in other words, whether it refers to only one village or to the three villages together.

This is an action in ejectment; in the proceedings under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code in 1912 the Defendant was found to be in possession of the villages in dispute, against the claim of the Plaintiffs; and in the cadastral survey proceedings taken under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 they again failed to establish their allegation. Their failure in those proceedings led in fact to the institution of the present action in August 1914. The onus thus lay heavily on the Plaintiffs to show that the Defendant was not in possession of these properties by virtue of the title he alleges. And this they could easily have done, in order to shift the onus, by proving that the rent for the two mouzahs was paid separately into the estate office, and that the three villages were separately entered in the estate records. Their Lordships have not observed in the judgments of the Courts in India a reference to this aspect of the case.

In both the Courts the matter in controversy has been dealt with as involving a simple construction of the words of the pattah. Both the Subordinate Judge and the learned Judges of the High Court of Patna have found that the three properties form separate mouzahs, that the two disputed villages are not appurtenant hamlets (dakhilis) of Damodarpur, that consequently what was granted under the pattah was only one village specifically named in the grant. They put aside the documentary evidence adduced by the Defendant of the dealings with the three mouzahs as a composite property, mainly on the ground of a lacuna in the evidence which made the transactions look suspicious.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the Plaintiffs' claim, and his decree has been affirmed by the High Court, though it has held he had fallen into error on several findings of fact.

The present appeal to His Majesty is from the judgment and decree of the High Court.

In dealing with this case it is necessary to bear in mind two undisputed facts. First, that in the survey of 1843 the lands of the three mouzahs were measured together. The learned Judges of the High Court find it impossible to say why this was done. But Ex. 14A, the memorandum on the khasra map prepared by the Amin for purposes of the regular survey, which was to follow, contains the explanation. The three mouzas were measured together, as the lands were intermixed (makhlut). In this circumstance may be found the key to the whole history of these villages. Though the areas found on measurement are given separately, all three bear the same number in the Collector's register.

The Appellate Court thinks that this is due to the fact that the three villages appertain to one mahal. This explanation seems hardly well-founded. Besides, were this the correct view, all the other villages described in Ex. 14A which also bear the name of Lakhawar would have borne one and the same number. Their Lordships have no doubt that the three Makhlut villages bearing one number in the Collector's register were regarded as one composite revenue unit. The revenue assessed on these mouzahs appears also to be a consolidated amount.

As stated already the grant was made on the 30th May 1880. In it the name of the property is given as "Damodarpur Lakhawar." In the schedule which contains the details of the mouzahs the names of the Thikadars (lessees), who were in possession at the time and the Jama at which settlement was made are set out. The particular property forming the subject of the grant is described thus: "Damodarpur Lakhawar, Pargani Okri, Mahal Sufi, District Gaya."

Twelve years before, viz., on the 5th April 1868, Rani Sunit Koer, the second widow of Raja Mode Narain Singh, had granted to one Ram Sahai, whose name appears as lessee in the list attached to the potta of 1880, a lease of 7½ annas share of 6 mouzahs for 15 years at a yearly rental of Rs. 757. In this document also the property is described as Damodarpur Lakhawar. On the 15th September 1875, Raja Ran Bahadoor himself granted to one Mohar Singh a pattah for 13 years in respect of the remaining 8½ annas share of the same villages at a rental of Rs. 749—thus making a total of Rs. 1,506 for both shares. On the 23rd January 1880, shortly before the compromise in the suit of 1875 Ran Bahadoor Singh gave to one Harihar Narain Singh, whose name also appears in the list attached to the pattah of the 30th May 1880, a usufructuary lease for 15 years. In the kabuliyat executed by Harihar Narain Singh, the component parts of Damodarpur Lakhawar are for the first time specifically set out. It recites that he had "obtained a Thika settlement of the whole and entire 16 annas of Mouza Lakhawar Khas, Lakhawar Makhlut Damodarpur, Lakhawar Makhlut Faridpur, Mahal Sufi, Pargana Okri, District Gaya, original with dependencies, on a fixed and consolidated Jama of Cos. Rs. 1,495," together with certain other items, amounting in the aggregate to Cos. Rs. 1,507. After giving other details it goes on to state that :—

"Under the Order of the authority for the time being, resting with me the Thikadar, on payment of Cos. Rs. 10,800 as zarpeshgi bearing interest at 8 annas per cent. per mensem, according to Katowli Satawa [i.e., usufructuary mortgage] account given below, and Rs 501, as zarpeshgi bearing no interest, to be set off at the end of the term, from Sarkar Raja Ran Bahadur Singh . . . . . . for a term of 15 years, I shall take and hold possession of the leasehold properties. . . . . ."

A schedule is attached to this document showing the annual rental of the properties of which Harihar Narain Singh had obtained the lease, the deductions to be made therefrom on account of interest, the amounts to be deducted on account of principal, and the balance remaining therefrom, which was to be paid to the Mokararidar, the grantee under the pattah of 1880. This document would go to show that what was granted in 1880 referred to all the three villages which were grouped under the one name of Damodarpur Lakhawar, and would be conclusive on the point in controversy. But both the Subordinate Judge and the learned Judges of the High Court think, as already mentioned, that there was a gap in the evidence which the Defendants had failed to supply and that, therefore, the story that the grant included all three mouzahs could not be true. On this point the Subordinate Judge expresses himself thus :—

"Thus the grantor of the lease as shown by Ex. 15 makes a clear profit of about Rs. 6,000 by way of interest over the Peshgi money received, and he takes about Rs. 8,000 more as Peshgi money than that in Exbts. L and G ; under such circumstances simply because the rental in Exbt. 15 happens to be Rs 1,507 and 30 mds. of rice almost equal to what there is in Exbts. L and G it cannot follow that the same profit accrued to the landlord, and therefore the same property was leased out in Ex. 15 as in Exbts. L and G. In fact the landlord for apparent larger profits might have reduced the rent and might have granted three villages by Ex. 15 and, as the profit was not so much before he took larger rent and granted only one village and 7½ annas of Ampathua for almost the same rent."

The learned Judges of the High Court take a similar view. They say :—

"Now there is evidence to show that the portion of the jama which was to be set off in favour of the Tikari Raj against the zarpeshgi was actually set off, but there is nothing to show that any corresponding set-off was ever made by the Tikari Raj in favour of the Tamkuhi Raj (the Appellant). The only conclusion to be drawn from this is the conclusion drawn by the learned Subordinate Judge, viz.: that the Tikari Raj was getting the benefit of the set-off and that the Tamkuhi Raj was not in possession of the three Mouzas but of only one. Even if the Tamkuhi Raj did take the whole of the cash rent from the Ticcadar, however, this also would show nothing. Under his Mokarari the Raj of Tamkuhi was to get a clear profit of Rs. 1,151-12 a year after deduction of Mokarari rent. Now the highest amount that in any year was ever payable by Harihar Narain to the Tikari Raj was Rs. 708-10, so that even if the Tamkuhi Raj took the whole of this sum it was less than the whole amount to which it was entitled under the Mokarari, and the fact of taking it all would not in any way show that it had possession of the Mouzas in suit."

The conclusion of the Indian Courts being thus based on the absence of evidence on the part of the Defendant to show what arrangement had been made by Ran Bahadoor Singh in respect of the demands of Harihar Narain Singh, who held the usufructuary mortgage, the Appellant tried to trace further transactions to elucidate the gap to which the Subordinate Judge and the High Court referred, and on which practically the case was decided. It appears that before judgment was delivered by the High Court he traced, after diligent search, certain documents contemporaneously executed by Ran Bahadoor Singh by which he had made effective provision for meeting the demands of the usufructuary mortgagee and the claims of the Mokararidar; and obtained copies from the registry office where the documents executed by Ran Bahadoor Singh were registered, and applied to the Appellate Court for their admission as material evidence in proof of his case. One of these documents is the Hukumnamah (authority) addressed by Ran Bahadoor Singh to Harihar Narain Singh which bears date the 31st May 1880. The other is a Tunkhah or authorisation addressed by Raja Ran Bahadoor to one Telkhari Singh dated the 24th January 1880. Telkhari Singh appears to have been a lessee of certain mouzahs belonging to Ran Bahadoor Singh and the direction to him is in these terms :—

"Whereas Harihar Narayan Singh, son of Babu Mukha Singh resident of Bishunpore Pandui Pergunnah Ekil District Gaya by occupation zemindar has been granted a lease for a term of 15 years in respect of 16 annas of Mouza Khas Lakhwar Lakhwar Makhlut Damodarpore Lakhwar Makhlut Faridpore Mahal Sufi Pergunnah Ekil Distt. Gaya original with dependencies at an annual Jama of Rs. 1,507 of company's coins, in cash Mal with Abwab and 30 Maunds of sunned rice from 1296 to 1310 for a consideration of Rs. 10,878 as an advance bearing interest at the rate of -/8/- per mensem as per Katwa Satwa Account and Rs. 561 as advance bearing no interest to be set off against the rent of the last year of the term. And Rs. 5,520-11 as is the interest on the said advance bearing interest from November 1287 to 1295 the period of dispossession and the payment of that amount is necessary. Therefore it is written to you that you should pay the said Rs. 5,520 as per details out of the rental in respect of Bhekhdharaut Mahal Sufi Perg. Bhelawar the leasehold village, year after year to the said lessee (Harihar Narayan Singh) after obtaining receipt."

The Hukumnamah directed to Harihar Narain Singh bears date the 1st June 1880, namely, the day after the mokarari pattah of the 30th May 1880, in favour of Raja Krishna Pratap Sahai. The document runs thus :—

"To

"Sri Harihar Narayan Singh, son of Mukhi Singh, resident of Mouzah Bishunpur Pandul, Pergunnah Ekil, District Gaya and Thikadar in respect of 7 annas 6 pies out of the entire 16 annas of the Mouza Damodarpore Lakhawar and Lakhawar Khas, Pergunnah Okri and of 8 annas 6 pies of the said villages in all 16 annas of the said villages by occupation zemindar."

Then it goes on to say :—

"Whereas the 16 annas of Mouza Damodarpur Lakhwar and Lakhwar Khas original with dependencies together with Mouza Mohamadpur Khurd and Mohamadpur Kalan and Manikpur Bahari bearing an annual fixed Jama of Rs. 2,701-12, half of which is Rs. 1350-14 as according to the currency have been given in perpetual mokarrai commencing from 1288, from generation to generation, from progeny to progeny, from heirs to heirs, from successor to successors without any provision for forfeiture, cancellation and resumption from the Sirkar of this estate, in favour of Raja Krishna Pertap Bahadur Sahi, son of Raja Kharga Bahadur Sahi, resident and proprietor of Raj Reyasat Tamkohi, Pergunnah Sidhua Jobna, District Gorakhpore under a Mokurrari deed dated this day. Hence it is given to you in writing that you should pay and deliver Rs. 1507 mal (rent) with cesses in cash and 30 Maunds of Arwa rice the rent of the said Mouza due from you, commencing from 1296 Fasli to 1310 Fs. up till the terms of your Thika, to the officers of Raja Krishna Pertap Sahi, Mokurraridar from year to year, from season to season, from kist to kist in accordance with the conditions and terms of kistbandi embodied in Thika Kabuliyat. And in case of the non-payments of the rentals specified to the extent of cash as set forth above."

There can be no question as to the genuineness of these documents. They appear to have been duly registered on their execution, the copies produced have been obtained from the registry office under the rules and regulations framed by authority. The only question is whether they can be admitted as evidence. If they are admissible they place beyond dispute the fact that the grant was in respect of all three villages which are known under the composite name of Damodarpur Lakhawar. But the learned Judges have held that they had no jurisdiction under r. 27, Or. 41 of the Code of Civil Procedure Act, 1908, to admit in evidence these documents.

R. 27 runs as follows :—

(1) The parties to an appeal shall not be entitled to produce additional evidence, whether oral or documentary, in the Appellate Court. But if:—

(a) The Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted; or

(b) The Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the Appellate Court may allow such evidence or document to be produced, or witness to be examined.

The matter does not come under cl. (a). With regard to cl. (b) the High Court construed the rule with the assistance of the decision in Kessowji Issur v. The Great Indian Peninsula Railway (1), that it implies a prohibition against the admission of additional evidence except where the Appellate Court has itself discovered some inherent lacuna or defect, and required evidence to fill up the gap or remedy the defect. They have apparently not considered the question that the suitor may be entitled for any "substantial cause" to apply to the Court for the admission of such additional evidence. The case of Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway (1), on which the learned Judges have relied, was peculiar in its character. A suit had been brought on the Original Side of the Bombay High Court against the Great Indian Peninsula Railway to recover damages for injuries sustained in consequence of an accident occasioned by the laches of the officials of the railway. The suit had been decreed by the Court of first instance; the Railway Company then, on discovery of some new evidence, applied for a review of judgment b fore the learned Judge who had decreed the claim; he refused the application. Then the Company filed an appeal and applied to the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction for leave to produce the same evidence they had presented to the first Court and which had been rejected. The High Court not only gave permission to the Appellants in that case to produce the evidence, but extended the permission to other evidence. As this Board pointed out, the procedure adopted by the Appellate Court was quite irregular. In the course of their judgment the Board laid stress on the limitations to the power of an Appellate Court to require additional evidence on their own motion to supplement what had been produced by the parties. In their Lordships' opinion Kessowji's case (1) has no bearing on the present debate. In this connection it may be useful here to refer to the remarks of Lord Westbury in the case of Sreemanchunder Dey v. Gopalchunder Chuckerbutty (2), where, dealing with the power of the Appellate Court to require additional evidence under the provisions of the cognate section, sec. 355, in the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, he said as follows :—

"When the matter came up by appeal to the High Court, the High Court was dissatisfied with the decree below, and made remarks upon the reasons given by the Court and the dealing with the evidence taken in it; the High Court, acting apparently ex mero motu, and not at the instance of the parties, determined to take original evidence anew, by the examination of other witnesses. It is a power given by the Code to the High Court, which may be very wholesome; but it is desirable that the reasons for exercising that power should always be recorded or minuted by the High Court on the proceedings. A power of that character should be exercised very sparingly, because, where it is done not at the instance of the parties but at the suggestion of the Court itself, witnesses may be called who are not the witnesses that the parties themselves would have thought fit to adduce; and it is possible (which appears to be the case here) that the new original inquiry by the High Court may be in itself imperfect, and not sufficiently extensive to answer the purposes of justice."

Both in the case of Sreemanchunder Dey v. Gopalchunder Chuckerbutty (2) and Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway (1) their Lordships were dealing with the power of the Appellate Court to require evidence to be produced for the purpose of enabling the Court to pronounce judgment. Those cases did not refer to the right of one or other of the parties to produce evidence which he considered essential for the determination of the action. Under Or. 47, r. 1, which reproduces sec. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, a party has a right to apply for a review of judgment to the Court that has decided the case before an appeal has been preferred. The grounds on which such an application may be made are specifically set forth in r. 1. In the present case an appeal had been preferred and a review, therefore, was out of the question; and the Defendants took the only and proper course, viz.: to apply to the High Court, which was in possession of the case, to admit the additional evidence either under the general principles of law or under the specific provisions of r. 27, which lays down that the Appellate Court may for any other substantial cause (viz.: other than those particularly specified) allow such evidence or documents to be produced or witnesses to be examined. Rules of procedure are not made for the purpose of hindering justice. As the application is now before their Lordships for the admission of the documents to which reference has already been made, it is desirable to observe that there is no restriction on the powers of the Board to admit such evidence for the non-production of which at the initial stage sufficient ground has been made out. It is only necessary to refer to p. 289 of Mr. Bentwich's "Privy Council Practice" where he has set out the cases in which the power has been exercised.

Their Lordships, therefore, have admitted the two documents in respect of which the application is made, and on these two documents they have no doubt that Ran Bahadoor Singh, by the words "Damodarpur Lakhawar," denoted all the three villages, and that he purported to give, and gave in mokarari all three of them to the grantee. On the whole, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion that the decrees of the Courts below should be set aside and the Plaintiffs' suit dismissed. The Appellant will be entitled to his costs both here and in the Courts in India, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF OUDH.]

LORD ATKINSON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1923,
Heard, 6, March.
Judgment, 6, March.

MIRZA ABID HUSAIN KHAN (substituted for Mirza Sadiq Husain) and anr., Appellants,
v.
AHMAD HUSAIN and ors., Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 110—Claim for annuity charged on property—Appealable value

By no reasonable method of valuation can an annuity of Rs. 125 per annum be worth Rs. 10,000, and the appealable value required by sec. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code is not satisfied by showing that the property upon which the annuity is charged is of the required value, the section applying to the value of the annuity sought to be recovered and not to the value of the property upon which that annuity is charged.

RADHAKRISHNA AYYAR v. SUNDARASWAMIER (1) explained.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of the Judicial Commissioner, dated 2nd April 1919, reversing as against the Appellant a decree of the District Judge of Lucknow, dated the 22nd November 1917, which had reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Barabanki, dated the 31st July 1916.

The suit in which these decrees were passed was brought by the 1st Respondent for a declaration that a maintenance allowance of Rs. 250 per annum to which he claimed to be entitled created a charge on two villages, Dadra and Raipur, and that he and his representatives were entitled to get the same annually from the persons in possession of those villages, and for arrears of the same allowance.

The chief questions in this appeal were whether that allowance had been or should be charged on these villages so as to be payable by the Appellants as purchasers of them, and if so, whether the 1st Respondent was entitled to maintain the suit, and to a declaration that the maintenance allowance and the charge therefor will enure for the benefit of his representatives.

The villages in question were in Oudh, and all proprietary rights in their soil were confiscated to the British Government by Lord Canning's proclamation on the 15th March 1858.

Before this, these villages seem to have been held by one Mahammed Ayaz, ancestor of the Respondents Nos. 1—3. On his death his eldest son Sarfaraz Ali succeeded to the possession of the villages, but in or about the year 1845 was evicted for non-payment of revenue, and his younger brother Khuda Baksh, father of the 1st Respondent, paid up the arrears and got the kabuliyat of the villages, and he apparently allowed maintenance at the rate of Rs. 250 per annum to his elder brother, Sarfaraz Ali. Khuda Baksh, however, joined in the mutiny of 1857, and the lands as already stated were forfeited.

(1) L. R. 49 I. A. 211; s. c. 27 C. W. N. 1 (1922).

In or about the year 1858, Sarfaraz Ali on payment of a fine for Khuda Baksh's conduct, was allowed to engage for the revenue of the villages and was given a kabuliyat for them for three years.

Shortly after this, the 1st Respondent made a claim against Sarfaraz Ali for these villages, but that claim was finally rejected by the Judicial Commissioner on or about the 27th January 1865. The last part of his judgment was as follows: The financial Commissioner . . . . . decrees the proprietary rights in Mauzas Dadra and Raipur to the Appellant Sarfaraz Ahmad, the maintenance to be granted to Respondent Ahmad (1st Respondent in this appeal) to be equal to that assigned to Sarfaraz Ahmad.

The parties appear to have acted on the last sentence as a valid award of maintenance to 1st Respondent against Sarfaraz, and there followed further proceedings which resulted in an order by the Extra Assistant Commissioner on the 22nd October 1866, "that a decree for Rs. 250 annually in cash be passed against the Defendant (Sarfaraz Ahmad)."

Sarfaraz Ahmad died about 1868, and thereafter the allowance of Rs. 250 a year appears to have been paid by his son Riaz Ahmad, who got possession of his whole estate or on his account by his mortgagee in possession, Agha Hassan.

On 25th August 1882, the 1st Respondent sued Riaz Ahmad described as zemindar, and Agha Hassan as mortgagee of the village of Dadra. He set out some of the above facts and alleged that the decree for Rs. 250 had been passed "on the basis of zemindari right," but he only asked for and got a decree for payment of Rs. 250.

It appears that after this the said Agha Hassan Khan, in execution of a decree obtained on his mortgage, purchased the share of Riaz Ahmad in the estate left by Sarfaraz Ahmad, including the villages in question. Riaz Ahmad appears to have ultimately taken a half share in that estate, the other half share having gone to Fazl Ahmad, the other son of Sarfaraz Ahmad, whose representatives are the Respondents Nos. 2 and 3. The Appellants are the representatives of Agha Hassan Khan.

The allowance appears to have been paid to the 1st Respondent till about the year 1913, when it fell into arrear, and on the 6th August 1914, the 1st Respondent brought the present suit against the 2nd and 3rd Respondents and the Appellants, and he afterwards added as Defendants the 4th and 5th Respondents as purchasers from the 1st and 2nd Respondents of their share in Raipur.

The 1st Respondent on the 17th April 1916, through his pleader, stated that he did not plead or rely on any custom.

The suit was heard by the Subordinate Judge who gave judgment and passed a decree as claimed against all the Defendants, i.e., the Appellants and the Respondents other than the 1st Respondent. In his judgment he held that the decree of January 1865, created an under-proprietary right which gave a charge to the 1st Respondent and his representatives on the villages.

Against this decision appeals were brought to the Court of the District Judge who allowed the appeal of the Appellants and limited the 1st Respondent to a personal decree against the 2nd and 3rd Respondents.

In his judgment he held that the decree of 27th January 1865 was a personal decree only and gave no charge. He pointed out that whatever proprietary rights Khuda Baksh, the 1st Respondent's father, had in the villages in question, he lost at the mutiny under Lord Canning's proclamation and that there had been no re-grant whatever to Khuda Baksh or the 1st Respondent, his son. The maintenance he considered to have been granted merely as an act of grace. To the suggestion that the question of charge was res judicata against the Appellants by reason of the decree of 1882, he replied (1) that the Appellants were not litigating under the same title, (2) that in that litigation there was no claim to a charge. It was admitted before the District Judge that the decree of January 1865, did not create any under-proprietary right or any right that was transferable.

The 1st Respondent appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner who allowed the appeal as against the Appellants and passed a decree against them for Rs. 250 and declared that the liability for payment of Rs. 125 per month would be charged on the half share of the villages held by the Appellants.

In his judgment he referred to the decree of 27th January as contemplating an allowance, payable out of the profits of the estate to the junior member (in accordance with the family custom by which one son inherited and the other only got an allowance) and heritable. He thought, however, that as no charge had been specifically created by that decree, the Respondents Nos. 4 and 5 as purchasers to whom no notice was proved to have been given were not liable but the Appellants could not escape liability by reason of the suit of 1882. He thought it desirable to create a charge for the future and appeared to have no doubt of his power to create such a charge.

From this decree the Appellants appealed to his Majesty in Council.

Mr. W. Wallach for the Respondents raised the preliminary objection that the appeal was not competent because the amount or value of the subject-matter did not involve directly or indirectly any claim to property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellants.—The value of the property on which the annuity is charged is more than Rs. 10,000 and indirectly there is a claim involving more than that sum. Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Sundaraswamier (1).

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Lord Atkinson.—In this case the annuity which is sought to be enforced is only Rs. 125 per annum. By no reasonable method of valuation can an annuity of Rs. 125 per annum be worth Rs. 10,000. The 110th section of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, applies to the value of the annuity which is sought to be recovered, not to the value of the property upon which that annuity of Rs. 125 is charged. Their Lordships think it right to call attention to the fact that the decision in the case which has been referred to, Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Sundaraswamier (1), apparently proceeded upon supposed admission, which admission, it now appears, was really not made. In that case, too, the rent was Rs. 1,500 odd per annum, and there was nothing inconsistent or irrational in holding that the value of that rent was over Rs. 10,000. It was not seven years' purchase, whereas it is impossible that the annuity about which the controversy in

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

Re: S. C. Cr. SUIT No. 9193 OF 1921.

C. C. GHOSE, J.
1923,
21, November.

THE EAST INDIAN RY. Co., Petitioner,
v.
KANAI LAL, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 115—High Court's power of revision—Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), sec. 77—Small Cause Court's decision that notice is unnecessary before suit, if an error on a point of jurisdiction

The Opposite Party sued the Petitioner in the Calcutta Small Cause Court to recover a sum of money in respect of a package which had been lost in transit from Bikaneer to Howrah. The Petitioner contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit inasmuch as no notice of claim under sec. 77 of the Indian Railways Act, 1877 had been given. The Court held that on the facts of the case notice was unnecessary, and decreed the Opposite Party's claim. The Petitioner applied to the High Court under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code:

Held—That if there was an error in the decision of the suit by the Small Cause Court, it was an error on a point of law and that the High Court ought not to interfere under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

"It is a strong thing to say that the Court, by holding that a notice under sec. 77 of the Railways Act on the facts of the case is unnecessary, did assume a jurisdiction which had not been vested in it by law."

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Langford James for the Petitioner.

Sir B. C. Mitter for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

C. C. GHOSE, J.—This is an application under sec. 115, C. P. C., and it has arisen under the following circumstances:—On the 13th June 1920, the Opposite Party delivered to the Jodhpur-Bikaneer Ry. at Bikaneer Station for carriage to Howrah as passenger's luggage 12 packages, 7 of which were placed in the guard's van. At Howrah the Opposite Party received all the said packages save one of those placed in the guard's van, which had been lost in transit. On the 26th April 1921, the Opposite Party instituted a suit in the Calcutta Small Cause Court for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 981-4 in respect of the package which was lost against the East Indian Ry. Company. On the 7th February 1923, the suit was decreed in favour of the Opposite Party, although the Petitioner Company had taken the point that no notice of suit under sec. 77 of the Railways Act* had been given. The Petitioner Company now contends that the learned Judge in the Small Cause Court had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law in entertaining and decreeing the suit against the East Indian Ry. Company in the absence of a notice under sec. 77 of the Railways Act. The Petitioner Company applied to my learned brother, Mr. Justice Greaves, on the 20th August 1923, and obtained a rule under sec. 115, C. P. C., against the Opposite Party and this rule has now come on for hearing before me.

On behalf of the Petitioner Company considerable stress has been laid on the case of C. D. M. Hindley v. Joynarain Marwari (1) and on the case of The Assam Bengal Ry. Co., Ld. v. Radhika Mohan Nath (2) and it has been contended that usurpation of jurisdiction by the Small Cause Court by holding that a notice under sec. 77 of the Railways Act is unnecessary can be revised by this Court under sec. 115, C. P. C.

Sir Binode Mitter for the Opposite Party has contended that the present is not a case of usurpation of authority, nor is it a case of a conscious violation of a rule of law and that therefore, on the authority of the decision of the Privy Council in Ameer Hossain v. Sheo Baksh (3), the present rule ought to be discharged.

* A person shall not be entitled to a refund of an overcharge in respect of animals or goods carried by railway or to compensation for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to be so carried, unless his claim to the refund or compensation has been preferred in writing by him or on his behalf to the railway administration within six months from the date of the delivery of the animals or goods for carriage by railway.

It is well settled that where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question and it has determined that question, it cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity, simply because it has come to an erroneous decision. The leading case on this subject is the case of Ameer Hossain (3), cited above, and following this decision it has been held that the High Court will not interfere under sec. 115, C. P. C., merely because the lower Court had wrongly decided that a suit was barred by limitation, or that it was barred as res judicata, or because the lower Court had proceeded upon an erroneous construction of the sections of an Act, or had misunderstood the effect of a document in evidence, or had excluded evidence which it ought to have admitted. The Privy Council in the case of Balkrishna v. Vasudeva (4), observed as follows:—"It will be observed that sec. 115 applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact, in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved." There is no doubt that conflicting views of the scope and effect of sec. 115 are to be found in the cases in the reports and in these latter days I do not feel called upon to reconcile these conflicting views. I ought to add that my attention has been drawn to the case of Jannoitzer v. Mohanand Chatterji (5). The passages in the judgments which are specially relied upon are these:—

Per Jenkins, C. J.—"I wish to reserve for consideration, should it ever hereafter arise, the question whether rejection or admission of evidence may not be in some peculiar circumstances an illegality or material irregularity, as for instance, where it is in direct contravention of some statutory provision." Per Woodroffe, J.—"Thus where a Court acts upon an unstamped document, where the legislature says that it is not to be acted upon at all, or on an unregistered document where registration is required, the Court has, I think, no option but to follow the mandatory provisions of the legislature, and if it does not follow such mandatory order, then it acts illegally."

No doubt there are these observations, but the real question is whether the judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge is revisable by me on the facts of the present case under the first part of sec. 115, C. P. C. On this point I desire to adopt the observations of West, J., in the case of Amritrav Krishna Deshpande v. Balakrishna Ganesh (6) :—"Now, jurisdiction, according to the exact conception of it formed by the Roman lawyers, consists in taking cognizance of a case involving the determination of some jural relation, in ascertaining the essential points of it and in pronouncing upon them. An enquiry into whether the jurisdiction exists is not an exercise of jurisdiction over the case itself, but an investigation of another question altogether, that of whether the considerations of cognizance are satisfied. There is in the determination of such a question no adjudication in the stricter sense, no ascertainment of jural relations and command consequent thereon. This enquiry, therefore, may properly be reviewed in many cases, where, when the exercise of a true jurisdiction in the fuller sense has taken place, no appeal or even review may be possible. If the objection that might have been raised as a preliminary one is not in fact raised until the hearing of the case has proceeded to a certain stage, the enquiry thus provoked is not thereby changed in its character. It is only in a second intention of the Court that "jurisdiction" is used in speaking of such an enquiry as an exercise of jurisdiction; objections affecting jurisdiction must relate either to the person, the place or the character of the suit. If a Court has competence in these respects, it may exercise jurisdiction and does exercise it whether correctly or erroneously in dealing judicially with a cause placed before it. Jurisdiction again has two closely related but distinguishable senses. It means sometimes authority, sometimes the exercise of the authority and this either in investigation or by way of command. Where the law speaks of exercise of jurisdiction, or failing to exercise jurisdiction, it means using or failing to use authority in entering on an enquiry and carrying it to a judicial conclusion. The exercise of jurisdiction is not declined when such a conclusion has been arrived at, merely because, had the decision on a particular point been different, further questions would have had to be disposed of."

In my judgment, the present is not like the class of cases referred to by Woodroffe, J. Nor is it like the case where it has been held that if a Court wrongly decides that a suit is of a civil nature and entertains the suit on that basis, the decision is open to revision under sec. 115, C. P. C., for no Civil Court is competent to entertain a suit which is not of a civil nature. On the facts of the present case and on the judgment of the learned Small Cause Court Judge, I feel great doubt whether I can say that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. No doubt the Court has said that notice under sec. 77 of the Railways Act on the facts of this case is unnecessary, but I think it is a strong thing to say that the Court by holding that a notice under sec. 77 of the Railways Act on the facts of this case is unnecessary did assume a jurisdiction which had not been vested in it by law. It may be said that this case is on the border line, but on the best consideration that I am able to give, I am inclined to think that if there is an error at all in this case, it is an error on a point of law and that no question of jurisdiction properly arises on the present application.

The result, therefore, is that this rule must be discharged with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 141 OF 1923.

Judgment, 13, August.

SYED ABDUL ALIM ABED, Appellant,
v.
BADARUDDIN AHMED and ors., Respondents.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sec. 18, question of genuineness or otherwise of Will, if to be decided by the Improvement Tribunal in reference under, when probate proceedings pending in High Court—Apportionment case, desirability of staying, pending disposal of probate case—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), sec. 187, probate of a Mahomedan Will, necessity of—Inherent power of Court to stay one of two cross-suits.

In a reference to the Improvement Tribunal under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act in an apportionment case, one of several Mahomedan claimants, at whose instance the reference was made, made an application for stay of the proceedings pending the disposal by the High Court of certain probate proceedings. The President of the Tribunal refused the application for stay and held that the genuineness and validity of the alleged Will should be tried by the Tribunal, but refused to give the applicant time for production of the original Will, and dismissed the case:

Held—That the reference should not have been dismissed without an opportunity being given to the claimant to secure the production of the original Will which had been lodged in the High Court. Such a course was rendered imperative by reason of the possibly far-reaching effect of decisions upon questions of title by Land Acquisition Tribunals.

RAMACHANDRA RAO v. RAMACHANDRA RAO (1), BALORAM v. SHAMSUNDER (2) and several other cases referred to.

Though it is not obligatory in the case of a Mahomedan Will to take probate, probate may be obtained of a Mahomedan Will.

SHAIK MUSA v. SHAH ISSA (7) and other cases referred to.

The Court has inherent power to postpone the hearing of a suit pending the decision of a selected action and to make an order for the stay of cross-suits on the ground of convenience. This inherent power is not to be exercised capriciously or arbitrarily, it is to be exercised to facilitate that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone Courts exist.

For several reasons the proceedings in the Tribunal should be stayed pending the disposal of the probate proceedings by the High Court. In the first place, it is not the primary function of the Improvement Tribunal to investigate controverted questions of title and adjudicate upon testamentary disputes. In the second place, there is every likelihood of a more comprehensive and searching investigation of the matters in issue by the High Court in its testamentary jurisdiction than by the Tribunal. In the third place, the probate Court can issue citations upon all persons claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased, who may not be parties in the apportionment proceedings in the Tribunal.

This is an appeal under sec. 3 of the Calcutta Improvement Appeals Act, 1911, from the decision of the President of the Tribunal pronounced under sec. 77 (1), (6) of the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911. This section provides that for the purpose of determining the award to be made by the Tribunal under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, questions relating to the determination of the persons to whom compensation is payable or the apportionment of compensation may be tried and decided, in the absence of the Assessors, if the President of the Tribunal considers their presence unnecessary, and when so tried and decided, the decision of the President shall be deemed to be the decision of the Tribunal

In the case before us, a portion of premises No. 13, Panditia Road was acquired by the Calcutta Improvement Trust by a declaration issued on the 16th November 1920 under the Land Acquisition Act. A sum of Rs. 46,200-8-10 was awarded by the Collector on account of the land, structures, statutory allowance, damages and capitalised value of the Government revenue. Thereupon three sets of persons appeared on the scene as claimants, with a view to participate in the sum awarded. The first of these was Badaruddin Ahmed who claimed to be the sole owner of the property. The second set consisted of Prafullanath Tagore and Muktakeshi Debi who are mortgagees from Badaruddin Ahmed. The third claimant, called the counter claimant in these proceedings, was Abdul Alim Abed, who claimed to be the owner. The Collector negatived the claim of the person last mentioned and awarded the compensation money to the first two claimants, mortgagor and mortgagees. Thereafter, on the 16th August 1922 a reference was made, under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, at the instance of the counter claimant whose alleged title had not been recognised by the Collector. The reference was received in the Court of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal on the 18th August 1922, when notices were directed to issue on the parties concerned and the case was fixed for the 19th September 1922 for appearance and for filing of written statements. The case was adjourned by the Court on ten occasions for want of time and it was finally taken up on the 21st April 1923, when it was adjourned to the 12th May for peremptory hearing. On that date, as it was laid down in the list, it was again adjourned to the 26th May. On that date, an application was made by the counter claimant for stay of the trial of the proceedings pending the disposal by the High Court of an application for the grant of Letters of Administration with copy annexed of the Will of one Omer Ali Sarkar. The President of the Tribunal refused the application for stay and held that the question of the genuineness and validity of the alleged Will should be tried by the Tribunal. The counter claimant thereupon prayed that some time should be given to him to enable him to produce the Will which had been lodged in the High Court. This prayer was refused and the President stated that even if the document had been produced, it would not have been received. The result was that what was called the apportionment case was dismissed with costs. The counter claimant has appealed to this Court and has contended that the order made by the President should be set aside, so that either the proceedings before the Tribunal may be stayed during the pendency of the probate proceedings in this Court or the question of the genuineness and validity of the Will may be investigated before the compensation money is distributed. The records of the probate proceedings have been placed before us.

It appears that the property acquired by the Calcutta Improvement Trust originally belonged to Omer Ali Sarkar who died on the 8th September 1911. The case for the Appellant is that Omer Ali Sarkar had executed a Will on the 11th May 1911. This is denied by the Respondent. Omer Ali Sarkar left a sister Abir Jan. The first claimant Badaruddin Ahmed who is the Respondent sets up title under a deed of gift said to have been executed in his favour on the 22nd June 1913 by Abir Jan, who, it is asserted, took the property by right of inheritance from her brother, the original owner. The counter claimant—Abdul Alim Abed —a grandson of Omer Ali Sarkar by a daughter Ayesha who is the Appellant sets up title as legatee under the alleged Will of Omer Ali Sarkar. On the 27th April 1923, Abdul Alim Abed made an application to this Court in its testamentary jurisdiction for Letters of Administration with copy of the Will annexed in respect of the estate of Omer Ali Sarkar. The estate was valued in accordance with statutory provisions, and an ad valorem fee of Rs. 2,007 was paid as prescribed in the Court Fees Act. In this application, it was stated that the person named as executor in the Will, one Samiruddin, was of unsound mind, that the applicant was a legatee under the Will and that he had attained his majority on the 30th May 1918. He claimed, under the Will, the premises No. 13, Panditia Road, and some ornaments. On the 30th April 1923, Mr. Justice Greaves ordered citation to issue to the executor under sec. 16 and a special citation to Abir Jan under sec. 69. On the 14th May 1923, Abir Jan filed caveat and the case is still under consideration. In these circumstances, the Respondents have argued that notwithstanding the pendency of the testamentary proceeding in this Court, the Tribunal may and should determine the question of genuineness and validity of the Will. But before we deal with this matter, we must first consider whether the order of dismissal should stand.

We are of opinion that the order of dismissal of what is called the apportionment case should be discharged. The case had been adjourned repeatedly as the Court had no time to take it up. Till the matter was taken up for disposal, no application for stay need or could have been made. As soon as the application was made, it was promptly rejected. In these circumstances an opportunity might well have been afforded to the counter claimant to secure the production of the original Will which had been lodged in this Court and was not in his custody. A considerable sum of money was in controversy, and the procedure should have been so moulded as to enable the parties to obtain an adjudication of the points in dispute.

Such a course was rendered imperative by reason of the possible far-reaching effect of the decisions upon questions of title by Land Acquisition Tribunals. It was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (1) that where a dispute as to the title to receive the compensation has been referred to the Court under the Land Acquisition Act, a decree therein renders the question of title res judicata in a suit between the parties to the dispute or those claiming under them. This negatived what had been regarded as the accepted view in a long series of decisions in the Indian High Courts, such as Baloram v. Shamsunder (2) and Trinayanee v. Krishnalal (3). A similar tendency to extend the operative effect of adjudications by Courts of Special Jurisdiction, is exhibited by the decisions in Sheo Prasan v. Ram Nandan (4) and Badar Bee v. Habib Merican Noordin (5) though the contrary view might be supported by a reference to a series of decisions in the Indian High Courts, Lalit Mohan v. Radharaman (6). Caution was accordingly necessary and we are not prepared to uphold the order of dismissal made by the President.

The question which next requires consideration is, whether, in the events that have happened, the Tribunal should proceed to investigate the question of genuineness of the alleged Will, while the matter is under examination by this Court in its testamentary jurisdiction. We have been reminded that there is no provision of the law which renders it obligatory in the case of a Mahomedan Will to take probate, and that after due proof, such Will is admissible in evidence, notwithstanding that the grant of probate has not been obtained. The leading authority on the point is the judgment of Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., in Shaikh Musa v. Shah Issa (7) which construed sec. 187 of the Indian Succession Act; this was accepted as good law in Sakina Bibi v. Mahomed Ishaque (8) and Mahomed Yusuf v. Hargovan Das (9). it has not been denied that probate may be obtained of a Mahomedan Will. The effect of a probate so obtained was considered by the Judicial Committee in Mirza Kurratulain v. Peara Saheb (10) where Sir Arthur Wilson considered the effect of secs. 4, 59 and 88 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881; see also Krishna Kinkar v. Pānchu Ram (11). The Respondents have urged that, in such circumstances, the proceedings should be carried on simultaneously; in other words, there may be a race between the parties in the two Courts so as to render necessary a decision of the question involved in Chinnusami v. Harihar Bhadral (12), namely, whether the judgment of a Probate Court, granting or refusing probate, is a judgment in rem so that the judgment of another Court in a proceeding inter partes cannot be pleaded in bar of an investigation in the Probate Court as to the factum of the Will propounded in that Court. We are clearly of opinion that such contingency should be avoided by all legitimate means. The right course to pursue is to stay the proceedings before the Tribunal, till the probate proceedings have been terminated in this Court.

It is beyond controversy that the Court has an inherent power to postpone the hearing of a suit, pending the decision of a selected action, and to make an order for the stay of cross-suits on the ground of convenience; Hukumchand v. Kamalanand (13) and Nandkishor v. Ramgolam (14). This inherent power is not to be capriciously or arbitrarily exercised; it is to be exercised to facilitate that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone Courts exist. If, from this standpoint, the Court is called upon to choose which proceeding should be stayed, there can be no serious controversy that the proceedings before the Tribunal should be stayed for more than one substantial reason. In the first place, it is not the primary function of the Tribunal to investigate controverted questions of title and adjudicate upon testamentary disputes. If the parties to this litigation had been Hindus governed by sec. 187 of the Indian Succession Act, read with sec. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, the question could have been tried only by a Court of Probate. It is only because the parties are Mahomedans who are not affected by sec. 187 of the Indian Succession Act, which is not incorporated in the Probate and Administration Act, that the argument has been solemnly advanced that the Tribunal should be called upon to discharge the functions of a Court of Probate. In the second place, there is every likelihood of a more comprehensive and searching investigation of the matters in issue by this Court in its testamentary jurisdiction than by the Tribunal. In the third place, Abar Jan, who is a party to the testamentary proceedings in this Court, is not and cannot be a party to the proceedings before the Tribunal. On the other hand, the Probate Court may, in the exercise of its discretion under sec. 69 of the Probate and Administration Act, issue citations calling upon all persons claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased to come and see the proceedings before the grant is made. It was ruled in In re Bhaba Sundari Debi (15), that persons having an interest in the immoveable property of the deceased, such as a mortgagee of a person, who, if the testator had left no Will, would be entitled to create the mortgage, would have such an interest in the property of the testator as to entitle him to enter caveat and oppose the grant of probate. To the same effect is the decision in Sarbamangala v. Sasibhushan (16). Again in Sarojini v. Haridas (17) a purchaser from the heir-at-law was allowed to contest the grant of probate of a Will which, if genuine, disinherited him. A similar view of the position of the purchaser from the heir had been previously taken in Ram Chandra v. Ramrav (18) and Digambar v. Narayan (19). This does not militate against the decision in Jones v. Jones (20), where, in an action as to the validity of a Will, Sir James Hannen, P., declined, apparently in the exercise of his discretion, to order the assignee of the heir-at-law to be cited as a person having or pretending an interest in the real estate affected by the Will.

On all these grounds, we are of opinion that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of dismissal made by the President set aside, and all proceedings in his Court stayed pending the disposal of the proceedings in this Court for Letters of Administration, with copy of Will annexed, to the estate of Omer Ali Sarkar. The sum covered by the award will be retained in Court until further orders. Each party will bear his own costs up to this stage.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1737 OF 1920.

NEWBOULD, J.

MONMATHA KUMAR RAY, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
JOSADA LAL PODDER and ors., Defendants, Respondents

Occupancy holding, non-transferable—Mere transfer by and sub-lease to raiyat, if gives landlord right to re-enter—Omission to pay rent whether amounts to denial of landlord's title—Court's duty when case heard ex parte.

Where a raiyat of a non-transferable occupancy holding sells it to a third person and after obtaining a sub-lease from him remains in possession of the holding the landlord is not entitled to obtain khas possession of it in the absence of repudiation by the raiyat of his relation to the landlord as such raiyat, because mere transfer apart from any other consideration does not give the landlord any right to get a decree for khas possession although the raiyat does not appear and contest the suit.

SUPERUNNESSA BIBI v. RAMDEB RAI (2) referred to.

A mere omission to pay rent is not a denial of the landlord's title in the absence of any evidence that the tenant ever refused to pay rent.

Even if a case is heard ex parte, it is the duty of the Court to consider the interest of the absent party and not to pass a decree except on proof by the Plaintiff that he is entitled to that decree.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Sarada Kumar Sen Gupta, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zilla Dacca, dated the 19th March 1920, modifying the decree of Babu Dwarka Nath De, Munsif, 2nd Court of that District, dated the 5th July 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Surendra Nath Guha and Surja Kumar Guha for the Appellant.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy, Satis Chandra Chowdhury and Gopal Chandra Das for the Respondents.

Babu Biraj Mohon Mazumdar for the minor Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment. The Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were the owners of a non-transferable occupancy holding under the Plaintiff. They mortgaged their interest to Defendant No. 1 who subsequently purchased that interest in execution of his mortgage decree. After that the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 executed a kabuliyat in favour of Defendant No. 1 and remained in possession of the land. The Munsif gave the Plaintiff a decree on contest against the Defendant No. 1 and ex parte against the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who did not appear in the suit. The Plaintiff's title was declared and it was directed that he should recover khas possession of the same as against the Defendants. On appeal the findings of fact of the first Court were upheld but the decree was varied to the extent that the prayer for khas possession as against Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was rejected; but it was declared that the Defendant No. 1 had no title to the disputed land as against the Plaintiff. Against this decree the Plaintiff has preferred this second appeal.

There is a considerable amount of law dealing with the question of the right of the landlord to re-enter the land of a non-transferable occupancy holding after its transfer by the tenant, but in no case has it been held that the mere transfer apart from any other consideration gives the landlord a right to re-enter when the tenant, transferor, actually remains in occupation of the land. The latest case cited on behalf of the Appellants and that which is most favourable to his contentions is that of Rajani Kant Biswas v. Ekkari Das (1). But in that case it was found that the tenant had not only transferred his holding but had also repudiated the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between himself and the original landlord. Here there is no such finding and what is more there is no such allegation in the plaint. In the plaint, as against the original tenants, the Plaintiff's case rests solely on the allegation of transfer and the execution of kabuliyat in favour of the transferee. It is now suggested that we ought on a consideration of the facts to hold that there has been an abandonment because it has been found by the Munsif that the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have not expressed their willingness to pay rent to the superior landlord. But a mere omission to pay rent is not a denial of the landlord's title; and there is neither the allegation nor a finding that these tenants ever refused to pay rent to the Plaintiff. The latest authority on the point is the case of Siperunnessa Bibi v. Ramdeb Rai (2) and that supports the view we take that on the facts alleged in the present case the landlord is not entitled to recover possession. It is argued that as Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not appear before the lower Appellate Court the decree should not have been modified in their favour. Even if a case is heard ex parte, it is the duty of the Court to consider the interest of the absent party and not to pass a decree except on proof by the Plaintiff that he is entitled to that decree. Here the Plaintiff possibly by oversight omitted not only to prove that but even to allege the facts necessary to support the decree which he obtained in the Court of the Munsif. We therefore affirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs, one-half to Defendant No. 1 and one-half to Defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

THE INDIA GENERAL NAVIGATION AND RAILWAY CO., LTD., Appellants,
v.
THE DEKHARI TEA CO., LTD., and ors., Respondents.

Indian Carriers Act (III of 1865), secs. 2, 6—"Common carriers," transporting goods "for all persons indiscriminately," who are—Conditions necessary to absolve common carrier from liability to owner—Special contract, or special means outside their ordinary methods of carriage to be employed.

A Railway Company which in ordinary course would have transported consignments of goods to a certain port over their own line, owing to break-down in a section of their own line, arranged with a Steamship Company for carriage of all goods of a particular description consigned to it for that port over a part of the way upon an agreement for division of freight which contained no other condition of any kind. The Steamship Company failed to establish that in transporting the goods in question they had employed a means of carriage over which the owners of the goods had a temporary and exclusive monopoly:

Held—That the Steamship Company were liable to the owners of the goods for loss due to fire which broke out in their vessel, as common carriers under sec. 2 of the Carriers Act, there being in the case no special signed contract within the meaning of sec. 6 of the Act to take the case out of the operation of sec. 2, and there being nothing in the evidence to show that in the carriage of the goods, the Steamship Company were departing from their usual business and engaging on a different type of business from that of common carriers.

Persons carry on business "for all persons indiscriminately" within the meaning of the definition of "common carriers" in sec. 2 of the Act, if (apart from danger arising, say, from the nature of the goods received) they are bound, owing to the public employment in which they are engaged, to satisfy the demands and applications for transport of goods of customers as they come and are not at liberty to refuse business.

Common carriers are answerable to the owners for safe and sound delivery of the goods they transport as such carriers.

To absolve himself of liability as such what is required in the case of a person who answers the definition of a common carrier (viz., one transporting for hire goods from place to place indiscriminately) is that the nature of the contract entered into must either have the limitation of the liability under the Indian Carriers Act made expressly and in writing or the facts must be such that, for the contract in question, the contractor was departing from his usual business and engaging in a different type of business from that of common carrier.

These were consolidated appeals against seven judgments of the High Court of Bengal in its Appellate Jurisdiction, dated the 30th November 1921, which affirmed seven decrees of the said Court in its Original Jurisdiction, dated the 19th January 1921.

The suits were instituted by various Tea Companies against the present Appellant for damages for loss incurred by them owing to the destruction of their goods while in the custody of the Appellant Company.

Suits were also instituted against the Assam-Bengal Railway Co., but were dismissed by consent owing to lack of notice in conformity with the provisions of the Indian Railways Act.

The Respondents were in the habit of sending consignments of tea from Assam to England viâ Chittagong. Generally this tea was carried by the Railway Company, but on occasions there were interruptions in the Railway service, particularly in a portion known as the "Hill Section" and on these occasions arrangements were made between the Railway Company and the present Appellant for the goods to be carried by the Appellant by water between Gauhati and Chandpur so as to avoid the breach in the Railway.

Such interruptions took place in 1913 and 1915 and the above arrangement was come to between the Railway and Steamer Companies.

In November 1915, 96 chests of tea, part of a consignment of 343 chests which had been delivered to the Railway Company for transport to Chittagong, were burnt while on the Appellant Company's flat "Cauvery" at Gauhati.

The Respondents sued to recover the loss sustained. The suit came for trial before Rankin, J. and the Respondents were allowed to amend their plaint by the addition of an allegation that the Appellant Company was a common carrier.

The learned Judge held that the Appellant Company was a common carrier and that the goods had been destroyed owing to the negligence of their servants. On appeal the Appellate Court (Sanderson, C. J. and Richardson, J.) upheld the findings of the trial Judge and dismissed the appeal.

The Steamer Company appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants.—Both Indian Courts have found that the tea was carried by the Appellants under an agreement with the Railway Company which provided for a special fleet for its transport and a non-stop voyage from Gauhati to Chandpur.

The Appellants do not therefore come within the definition of common carriers as provided by sec. 2 of the Indian Carriers Act, III of 1865, in that they were not carrying "for all persons indiscriminately."

Nor were they common carriers under the English law which is applicable save in so far as it may be varied by the Indian Act.

There are concurrent findings that there was no privity of contract between the Appellants and the Respondents so that it cannot be urged that the English cases, which lay down the proposition that a contractor may take upon himself the liability of a common carrier, are relevant.

Reference was made to Johnson v. Midland Ry. Co. (1), Scaife v. Farrand (2), Liver Alkali Co. v. Johnson (3), Nugent v. Smith (4) and Hill v. Scott (5).

(4) 1 C. P. D. 423 (1876).
(5) [1895] 2 Q. B. 371.

In any case the Appellant is not under the liability of a common carrier here as he was only bound to carry the goods tendered by the Railway Company to a fixed destination.

It is admitted that the Appellants would have been liable had they been common carriers.

Irrawaddy Flotilla Co. v. Bugwandass (6).

No negligence has been proved and no negligence can be presumed under sec. 106, Evidence Act, 1872.

[The Respondents were called upon to argue the question of "common carriers" before the Board heard further argument on the question of negligence.]

Messrs. Neilson, K. C. and E. F. Spence for the Respondents.—There are concurrent findings that the Appellants were "common carriers."

That is not a question of law, but of fact. Brind v. Dale (7) and Belfast Ropework Co. v. Bushell (8).

The Evidence does not show that by the agreement between the Railway Company and the Steamer Company the flotilla was reserved entirely for the Railway Company's goods. The carrying of the tea was in the ordinary course of the Steamer Company's business as common carriers.

Mr. Dunne, K. C. replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—These are consolidated appeals against decrees dated the 30th November 1921, pronounced by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. These decrees affirmed seven decrees of Mr. Justice Rankin dated the 19th January 1921.

The action was directed by the Respondents against the Assam-Bengal Railway Company as well as the present Appellants, the India General Navigation and Railway Company. It was dismissed by consent against the former, called the Railway Company, and it proceeded against the latter, called the Shipping Company.

The Plaintiffs' claim is for damages for the loss of certain tea, part of a consignment of their goods which, in November 1915, was delivered by the Respondents to the Railway Company for the purpose of transport from Assam to Chittagong for shipment to England. Consignments are in ordinary course thus taken and carried over all the Railway Company's own line without recourse to any other system of transport.

A section of the line, however, south of Lumding, in June 1915, broke down. It had broken down two years previously and arrangements had then been made for taking the goods by ships or flats from Gauhati on the Brahmaputra river down to Chandpur on the Meghna river. At the latter point the goods could again be put on rail and so reach Chittagong. This river service was performed both in 1913 and 1915 by the present Appellants. The only bargain on the subject of the goods in the present case was contained in a single letter dated the 11th June 1915, from the Traffic Manager of the Railway Company to the Agents of the Shipping Company and was to the effect that

"All tea from Upper Assam stations for Chittagong will be diverted viâ Chandpur and Gauhati. The division of the freight between the Steamer Company and this Railway following the precedent of 1913"

(6) L. R. 18 I. A. 121: s. c. I. L. R. 18 Cal. 620 (1891).

(7) 8 Car & P 207 (1837).

(8) [1918] 1 K B. 210

No conditions of any kind, other than that, were either produced or proved.

What happened to the goods was that they were conveyed from Bordubi Road (Assam) by rail to Gauhati. The railway having broken down the goods were there put on board the Steamship Company's flat "Cauvery" for carriage by river to Chandpur.

On the 21st December 1915, while the vessel was still lying at Gauhati, a fire broke out and certain of the tea was destroyed.

There were two questions in the case. First, whether the Steamship Company were liable to the Respondents, the owners of the goods, in damages as a common carrier; and second, whether if not so liable, they were liable at common law, by reason of the fire having been caused through their negligence. Their Lordships have not thought it necessary to deal with this second legal head of claim, the materials for which are in the evidence, because they are of opinion that the judgments pronounced by both the Courts below on the first point are clearly right, viz., that the Shipping Company in the circumstances described were under the law of India common carriers and answerable to the owner in damages as per the decrees.

It was quite clearly established, to use the language of their own witness, Parrot, one of their staff: "We are undoubtedly common carriers so far as the river portion of the journey is concerned." The case for the Appellants, however, was that by reason of the special nature of the contract of carriage entered into in this case the denomination of common carriers could not apply to them nor the liability of common carriers attach.

There was considerable reference made to the law of England. Whether the result under that law would have been in any wise different from that arrived at is doubtful enough; but the reference was unnecessary, because the point to be decided arises under the law of India. The true question in the appeal simply is whether under the Carriers Act, No. 3, which received the assent of the Governor-General in Council on the 14th February 1865, the definition of common carrier there mentioned covers the Appellants quoad, the present transaction. That definition is to the following effect :—

"In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—"Common carrier" denotes a person, other than the Government, engaged in the business of transporting for hire property from place to place, by land or inland navigation, for all persons indiscriminately."

It is not denied that the Appellants were de facto "engaged in the business of transporting for hire property from place to place by . . . . . . inland navigation." The challenge, however, is that this was not done "for all persons indiscriminately." There is no question raised as to the goods being beyond the Appellants' carrying capacity; they, in fact, receiving a large consignment, supplied the ships or flats to carry it. So far as the words "for all persons indiscriminately" are concerned these simply mean that persons so engaged in and catering for business satisfy the demands or applications of customers as they come and are not at liberty to refuse business. This arises from the public employment in which they are engaged. Apart from danger arising, say, from the nature of the goods received, the carrier is by his office bound to transport the goods as clearly as if there had been a special contract which purported so to bind him and he is answerable to the owner for safe and sound delivery.

In the present case all of these propositions are admitted; but it is said that there was here a contract of a special nature. The specialities in it were two, first that the Shipping Company did in fact assign particular flats for the considerable block of business coming to them at Gauhati by reason of the railway break-down; and secondly, that these flats were destined from Gauhati to Chandpur without calling at the ordinary intermediate ports. On the first of these points their Lordships would observe that there is no written proof in the case apart from the letter already referred to, which was simply to the effect that the rate for carriage would be the same as that charged in 1913. And as to special flats being employed there is no trace in the evidence that if there had been other customers' goods awaiting shipment for Chandpur and consigned to Chittagong, these could not and would not have been sent along with the cargo taken over from the Railway Company. In short, the idea of this portion of the river carriage being a temporary and exclusive monopoly for one single customer on special terms entirely disappears.

On the second point, viz., that this was a through route, their Lordships fail to see how that circumstance decategorises the Appellants from being common carriers under the statute, or relieves them from their legal obligations as such. In order to effect such a result the particular contract would require to come up to this, that quoad that transaction, another and different type of business had been entered on.

When, for a particular contract, special terms are desired which involve a different category of liability, there is nothing to prevent that being secured; sec. 6 of the Indian Carriers Act can then be taken advantage of. The language of sec. 6 is as follows:—

"The liability of any common carrier for the loss of or damage to any property delivered to him to be carried, not being of the description contained in the Schedule to this Act, shall not be deemed to be limited or affected by any public notice: but any such carrier . . . . may, by special contract, signed by the owner of such property so delivered as last aforesaid or by some person duly authorised in that behalf by such owner, limit his liability in respect of the same."

The goods were accepted for delivery by the Appellants without any such special signed contract for limitation of liability.

What is required in the case of a person who answers the definition under the Indian Carriers Act, viz., of transporting for hire goods from place to place for all persons indiscriminately, is that the nature of the contract entered into must either have the limitation of the liability under the Indian Carriers Act made expressly and in writing or the facts must be such that for the contract in question the contractor was departing from his usual business and engaging in a different type of business from that of common carrier. The Judges in both Courts appear to have not only correctly looked at the case from this point of view, but to have been entirely right in their conclusion. The learned Rankin, J., puts the matter thus:—

"The only question is whether, because it was doing this particular set of journeys for the Railway Company by a special flotilla which was devoted for the time to this purpose only and which was making a through run to Chandpur, it was departing from its usual business and engaging in a different type of business, viz., the business of a sub-contractor for the Railway in such special sense as to take it quoad these journeys out of the avocation of a common carrier. On the whole I think it was not."

Their Lordships agree that the question is correctly thus put in law and the proper answer given in fact.

The learned Sanderson, C. J., quotes the passage just given and agrees with it, as do their Lordships; and the learned Richardson, J., puts the matter simply, thus :—

"A common carrier cannot divest himself of his responsibilities as such without satisfying the Court that in the particular transaction he acted in some other capacity, and in this case, in my opinion, the Appellant Company have not discharged the burden which lay upon them."

The above also appears correct.

As already mentioned all other points in the case have disappeared.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals should be dismissed with costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

LORD DUNEDIN.
LORD ATKINSON.
LORD WRENBURY.
1923,
Heard, [illegible] and 9, February.
Judgment, 2. March.

THE TATA IRON AND STEEL CO., LTD., Appellants,
v.
THE CHIEF REVENUE AUTHORITY OF BOMBAY, Respondent.

Privy Council, appeal to Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), sec 51—High Court's judgment on case stated by Chief Revenue Authority, whether judgment or order Order whether final or consultative—Letters Patent (Bombay High Court), sec 39—Special leave, where statutory condition not fulfilled

No appeal lies to the Privy Council, under sec. 39 of the Letters Patent, from an order of the High Court made upon a reference by case stated by the Chief Revenue Authority under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act of 1918.

It is not a "final judgment" within the meaning of the section, as a "judgment" means a decision obtained in an action, all other decisions being "orders"; nor is it a "final decree." It is an order but not a "final order," a decision, judgment or order made by the Court under the section being merely advisory.

The fact that the functionary who states a special case for the opinion of the Court is or is not bound to act upon it does not necessarily determine whether the order and decision of the Court is or is not merely advisory.

The Privy Council would be slow to grant special leave to appeal when the subject had been adequately dealt with in the Letters Patent.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay (McLeod, C. J. and Shah, J.), dated the 28th February 1921, upon a reference made by the Chief Revenue Authority to the High Court pursuant to a previous order of the Court requiring a reference to be made under sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act (VII of 1918). By the said judgment the decision of the Chief Revenue Authority was affirmed.

The questions at issue in this appeal shortly stated were :—

(1) Whether the High Court had any jurisdiction in view of the prohibitions contained in sec. 106 (2) of the Government of India Act and in sec. 52 of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918) to entertain an application for an order under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, for the purpose of compelling the Chief Revenue Authority to exercise its powers to refer to the High Court a question under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918).

(2) Whether, assuming there be such jurisdiction, an order could be made under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, requiring the Chief Revenue Authority to refer to the High Court a question under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918) in the circumstances of the case and when the Chief Revenue Authority was of opinion that a reference to the High Court was unnecessary.

(3) Whether any appeal lies to His Majesty in Council from a decision of the High Court upon a question referred to it under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act (No. VII of 1918).

(4) In the alternative, whether in computing the amount of the income of the business of the Appellant Company for the purpose of assessment of Indian Income Tax a sum of Rs. 28,00,000 paid by way of underwriting commission in connection with an issue of shares of the Appellant Company ought to be deducted from receipts as an expense of carrying on the business.

The facts of the case shortly summarised were as follows :—

The Appellant Company which was formed under Indian Law and had its registered office in Bombay having by resolution passed in November 1918 decided to increase its capital by issuing 70,00,000 preference shares of Rs. 100 each took steps to secure that the issue should be a success. These steps are described in the reference as follows :—

"In order that such a large number of shares might be fully taken up, the Company offered them to certain individuals (styled as underwriters) at 4 per cent. discount. The underwriters took up the shares at this rate on condition that they be in the first instance, offered to the existing share-holders at par, and that they would themselves take up such shares as would not be thus subscribed for by the share-holders, in proportion, to the total number of shares applied for by them. Thus if one of the underwriters had applied originally for 7,000 shares, and if all the share-holders took up 5,00,000 shares out of the total number of 7,00,000, he would have to take up 2,000 shares $\left(\frac{7,000 \times 2,00,000}{7,00,000}\right)$, though he would be paid the discount due on the 7,000 shares originally applied for by him, viz., Rs. 28,000."

The total amount of the discount thus paid to the underwriters amounted to Rs. 28,00,000.

The accounts of the Company for the official year 1918-19 showed this sum as an item of expenses on account of underwriting commission. The Collector of Income Tax, Bombay, in arriving at the income of the official year 1919-20, which is to be computed upon the basis of the income of the preceding year, disallowed any deduction on account of this item, and assessed the Company in respect of an income of Rs. 61,81,848.

The Appellant Company appealed to the Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay, under sec. 21 of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918) against the assessment on the ground that the deduction of Rs. 28,00,000 should have been allowed, but the Commissioner rejected the appeal. The Appellant Company then petitioned the Chief Revenue Authority to reverse the decision of the Commissioner under sec. 23 of that Act, or in the alternative to refer the case to the High Court under sec. 51 of the Act on the question whether the deduction of the sum of Rs. 28,00,000 should be allowed.

The Chief Revenue Authority refused to interfere with the Commissioner's order, and in the exercise of his discretion under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, declined to refer the case to the High Court on the ground that, as the law seemed clear and the question involved was more or less one of fact, it was unnecessary to do so.

The Appellant Company then applied to the High Court for an order to be made under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, requiring the Chief Revenue Authority to refer the question to the High Court. The application was opposed on behalf of the Chief Revenue Authority, but the High Court on 12th January 1921 made an order requiring the Chief Revenue Authority to refer the case, and a reference was submitted accordingly. The point at issue was stated in the reference as being whether the item of Rs. 28,00,000 can or cannot be allowed under sec. 9 (2), IX of the Indian Income Tax Act as an item of expenditure.

The following is a summary of the principal statutory provisions relevant to the issues :—

Sec. 5 of the Indian Income Tax Act (VII of 1918) defines "income derived from business" as a specific class of income chargeable to Income Tax.

Sec. 9 (2) of the Act directs with reference to any such income that the profits of a business shall be computed after making certain allowances in respect of sums paid of which (IX) is as follows :—

"(IX) in respect of any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits."

Sec. 18 of the Act provides for the assessment by the Collector of the sum payable in respect of Income Tax, and by sec. 21 of the Act the assessee has power to apply by petition to the Commissioner for relief against the assessment.

By sec. 23 of the Act the Chief Revenue Authority may review assessments and pass such orders thereon as it thinks fit.

By sec. 51 of the Act it is provided that where a question has arisen in the course of an assessment under the Act :—

"The Chief Revenue Authority may, either on its own motion or on any reference from any Revenue officer subordinate to it, draw up a statement of the case, and refer it with its own opinion thereon to the High Court, and shall so refer any such question on the application of the assessee, unless it is satisfied that the application is frivolous or that a reference is unnecessary."

Sec. 51 (3) of the Act is as follows :—

"The High Court upon the hearing of any such case shall decide the questions raised thereby, and shall deliver its judgment thereon containing the grounds on which such decision is founded, and shall send to the Revenue Authority by which the case was stated a copy of such judgment under the seal of the Court and the signature of the Registrar; and the Revenue Authority shall dispose of the case accordingly, or, if the case arose on reference from any Revenue officer subordinate to it, shall forward a copy of such judgment to such officer who shall dispose the case conformably to such judgment."

"Where a reference is made to the High Court on the application of an assessee, costs shall be in the discretion of the Court."

Sec. 52 of the said Act is as follows :—

"52. No suit shall be brought in any Civil Court to set aside or modify any assessment made under this Act, and no prosecution, suit, or other proceeding shall lie against any Government officer for anything in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act."

Sec. 106 (2) of the Government of India Acts (1915, 1916 and 1919) provides with reference to the jurisdiction of the High Court as follows :—

"(2) The High Courts have not and may not exercise any original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, or concerning any act ordered or done in the collection thereof according to the usage and practice of the country or of the law for the time being in force."

Sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877.

authorises the High Court inter alia to make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forborne by any person holding a public office or any inferior Court of jurisdiction subject to the conditions and provisions of the section and in particular:—

(a) that the doing or forbearing is under any law for the time being in force clearly incumbent on such person or Court in his or its public character, and

(b) that nothing in the section shall be deemed to authorise the High Court to make any order which is otherwise expressly excluded by any law for the time being in force.

The reference was determined in the High Court on the 28th February 1921 when the Court (McLeod, J. and Shah, J.) gave judgment affirming the decision of the Chief Revenue Authority with respect to the allowance claimed.

Mr. Justice McLeod was of opinion that the sum of Rs. 28,00,000 was expenses incurred by the Appellant in raising fresh capital, that it was not included in any of the deductions authorised in sec. 9 (2), IX of the Income Tax Act and that it was in the nature of capital expenditure analogous to preliminary expenses on the flotation of a Company or money paid for an asset of an intangible nature such as goodwill and could not therefore be treated as expenditure (not in the nature of capital expenditure) solely incurred for the purpose of earning the profits of the Company's business. Reliance was placed in the judgment upon the principles in the Taxes Land and Mortgage Company v. William Hotham (10).

Mr. Justice Shah was of a similar opinion, and relied in addition upon the principles underlying the decision in the Royal Insurance Company v. Watson (11). He further doubted whether even if the expenditure in question was not in the nature of capital expenditure, it could be said to have been incurred solely for the purpose of earning the profits, but he did not decide the point.

The Appellant Company applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty's Privy Council, and on the 22nd August 1921, the Court (McLeod, C. J. and Shah, J.) gave judgment, giving leave so to appeal.

The Court was of opinion that a decision of the High Court on a reference made by the Chief Revenue Authority under sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act (VII of 1918) was a judgment within the meaning of cl. 39 of the Letters Patent, which the Court considered to be used in a wider sense than that in which it is used in the Civil Procedure Code.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Reginald Hills for the Respondent raised a preliminary point as to the competence of the appeal.

Sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, VII of 1918, provides for a reference by the Chief Revenue Authority to the High Court.

The Chief Revenue Authority having refused to refer this case, an application was made by the Appellant under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act and a reference was ordered and made (see I. L. R. 45 Bom. 1306).

But under the Government of India Act, 1915, sec. 106, there is no power to refer revenue matters to the High Court, and that Court was not competent to act under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

Moreover sec. 52 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, ousts the jurisdiction of the High Court in questions of assessment.

Under the provisions of the Income Tax

11 [1897] A. C. 1.

Act the seisin is always left with the Revenue officer. The Court is not empowered to give an order overruling the assessment; it only acts in an advisory capacity.

In any case even if there was a proper reference under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act and the High Court has stated its opinion, no appeal lies from its decision.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—If the High Court has given a judgment, can the jurisdiction of the Privy Council be excluded?]

It has been so held under the Land Acquisition Act.

Rangoon Botatoung Co. v. The Collector, Rangoon (12) and Special Officer, Salsette Building Sites v. Deshabhai Bezangi Motiwaka (13).

[LORD DUNEDIN.—The fundamental fact on which appeals to this Board rest is the right of every subject to appeal to His Majesty in Council.]

In the present case the High Court was not acting in a judicial but in an advisory capacity.

Ex parte County Council of Kent (8), Holland S. S. Co. v. Bristol S. N. Co. (14), In re Knight and the Tabernacle Permanent Building Society (6) and Cogstad & Co. v. Newsum, Sons & Co. (15).

[LORD DUNEDIN referred to Steele v. McIntosh Bros. (16) and Thompson v. Glasgow Corporation (7).]

The right of appeal must be given by statute and no such provision exists in the Act under which this decision was given.

The decision was not a "final judgment" within the terms of sec. 15 of the Letters Patent nor was it a decision coming into the category of a judgment in the "original jurisdiction" of the High Court within the meaning of sec. 39 of the Letters Patent.

See sec. 106, sub-sec. (2), Government of India Act, 1915.

The provisions of the English Income Tax Acts are different, for by them the judgment of the Court is not merely advisory but act as a discharge of the assessment, and they expressly provide for appeals.

Sir William Finlay, K. C. and Messrs. Bremner and E. B. Raikes for the Appellants.- Sec. 15 of the Letters Patent contemplates an appeal to His Majesty in Council from every judgment.

Cl. 39 of the Letters Patent uses the words "original jurisdiction" to differentiate from "appellate jurisdiction." The jurisdiction given by sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, would be included in such "original jurisdiction."

There is a marked similarity between the English and the Indian Income Tax Act and it has never been suggested that an appeal would not lie to the House of Lords, under the former.

Under sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, the High Court has to deliver a judgment which is binding on the Revenue Authority and does in effect discharge the assessment.

The whole of the proceedings in the Rangoon case (12) was based on an award which is admittedly on a different footing to a judgment.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Bombay on a question referred to it under sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918. The facts out of which the appeal has arisen are shortly as follows:—For the official year 1919-1920 the Appellant Company was, by the Collector of Income Tax, assessed on a sum of Rs. 61,84,848, alleged to be income earned in the previous year, 1918-1919. The Company claimed to deduct from this assessment a sum of 28 lacs of rupees, paid by it to certain underwriters on an issue of 700,000 preference shares of the Company of Rs. 100 each, as expenditure incurred by the Company for the purpose of making profits in its business. By sec. 9, sub-sec. 1 of this Act it was provided that the tax (i.e., the Income Tax) shall be payable by an assessee under the head of "income derived from business," in respect of the profits of any business carried on by the tax-payer, and by sub-sec. 2, ix, it is further provided "that an allowance is to be made in respect of any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits."

The Appellant Company claimed to deduct from the income on which they had been assessed, this sum of 28 lacs of rupees, paid to the underwriters to help to float the issue of these preference shares. The Collector of Income Tax and the Chief Revenue Authority were of opinion that the payment of the 28 lacs was in reality capital expenditure, inasmuch as it was expended to procure capital, and was not an allowable deduction from the profits of the business under the provisions of this Income Tax Act.

A reference by case stated was accordingly made by these officials to the High Court under sec. 51 of this Income Tax Act of 1918 of the question whether the expenditure of these 28 lacs could be allowed under sec. 9, sub-sec. 2, ix of this statute, as not being in the nature of capital expenditure, nor as having been incurred "solely for the purpose of earning such profits" within the meaning of this sub-section. The High Court delivered judgment on the 28th February 1921, holding that the words "any expenditure (not being capital expenditure) which had been incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits" meant profits generally and not merely profits earned in the year of assessment, but that the expenditure in this case of the 28 lacs was in the nature of capital expenditure, and therefore not an allowable deduction. From this judgment the Appellant Company have by leave of the High Court of Bombay appealed to His Majesty in Council. On the appeal being called on for hearing, a preliminary objection was raised by the Respondent to the effect that the appeal was not competent, inasmuch as no such appeal, it was contended, lay from the decision of the High Court on a reference by case stated under sec. 51 of the statute, that such a decision is only advisory, as it is styled, and was something in the nature of an opinion for the guidance of the Revenue Authorities as to how they should deal with the question referred to the High Court.

The point thus raised, which is one of some difficulty, was very well argued by the counsel on both sides. It is admitted that no statute, Imperial or Indian, is to be found giving expressly, or by implication, a right of appeal, either with or without the leave of the High Court of Bombay, to His Majesty in Council from a decision or order made, or judgment given by the High Court under the provisions of the 51st section of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1918, neither can any such statute be found giving a general right of appeal to His Majesty in Council from the orders or judgments of any class of Courts, as the 3rd section of the English Appellate Jurisdiction Act of 1876 gives a general right of appeal to the House of Lords from the judgments or orders of the Courts therein mentioned. It has been contended, however, that a general right of appeal of a character somewhat similar to that given by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act has been given in Bombay by the 39th clause of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bombay, dated the 28th December 1865. This 39th clause provides that any person may appeal to Her Majesty in Council. First, in any matter (not being of Criminal Jurisdiction) from any final judgment, decree or order of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, made on appeal, and, second, from any final judgment, decree or order made in the exercise of its original jurisdiction by the High Court from which an appeal does not lie to the High Court under the 15th clause.

In their Lordships' view the words "original jurisdiction" are only used in contradistinction to the words "made on appeal" mentioned earlier in the clause; but it is quite obvious that the matters to be dealt with under the original jurisdiction are serious and important, because by the succeeding clause, namely, cl. 40, specified provision is made for obtaining the permission of the Court to appeal to Her Majesty in Council in respect of preliminary or interlocutory judgments, decrees, orders or sentences (not being matters of criminal jurisdiction) of the High Court. The granting of this permission is entirely discretionary with the Court or Judge empowered to give it. There is not an appeal as of right in these interlocutory matters, and but for the provision of cl. 40 an appeal in such matters would be incompetent. Goldring v. La Banque de Hochelaga (1).

It is not pretended that the permission in this clause referred to was ever asked for or obtained in the present case, nor was it argued that the decision was an interlocutory judgment, order, or decree within cl. 40.

In order therefore that the appeal in this case should be held to be competent, the decision and order of the High Court under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act must come within cl. 39 of the Letters Patent. It must be either a final judgment or a final decree or a final order. Now what is a final judgment as understood in English litigation? In Ex parte Moore (2) Lord Selborne laid it down that to constitute an order a final judgment, nothing more is necessary than that there should be a proper litis contestatio and a final adjudication between the parties to it on the merits.

In Onslow v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue (3) it was determined on high authority what it is that amounts to a final judgment. The facts of the case are as follows:—By the 18th section of the Stamp Act of 1870 (34 & 35 Vic. 7) it is provided that, subject to certain regulations (irrelevant for the present purpose), the Commissioners may be required by any person to express an opinion with reference to any executed instrument upon the question whether this instrument is chargeable with any duty, and if so, what amount of duty is to be charged? The Appellants in this case requested the Commissioners to do these things, but were dissatisfied with the amount of the duty which the Commissioners assessed upon the instrument in reference to which they asked their opinion. The 19th section of the statute enables any person so dissatisfied, on payment of the duty assessed, to appeal against the assessment to the Court of Exchequer, and for that purpose to require the Commissioners to state and sign a case upon which their opinion was required and the assessment made by them, which the Commissioners are bound to do. What the Court may do upon the hearing of this case is the matter of importance. It may determine the question submitted, and if the instrument in question be in the opinion of the Court chargeable with any duty, the Court shall assess that duty. If it is decided by Court that the assessment of the Commissioners is erroneous, any excess of duty which may have been paid under this erroneous assessment, or any penalty which has been paid in respect of it shall be ordered by the Court to be repaid to the Appellants with the costs incurred by them in relation to the appeal. But if the assessment of the Commissioners be confirmed by the Court, the costs incurred by them in relation to the appeal are to be paid by the Appellant. On the 21st January 1890, the Court below decided the question submitted in favour of the Commissioners. Onslow appealed, but omitted to serve notice of appeal within the time required by Or. 58, r. 3 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of 1883. In July 1890, he applied to the Court of Appeal to extend the time for appealing, on the ground that doubts had arisen as to whether the order of the Court below was "a judgment" or an "order" within the meaning of r. 15 of the abovementioned rules. This rule ran thus: "No appeal to the Court of Appeal from any interlocutory order or from any order whether final or interlocutory in any matter not being an action shall, except by special leave of the Court of Appeal, be brought after the expiration of twenty-one days, and no other appeal shall be brought except by leave of the Court after the expiration of one year."

Lord Esher delivered the judgment of the Court. After quoting the opinions of several authorities, which as the judgment is printed it is not easy to distinguish from portions of his own judgment, he refers particularly to opinions expressed by Cotton, L. J., in Ex parte Chinery (4) with which Bowen and Kay, L. JJ., had concurred. He said:—

"I think we ought to give to the words 'final judgment' in this sub-section their strict and proper meaning, i.e., a judgment obtained in an action by which a previously existing liability of the Defendant to the Plaintiff is ascertained and established, unless there is something to show an intention to use the words in a more extended sense."

He proceeds :—

"Bowen, L. J., says there is an inherent distinction between judgments and orders, and that the words 'final judgment' have a professional meaning; by which expression I think he meant to say, as Cotton, L. J., had previously said, that a judgment is a decision obtained in an action, and if that was his meaning, both these learned Lords Justices gave judgment to the same effect, and Fry, L. J., agree with him. A 'judgment,' therefore, is a decision obtained in an action, and any other decision is an order . . . . That in my opinion is a proper distinction, and, therefore, in the present case the decision is an order and not a judgment, and the appeal should have been brought within 21 days. Under the circumstances, however, we will, as an indulgence, extend the time for appealing."

This decision clearly establishes that the decision and an order made by the Court under the 51st section of the jurisdiction cannot be held to be a "final judgment" within the meaning of the 39th clause of the Letters Patent, since there is nothing to show an intention in the year 1862 to use those words in a sense more extended than their legal sense.

Lord Lindley said :

"I am of the same opinion. I was at first struck by the fact that the declaration of this Court upon a case stated for the opinion of the Court of Chancery under 13 & 14 Vic. c. 35. is in several instances in that Act called a decree, which is, of course, the equivalent to the term judgment in the Queen's Bench Division. But the distinction just laid down by the Master of the Rolls is the proper one, and has my entire concurrence."

Bowen, L. J., (as he then was) also concurred. The statute to which Lord Lindley referred, provides that the Court on the hearing is to decide the question by the special case referred, and then by its decree declare its opinion upon rights involved therein, but without proceeding to administer any relief consequent upon such declaration. This declaration was, however, to have the same force and effect as if it had been made in a suit instituted by the parties by bill. It would appear to their Lordships that the ruling of the Court there was merely advisory. It is evident from this case of Onslow v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (3) that the use of the words "determine" and "decide," or the direction that money paid in excess is to be refunded or the awarding of costs against the unsuccessful party, are not things which distinguish a judgment from an order where questions are referred to the Courts by case stated.

The word judgment is indeed popularly used in many different senses, as when one says a certain man is a man of sound judgment, meaning that he is possessed of the intellectual faculty of deciding rightly on fact or circumstances, or where even in legal matters the expression of the opinion formed in a case by a Judge who dissents from his colleagues is commonly called his judgment, though it can have no effect whatever on the determination of the suit or action in which it is delivered.

The decision appealed in this case is obviously not a "final decree" within the meaning of cl. 39 of the Letters Patent, neither can it on the ruling of case of Onslow v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue (3) be rightly decided a "final judgment." The question remains is it a "final order," or only advisory, made by the Court in exercise of its consultative jurisdiction?

(3) [1890] 24 Q. B. D. 584; 25 Q. B. D. 465.

One must therefore ask oneself what is the nature and character of the acts which sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act authorises and empowers the High Court to do . . . It provides that if in the course of any assessment under this Act, or in any proceedings in connection therewith (save an immaterial exception) a question arises with reference to the interpretation of any provision of the Act or any rule thereunder, the Chief Revenue Authority may, either on his own motion or on reference from any officer of subordinate authority, draw up a statement of the case, and refer it with his own opinion thereon to the High Court, and shall so refer any such question on the application of the assessee unless he be satisfied that the application is frivolous. The opinion of the Revenue Authority thus dominates and conditions the right of the assessee.

Again it is the duty of the Revenue Official to make the assessment, and it is in the "course" of making it the question which may be referred must arise.

By sub-sec. 2 of this section, the Court may, if not satisfied with the statement contained in the case, send it back for additions or alteration. By sub-sec. 3, it is provided that on the hearing of this case the High Court shall "decide" the questions raised thereby, and shall "deliver judgment" thereon containing the grounds on which the decision is founded, and shall send to the Revenue Authority a copy of this judgment under the seal of the Court and the signature of the Registrar, and the Revenue Authority shall dispose of the case accordingly, or if the case arose from any subordinate Revenue Officer, shall forward a copy of this judgment to such officer, who shall dispose of the case in conformity with it. This last provision merely means that the Revenue Officer, in proceeding with the work in the course of which he was engaged when the question referred arose, shall be guided by the decision given, and shall make his assessment accordingly—the ultimate result being that he assesses the tax-payer at an amount which in his instructed opinion he judges to be right. No suit can be brought to set aside or modify the assessment when so made. The amount of the tax-payers' liability is thus definitely fixed, but nothing more is done. The decision of the High Court does not in any way enforce the discharge of that liability. It would appear clear to their Lordships that the word "judgment" is not here used in its strict legal and proper sense.

It is not an executive document directing something to be done or not to be done, but is merely the expression of the opinions of the majority of the judges who heard the case, together with a statement of the grounds upon which those opinions are based. It amounts only to a ruling that a certain deduction claimed by a tax-payer to be allowed from the sum for which he has been already assessed to Income Tax is not permissible.

Should the tax-payer be sued for the Income Tax for which he has been assessed, proof of the assessment would be but the first step in the litigation, not the final one. These circumstances would, according to the judgment of Cotton, L. J., in The Standard Discount Company v. Otard de la Grange (5), go to show that however the order or decision might definitely and finally fix the amount of the assessment, it was only interlocutory. The Revenue Authorities are undoubtedly bound to act up to the decision of the Court made under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act.

(5) 3 C. P. D. 67 (877).

THE TATA IRON & STEEL CO., LTD. v. THE CHIEF REVENUE AUTHORITY OF BOMBAY.

Bowen, L. J., in his judgment in In re Knight and the Tabernacle Permanent Building Society (6), appears to attach much importance to the fact that in a case where appeal is only made to the Court by special case to exercise its consultative jurisdiction, and make a decision or order of an advisory character, the arbitrator or other person asking for the opinion is not legally bound to act upon it, though he might be morally bound to do so. In a Scotch case of Peter Johnston v. Glasgow Corporation (7), where the reference was precisely the same in form as in the other case, the Court held that the Sheriff who had stated the case for the opinion of the Court was bound to act upon its decision, and would not be entitled to disregard it. It does not appear to their Lordships that the fact that the functionary who states a special case for the opinion of the Court is or is not bound to act upon it necessarily determines whether the order and decision of the Court is or is not merely advisory. In order to determine whether an order made by a Court on a case stated is final or merely advisory, it is necessary to examine closely the language of the enactment, whether statute, rule or order, giving the power to state a case.

When a case is stated for the "opinion" of the Court, that word would serve primâ facie to indicate that the order made by the Court was only advisory. Where the case is referred for the "decision" or "determination" of a question, there is a primâ facie difficulty in holding that the order embodying this determination or decision is advisory, but the use of these words or one of them is not decisive. In the case of In re Knight and the Tabernacle Permanent Building Society (6) a case was stated for the opinion of the Court as to whether this Society had power to alter its rules in a certain way. The order made on this question was held to be advisory, but in giving judgment Lord Esher dealt with the case of Ex parte County Council of Kent (8). In that case sec. 29 of the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vic. 41) provided "that if any question arises or is about to arise as to whether any business power, duty or liability is or is not transferred to any County Council or joint committee under this Act, that question, without prejudice to any other mode of trying it, may on the application of the Chairman of Quarter Sessions or of the County Council, committee or other local authority concerned, be referred for decision to the High Court of Justice in such summary manner as, subject to any rules of Court, may be directed by the Court, and the Court, after hearing such parties and taking such evidence (if any) as it thinks fit, shall decide the question."

The Court in this case had only to deal with the question, which set of authorities should be charged with such and such portions of administration. Lord Esher criticising this decision in the case said :—

"Where a statute provided that a case might be stated for the decision of the Court it was held that though the language might primâ facie import that there has to be the equivalent of a judgment or order, yet when the context was looked at it appeared that the jurisdiction of the Court appealed to was only consultative, and that there was nothing which amounted to a judgment or order."

It would appear to their Lordships that having regard to the authorities cited, and for the reasons already stated, the decision, judgment or order made by the Court under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act in this case, was merely advisory, and not in the proper and legal sense of the term final, and thus so far as these considerations are concerned that the appeal is incompetent.

Sir William Finlay, however, in the last resort contended that in any event his client had, by virtue of the Royal Prerogative, a right to appeal to His Majesty in Council. He did not show how it was open to him, as the case stands, to rely upon the Royal Prerogative.

In any view it could not be exercised without leave granted. And without going the length of saying that this case is on a level with the case of Attorney-General v. De Keyser's Hotel (9), referred to in the argument, where the question was fully considered, their Lordships would be slow to advise His Majesty to grant special leave to appeal when the subject had been adequately dealt with in the Letters Patent.

Their Lordships will therefore advise His Majesty that the appeal is incompetent and must be dismissed, and that the Appellants must pay the Respondent's costs.

Local investigation, result of, if to be lightly reversed except upon clearly defined and sufficient grounds—Remand order, findings by lower Court inconsistent with, legality of.

Interference with the result of a long and careful local investigation except upon clearly defined and sufficient grounds is to be deprecated. It is not safe for a Court to act as an expert and to overrule the elaborate report of a commissioner whose integrity and carefulness are unquestioned, whose careful and laborious execution of his task was proved by his report, and who had not blindly adopted the assertions of either party.

In dealing with a case on remand the lower Court is not entitled to take a view inconsistent with that followed in the order of remand.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd of September 1919 against the decree of Babu Matilal Roy, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Faridpur, dated the 30th of July 1919.

In the case out of which the present appeal arose the High Court made an order of remand directing the lower Court to make a decree on the basis of the thak map and not of the survey map, after having the former relaid by a commissioner with as much accuracy as practicable. The commissioner accordingly prepared a map, but the Subordinate Judge disagreed with the commissioner and made a decree on the basis of a tri-junction point as depicted in the survey map, which was found unreliable by the High Court when the order of remand was made. Against this decree the present appeal was preferred to the High Court.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The subject-matter of this litigation is a large tract of alluvial land formed in the bed of the river Ganges, also called Kirtinasha, in the District of Faridpur. The Plaintiffs claim the land as included within village Bhaga. The Defendants claim the land as comprised within village Sakhipura. The present suit was commenced on the 26th September 1907 and terminated in the trial Court on the 25th April 1910 with a partial decree in favour of the Plaintiffs. The Defendants thereupon appealed to this Court. On the 31st July 1914 the appeal was allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge was discharged. It was declared that the Plaintiffs were entitled to possession of such portion of the disputed lands as lay within the thak boundaries of the property known as Bhaga char, char Datali and char Lasti. The case was remanded to the Subordinate Judge in order that the thak boundaries of the chars mentioned might be relaid by a commissioner who would be free to take evidence to determine the tri-junction point from which the thak line was to be relaid. The judgment of this Court which has been reported—Amrita Sundari v. Serajuddin (1)—shows that one of the points argued in the appeal was, whether the decree was to be made on the basis of the thak map or the survey map. This Court came to the conclusion that the decree should be based not on the survey map but on the thak map, after the latter had been relaid with as much accuracy as practicable. We need not recapitulate all the reasons assigned in support of this view; but one circumstance may be usefully recalled. This Court found that the features of the land had been changed by diluvion which took place in the interval between the thak proceedings and the revenue survey; consequently, any disagreement between the thak line and the survey line was attributable, primâ facie, not to the inaccuracy of the thak measurements but to the altered condition of the lands surveyed. The result was that the case was remitted to the trial Court for reconsideration.

The Subordinate Judge after remand appointed a commissioner to hold a local investigation and to prepare a case map so that the direction of this Court might be carried out. The commissioner received the commission on the 8th December 1915 and submitted his final report on the 21st January 1917. The report of the commissioner and the annexures thereto leave no room for controversy that the enquiry was conducted by him with great thoroughness. There was a dispute before the commissioner as to how the thak line was to be relaid. The Defendants urged that the starting point to be adopted was a point towards the south-west of the disputed land, where the Deara authorities had, in 1878, posted an iron pillar to indicate the tri-junction point of mouzas Bhaga, Nimua and the river. The Plaintiffs urged, on the other hand, that the starting point should be taken towards the south-east of the disputed land as the tri-junction point of mouzas Bhaga, Nimua and Tarabunia. The commissioner rejected the second alternative and gave primâ facie sufficient reasons for his opinion that the tri-junction point of Bhaga, Nimua and Tarabunia could not be ascertained with reasonable approach to accuracy, and that the tri-junction points as identified by the Defendants were correct. The commissioner further explicitly recorded his view that the thak map of char Bhaga could not be correctly relaid except by the process already adopted by the Deara authorities. He then prepared a map on this basis and showed the portion of the disputed land which fell within the village claimed by the Plaintiffs.

The Subordinate Judge was not satisfied with the result of this enquiry. He held that the south-eastern point was entitled to preference over the south-western point on account of its proximity to the disputed land. He then proceeded to investigate whether the tri-junction point at the south-east corner could be presumed to be identical with the revenue survey point and he came to the conclusion that a presumption should be made in favour of the identity of the two points. The Subordinate Judge argued that as the south-east tri-junction point was in the middle of the island on the bank of a canal, it was not likely to have been affected by river action during the season which intervened between the thak proceedings and the revenue survey. The course adopted by the Subordinate Judge is in our opinion obviously inadmissible. In the first place he assumes that there had been no changes in the situation of the disputed land during the period mentioned. This is directly contrary to the finding contained in the judgment of this Court. As that judgment had become final, neither of the parties litigant was entitled to get round the conclusions then adopted on evidence. In the second place, the Subordinate Judge assumes that the tri-junction point had been correctly depicted on the survey map. This was negatived by the judgment of this Court pronounced on the last occasion. What has happened in substance is that the Subordinate Judge after remand has made a decree on the basis of the survey map which was found unreliable by this Court when the order of remand was made.

The Subordinate Judge stated that there was wide divergence between the boundary lines obtained by the adoption of the two starting points. He had consequently to face the question, which of the two positions should be accepted. He rejected the south-west point on the arbitrary ground of its distance from the disputed land. But if a map has been accurately drawn, it should, in theory at least, be immaterial, from what starting point it was relaid. Accordingly, the root question was, which tri-junction point had been ascertained with precision. The commissioner selected the south-western point. There is this to be urged in support of his view that he thus accepted a point which had been previously adopted by the Deara authorities in 1878. The Subordinate Judge, on the other hand, preferred the south-eastern point. But that point itself had not been ascertained with accuracy; its identification was based on the erroneous and inadmissible assumption that the survey map was accurate and reliable. We are consequently of opinion that the Subordinate Judge has not only taken a view inconsistent with that followed in the order of remand but that his conclusions are based on unwarranted assumptions.

The Subordinate Judge states in one portion of his judgment that the thak lines do not agree with the revenue survey lines. This in fact was emphasised in the order of remand and reasons were given why the thak map should in the present case have preference over the survey map. The Respondents have incidentally suggested that it is probable that neither the thak map nor the survey map is entirely reliable. If this be the fact, the Respondents plainly cannot be benefited thereby. The only result of such a conclusion would be that the foundation of their claim would disappear. The burden lies upon the Plaintiffs to establish that the disputed land is within the village held by them. If the boundaries of their village cannot be located with fair approach to precision, no decree can be made in their favour. We need not develop this point further, because the Defendants have not, in this appeal, attacked the entire decree and have proceeded on the assumption that the thak boundary line was correctly relaid by the commissioner.

We may point out finally that the method adopted by the Subordinate Judge was liable to lead to error and was disapproved by the Judicial Committee in the case of Surat Soondari v. Prosonno Coomar Tagore (2). In that case, a question arose as to title to char lands thrown up by the river Brahmaputra. A commissioner was appointed to make a local investigation and the trial Court made a decree in conformity with his report. This Court, on appeal, adversely criticised the report and made a decree "on an examination of the maps filed in the cause and on the explanations and arguments of the pleaders on both sides." The Judicial Committee reversed the decision of this Court and deprecated interference with the result of a long and careful local investigation except upon clearly defined and sufficient grounds. The same view was adopted in Monkee Dumbar Sahee v. Bhullundur Sahee (3) and Kamini Kishore v. Parbartya Tipperah Raj (4). In circumstances like these, it is not safe for a Court to act as an expert and to overrule the elaborate report of a commissioner whose integrity was unquestioned, whose careful and laborious execution of his task was proved by his report, and who had not blindly adopted the assertions of either party. We need not go minutely into the details, but we see no ground for impugning the accuracy of the conclusion of the commissioner upon what must be regarded as the broad and cardinal issue whereon the determination of this case depends. On the other hand, we are unable to see any satisfactory grounds for the assumption which is the foundation of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and is in conflict with the order of remand.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree made by the Subordinate Judge on the 30th July modified and a decree made in favour of the Plaintiffs in accordance with the report of the commissioner Babu Joges Chandra Das Gupta, dated 21st January 1917. The report of the commissioner and the map annexed thereto (before it was modified according to the direction of the Subordinate Judge issued on the 21st July 1919) will be treated as part of this decree. The Appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court. The hearing fee is assessed at ten gold mohurs.

LALIT MOHAN ROY and ors., Plaintiffs, Opposite Party.

Contract, oral—Judgment debt, promise to pay, after time, in consideration of abstention from execution, if valid—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 25 (3)—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 19, if applicable—Cause of action, new.

Oral agreement for payment of a judgment-debt on a date when the application for its enforcement will be barred, in consideration of the Plaintiffs not seeking to enforce the same meanwhile, is valid in law as a new promise for a new consideration, which is a cause of action in itself. Sec. 19 of the Limitation Act which requires only the written admission of an existing debt and not a new consideration, nor an actual proof of promise to pay, does not apply, nor does sec. 25, Indian Contract Act, which applies to the case of a promise to pay a barred debt.

DUKHI SAHU v. MAHOMED BIKHU (1) and HEERA LAL v. DHUNPAT SINGH (2) referred to.

This was a Rule issued against the decree of R. R. Mukherjee, Esq., Munsif, Burdwan, exercising Small Cause Court Jurisdiction, dated the 16th January 1923.

The Opposite Party obtained a decree against the Petitioner in the fourth Court of the Munsif of Burdwan exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes, on 28th February 1918 and refrained from executing the same upon the Defendant Petitioner's oral promise to pay the whole amount decreed with interest at the rate of Rs. 12 per cent. per annum in April 1921 when the decree would become barred. The present suit was brought on 31st March 1922 for recovery of the amount which the Defendant orally promised to pay. The question in this rule was whether the present suit is maintainable.

Moulvi A. S. M. Akram for the Petitioner.

Babu Panchanan Chaudhuri for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an application on the part of the Defendant under sec. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It appears that the Plaintiffs, on the 28th February 1918, obtained a judgment against the Defendant and certain co-sharers of the Defendant for rent. On the 11th February 1920, according to the Plaintiffs' case, the Plaintiffs entered into a contract with the Defendant that in consideration that the Plaintiffs would not seek to enforce their judgment, the Defendant would pay the amount thereof with interest at 12 per cent. per annum in April 1921. By April 1921 the original judgment would become and has become time-barred and execution proceedings could no longer be taken upon it. The present suit was brought against the Defendant on the 31st March 1922. The Plaintiffs have proved the contract alleged and the present application is based upon the contention that such a contract as is alleged and proved is not valid in law. It is pointed out that the contract sued upon is a verbal contract and it is said that as sec. 19 of the Limitation Act requires the acknowledgment to be in writing it stands to reason that such a verbal contract as here alleged cannot be enforceable. That contention seems to be unsound. All that is required by sec. 19 of the Limitation Act is the acknowledgment of an existing debt. A new consideration is not required and an actual promise to pay is not required. Acknowledgment alone is required. That must be in writing and signed by the Defendant and the original debt can be enforced. But a new promise for a new consideration is a cause of action in itself and is in no way obnoxious to the Limitation Act. [See per Mitter, J., in Dukhi Sahu v. Mahomed Bikhu (1)]. Having regard to the time at which it was to take effect the Defendant's promise as pleaded may very well have been intended as a fresh bargain and not as a mere giving of time by Plaintiffs for payment of the old debt. The learned Judge has found a contract and there is nothing to show that he is wrong.

The present case may be viewed in the light of the 3rd clause of sec. 25 of the Contract Act, a clause which, as has been held in most of the Courts in India, covers the case of a judgment-debt. Sec. 25 is directed to stating by way of exception that in certain cases an agreement although without consideration is not void. One of these cases is a case of promise to pay a barred debt if that promise is made in writing and is signed by the party to be charged. In such a case as that although the judgment-debt is barred the promise to pay it although there is no new consideration would be good if in writing and signed. The present case has these differences that the judgment-debt was not barred at the time; that there was good consideration; but the promise is not in writing or signed. On principle where a person has given consideration for the purpose of obtaining a fresh promise to be acted on as in this case at a time, namely, April 1921, when all remedy under the previous judgment would be barred, such a promise seems valid and enforceable. The case of Heera Lal v. Dhunpat Singh (2), especially the first branch of the decision, is in the Plaintiffs' favour.

No doubt there is room with the assistance of a certain amount of perjury for driving a gap through the provisions of the law of limitation by setting up a false verbal agreement. At the same time the Courts have always to distinguish between true and false evidence and this is by no means the only kind of case in which they are likely to be called upon to do so. We cannot satisfy ourselves that there is any objection in law to the Plaintiffs' case as pleaded and as found.

The only other observation which seems necessary is this, that this suit in no wise is a suit upon a judgment nor is it a proceeding under a judgment to enforce a judgment. Indeed the whole logic of the matter is that the judgment was superseded by the new agreement. The suit is upon a contract made no doubt with reference to an amount found due by the Plaintiffs' judgment. But it is a suit on a simple contract. No exception can be taken to the frame of the suit. Under these circumstances this rule must be discharged with costs one gold mohur.

CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

APP. NO. 400 OF 1923.

GREAVES, J.
PANTON, J.

1923,
Heard, 21 and 22, November.
1924,
Judgment,
3, January.

BHOLA NATH MITTER, Accused, Appellant,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR.

Hindu law—Inter-marriage amongst castes—Marriage between kayastha and dome, if valid— Kayasthas, if sudras*—Domes, if Hindus and* sudras.

BHOLA NATH MITTER v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

It is the settled law of this Province that kayasthas are sudras.

A dome is a Hindu and a sudra.

A marriage between a kayastha and a dome performed with due rites is valid in law.

GREAVES, J.—A marriage, if otherwise valid, does not become invalid because it is opposed to the usages of the community and is not recognised by them as valid.

This was an appeal preferred on the 17th July 1923 against the conviction under secs. 497 and 498, I. P. C., and sentences of rigorous imprisonment for 6 months and 10 days under the former section and of 3 months under the latter section (sentences to run concurrently) passed by the Honorary Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, Northern Division (Babu Rajendra Nath Roy), on the 9th July 1923.

The facts of the case are as follows :—

The prosecution story was that complainant Aprokash Ch. Ghose married Susila Dasi under the proper Hindu rites in the year 1913, that they were living as man and wife but in September 1923 when she was living with the consent and approval of her husband at her brother Kristo Lal Bosu's house in Chandernagore, she eloped with Bhola Nath Mitter, the accused in this case. Searches were made at various places but she could not be traced till 19th December last, when she and Bhola Nath were seen coming away from Elphinstone Bioscope in a taxi. Warrants were then issued and they both were arrested on 29th December last at Tagore Castle Street.

Accused Bhola Nath pleaded not guilty. He said that this case was the result of enmity between him and Sukumar and Kristo who had brought several cases against him. He further said that as he was making tadbir for Susila, who was an heiress of a large fortune, in her projected case against Sukumar and his cousin Kristo, they had brought this false case against him.

Accused was tried for offences under secs. 497 and 498, I. P. C.

The trying Magistrate in convicting the accused held as follows :—

"Sec. 497 requires that the accused must have had sexual intercourse with Susila whom he knows or has reason to believe to be the wife of complainant without the latter's consent and connivance.

"In this case no direct evidence of sexual intercourse has been given and I think such evidence is hardly possible in the present case. But best proof available has been produced. It has been shown that accused and Susila were seen one morning about 9 or 10 months ago at Chandernagore Railway Station and since then Susila was not found at Chandernagore and her whereabouts could not be known till her arrest at Tagore Castle Street along with accused. . . . .

"The accused and Susila are a young man and a woman; their familiarities and the opportunities obtained coupled with the fact that they were known to live as man and wife point strongly to an inference of the accused's guilt and I think sufficient to establish the fact of sexual intercourse.

There is no doubt about the marriage between Aprokash and Susila. Independent and reliable witnesses who were present at the marriage were examined and they have proved it to my satisfaction. Besides in French Chandernagore all marriages have to be registered and there is clear evidence to show that this marriage was also registered. There is also evidence that the accused was present at the marriage being a relative of Purna and had free access into their family.

BHOLA NATH MITTER v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

"It has been seriously contended that this marriage is not valid in law. It is said that Aprokash being a kayastha-sudra cannot marry Susila, a dome-antaja under the Hindu law. The defence has examined two Pundits to show that a marriage between a kayastha and a dome is not permissible under Hindu law.

"A vakil of High Court who is also secretary to the Bangiya Kayastha Somaj has been examined to show that there is no custom for a marriage like this. But in view of the ruling in Muthusami Mundaliar v. Masilamani (2) and Rajani Nath v. Nitai Chandra (5). I cannot but hold that the present marriage is legally valid. As regards the custom of the kayastha marrying in the family of Purna and Kristo there is satisfactory evidence to show that Purna who is a brother of Kristo has married the accused's sister and Kristo has married his sister-in-law. His family name no doubt shows that the accused himself is a kayastha by caste.

"There is nothing to show that the accused had complainant's connivance or consent in his illegal intercourse with Susila.

"For all the above reasons I am clearly of opinion that the provisions of sec. 497, I. P. C., have been complied with and the accused is guilty under that section.

"Sec. 498.—From the evidence it is clear that accused brought Susila knowing her to be the wife of Aprokash and detained her at 8, Tagore Castle Street with intent to have illegal intercourse and has committed illegal intercourse with her and so has committed an offence under this section."

Mr. B. L. Mitter and Mr. A. K. Bose for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

PANTON, J.—The Appellant Bhola Nath Mitter has been convicted by Mr. Rajendra Nath Roy, an Honorary Presidency Magistrate, of offences punishable under secs. 497 and 498, I. P. C. It is found that he enticed or took away one Sikhar Basini Dasi alias Susila Bala Dasi alias Renu whom he knew or had reason to believe to be the wife of Aprokash Chandra Ghose with intent to have illicit intercourse with her; and that between September 1922 and the 24th October 1922 and again between the 15th November 1922 and the 29th December 1922 he committed adultery with her. There is evidence that Aprokash is by caste a kayastha and Susila a dome; the learned Magistrate has dealt with the case on this footing and these facts are not now disputed. Susila, however, in spite of this humble origin appears to belong to a family of some wealth; and the defence set up by the Appellant in the Court below was that a false charge had been brought against him in order to defeat his efforts to secure for Susila a legacy of Rs. 50,000 due to her under her mother's Will.

For the Appellant it has been urged that Aprokash and Susila were not validly married; that the fact that she was taken from the custody of her husband or from a person having care of her on his behalf and of the subsequent adultery have not been proved; and that the charge, so far as it related to the offence of adultery, was defective in form inasmuch as the precise dates of the alleged adultery were not specified and instead it was only charged to have been committed between the dates just now stated.

BHOLA NATH MITTER v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

It will be convenient to deal in the first place with the latter contentions.

There is ample evidence that in September 1922 Susila was, with the assent of Aprokash, living in the house of her brother Kristo Lal, that she left this house and was seen by a motor car driver at Chandernagore Railway Station in the company of Bhola Nath. Aprokash and Kristo Lal say that they searched for the pair but did not discover their whereabouts until December. They were traced to a house in Tagore Castle Lane, where, according to the evidence Susila had been living since September and had been visited by Bhola Nath. The evidence as to their conduct there fully justifies the inference that sexual intercourses occurred during the periods specified in the charge. It was clearly impossible in circumstances such as these that particular dates could be assigned in the charge for the intercourse alleged and we are satisfied that the manner in which the charges were framed were, in the circumstances of the present case, in full compliance with what the law requires.

There can be no doubt upon the evidence that a regular form of marriage was gone through by the parties in the presence of the Appellant in French Chandernagore and that this marriage was registered officially with the local authorities. But the question raised in appeal, and this is the main question, is whether the marriage is one which is valid under Hindu law. The learned Magistrate has dealt with this point on the footing that both parties being sudras their union is in this respect valid. It is not disputed before us that marriages between members of different sudra castes are valid under the Hindu law. But it is urged that this marriage was contrary to law both because Aprokash as a kayastha is above and because Susila as a dome is outside the sudra class. Both branches of this argument appear to have been put forward before the learned Magistrate; and in rejecting them he has relied on the decision of this Court in Biswanath Das Ghose v. Sarosibala Dasi (1) and on the case of Muthusami Mundaliar v. Masilamani (2) respectively. In the former case it was held, following the decision of Asita Mohon Ghose Moulick v. Nirode Mohon Ghose Moulik (3), that "it must therefore be taken, as the learned Judges said in the above mentioned case, that the Bengali kayasthas are treated as sudras in this Court." Some attempt was made to show us that this is an incorrect decision but I am satisfied that the law on the subject is now well settled so far as this Province is concerned.

In support of the second part of his contention Mr. Mukherji urged that a dome is not a member of a sub-division of a sudra caste but an outcaste, untouchable, and not a member of the Hindu community. He supports this contention by reference to the articles on the dome caste in Risley's Tribes and Castes of Bengal and Crooke's Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, laying particular stress upon the opinions of the learned authors as to the aboriginal origin of the domes. The low social status of the dome community is a fact for which no authority is needed; but I cannot assent to the proposition that people of aboriginal origin can have no place in the Hindu system. He refers us to the Text of Manu, Chap. X, verses 16, 30, 51, 56, laying particular stress on verse 53. "Let no man, who regards his duty, religious and civil, hold any . . . intercourse with them; let their transactions be confined to themselves, and their marriages only between equals" (Manu's Institutes of Hindu Law). The degraded condition of the community is here emphasised and intercourse with its members is deprecated. But this carries the matter little further; and I am not prepared to say that the institution against inter-marriage is such as would render such a union, otherwise regularly celebrated, invalid at the present day. On the other hand, there is distinct authority of the Courts to support the view taken by the learned Magistrate, though, it is true, no decision which I can find relates directly to the dome community. The learned vakil has invited us to hold that the case of Muthusami v. Masilamani (2), on which the Court below has relied, was wrongly decided inasmuch as it proceeded on two incorrect assumptions: (1) that every one not a member of the twice-born caste is a sudra and (2) that the validity of a marriage is for the caste to decide. As to the second point it is only necessary to refer to the concluding portion of the judgment of Sankaran Nair, J., at page 356, where he finds the marriage in question valid not only on the ground of custom and because it was recognised by the caste but also "because it is in conformity with Hindu law which does not prohibit marriages between any persons who are not dwijas or twice-born persons."

As to the first point, the opinion of the learned Judge, expressed at pp. 346 and 347 of the report, is founded on ample authority, including a decision of this Court—Upoma Kuchani v. Balaram Dhubi (4). The latter case is here of particular importance since it upheld the validity of a marriage between persons, one of whom was an outcaste.

(2) I. L. R. 33 Mad 342 (1909).
(4) I. L. R. 15 Cal. 708 (1888).

I am of opinion then that however great the repugnance with which a marriage such as this one may be regarded by members of the communities concerned, it is valid in law if performed with due rites.

The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

GREAVES, J.—I agree with the judgment which has just been delivered. Susila was married to Aprokash Chandra Ghose according to Hindu rites and presumably before her marriage had lived as a Hindu. I think therefore that, although she was a dome by birth, she must be taken to be a sudra and upon the authorities referred to by my learned brother it would appear that marriages between different sub-divisions of the sudra caste are valid. Upon the authorities it does not appear that if a marriage is otherwise valid it becomes invalid because it is opposed to the usages of the community and is not recognised by them as valid.

VISCOUNT FINLAY.	SATISH CHANDRA
LORD DUNEDIN.	CHATTERJI, since deceased (now represented by Bon Behari

SIR JOHN EDGE.	Appellant,
MR. AMEER ALI.	v.

Judgment, 27, April.	Respondents.

Commission, evidence taken, when should be used—Fraud and collusion, charges of—Onus—How discharged.

Evidence taken on commission should only be permitted to be used where the witness is proved to be too ill to give his evidence in Court or is absent for other sufficient reason.

Charges of fraud and collusion must be proved by those who make them—proved by established facts or inferences legitimately drawn from those facts taken together as a whole. Suspicions and surmises and conjecture are not permissible substitutes for those facts or those inferences, but that by no means requires that every puzzling artifice or contrivance resorted to by one accused of fraud must necessarily be completely unravelled and cleared up and made plain before a verdict can be properly found against him. If this were not so, many a clever and dexterous knave would escape.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court in Bengal, dated the 8th July 1919, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas, dated the 2nd April 1917.

The suit was instituted by the Plaintiffs against the Appellant and others to set aside an auction sale for arrears of revenue on the ground that the sale had been effected by collusion and fraud. Towzi No. 2402 on the roll of the Collector of the 24-Parganas was the property sold.

It was an estate paying an annual revenue of Rs. 398-9-0 and owned as to 2/3rd by the Plaintiffs, the remaining one-third belonging to Hemada Kantha Roy (deceased), the father of the Defendant No. 4, who had mortgaged his share to the Plaintiffs. In September 1914 default was made in payment of the revenue due (Rs. 26-4-8) in respect to Hemada's share.

The entire estate was thereupon put up for sale and was purchased by the Appellant on the 8th January 1915. Hemada was ill at the time and died a day or two later.

An application was made by the Plaintiffs to have the sale set aside but the application was refused by the Commissioner and the Plaintiffs accordingly instituted their suit for a declaration that the sale was illegal and had been brought about by fraud and conspiracy on the part of the 1st three Defendants and prayed for a cancellation of the sale.

The first Defendant (who alone defended the suit) was the auction-purchaser, the 2nd Defendant was alleged to be an old enemy of the Plaintiffs and the 3rd Defendant was the manager of Hemada Kantha Roy who was responsible for the payment of revenue on behalf of his master. The defence stated that the Appellant (1st Defendant) had purchased the property entirely on his own account.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit found that the sale was brought about by a "nefarious plan hatched by Defendants Nos. 2 and 3," but in his opinion the evidence did not go far enough to prove collusion between them and Defendant No. 1, and he dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit.

The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court (Mookerjee and Panton, JJ.), who after hearing additional evidence reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

In their judgment they observed :—

"It is indisputable that default was deliberately made by the third Defendant in the payment of Government revenue due on the share of his master Hemada Kantha Roy, the predecessor-in-interest of the fourth Defendant. As the Subordinate Judge finds, the object was to injure the Plaintiffs, and the step was taken in collusion with the second Defendant who, it was arranged, would purchase the entire estate, free from encumbrances at the revenue sale. There is some discrepancy in the evidence, as to the exact proportion in which the spoil was to be divided; the details of the proposed distribution are, however, not very material for our present purpose, and we need only observe that the story seems plausible that the third Defendant looked forward to a share for himself and another share for his master. The complicity of the second Defendant in what the Subordinate Judge calls a 'nefarious plan' is proved beyond challenge."

They were of opinion that the Appellant was taken into confidence and apprised of the scheme, and an arrangement was made that his name should be used at the sale and the purchase made for the benefit of the 1st three Defendants. In the circumstances they decided that the Appellant was unable to defend his title which had been obtained through fraud and they decreed the suit in respect of a two-third share of the estate sold, and directed the Appellant to execute a conveyance of such share upon payment of a proportionate share of the purchase money.

From this decree the purchaser appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and J. M. Parikh for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and W. Wallach for the Respondents.

The arguments were directed to the evidence.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 8th July 1919, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which reversed a decree, dated the 2nd April 1917, of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court of the 24-Parganas.

The main question for decision in the appeal is whether or not a sale of a revenue-paying estate purporting to have been carried out under the Bengal Revenue Sales Act, No. XI, 1859, in respect of unpaid arrears of revenue, and purchased by the Appellant Satish Chandra Chatterji (now dead), was good and valid. The Subordinate Judge before whom the case was tried decided this question in the affirmative; the High Court decided it in the negative and made the decree hereafter mentioned.

For convenience' sake the several parties to the suit may be thus denoted: the Appellant by his first name, Satish; the first four Respondents by their family name of Roy; the fifth Respondent by the name of Akshoy; the sixth by that of Sitanath; and the formal Respondent by the name of Kali Dasi.

The facts out of which the appeal has arisen are somewhat complicated. They may be stated as briefly as is needful as follows. The estate purported to be sold was the Towzi No. 2402. It was entered on the Roll of the Collector of the 24-Parganas as subject to the payment to the Government of an annual revenue of Rs. 398-9 annas. It comprised two villages, Atpur and Panditnagar. It was held jointly by one Hemada Kantha Roy, the father of the formal Respondent, and the Roys. The estate had never been formally or legally partitioned nor the entire revenue apportioned, but the co-owners arranged among themselves to pay to the Government separately their respective appropriate shares of the revenue. Hemada paid separately one-third, and the Roys together two-thirds. Hemada had, some years before the sale complained of, mortgaged his one undivided third of this zemindari to a certain Shebait, living in the vicinity, who subsequently assigned this mortgage to the Roys, the members of that family thus becoming owners of two undivided thirds of the Towzi and mortgagees of the remaining undivided one-third. At the date of the alleged sale a sum of Rs. 3,655 odd was due upon this mortgage. In the month of January 1915, if not for some time earlier, Hemada was very ill. In the early days of that month he was confined to bed, and died on the 10th day of it. Hemada for some considerable time had had in his employment as manager of his estate Sitanath, the sixth Respondent. This manager—not from want of funds, that is not suggested—left unpaid the instalment, due in the month of September 1915, of the revenue payable in respect of his employer's share. This instalment only amounted to the paltry sum of Rs. 26-4-8. It is charged that Sitanath withheld the payment of this instalment deliberately with the design of bringing about a sale by the Government of the whole Towzi, the revenue never having been apportioned, with the result that the mortgage held by the Roys would, if the sale took place, be annulled, to their great pecuniary loss. The revenue being thus in arrear, the Collector, acting under the powers conferred upon him by the provisions of the Bengal Revenue Sales Act, No. XI, 1859, on the 8th January 1915, put up for sale the interests of all the joint co-owners in the entire Towzi, and sold it to Satish, who was apparently the highest bidder at the auction, for a sum of Rs. 9,200. The Roys immediately appealed from the order of the Collector, declaring Satish the purchaser, to the Commissioner. It is said that they based their application to have the sale set aside on the ground of fraud as well as of irregularity in the mode in which the sale was constituted and conducted. No evidence has, however, been given to establish this, nor have the Board been referred to any authority to show that the Commissioner would have had jurisdiction to inquire into such a charge, and the terms of the order made by the Commissioner on the 1st June 1915, strongly indicate that no question of fraud was raised before him. The crucial part of the order runs as follows :—

"It does not appear that there was any irregularity in this case which would justify me in annulling the sale, under sec. 25 of Act XI of 1859. It also appears from the Collector's Report, No. C 257-6-15, dated the 21st May 1915, that there is no ground of hardship or injustice on which I could recommend annulment of the sale, under sec. 26. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

"F. J. MONAHAN,
"Commissioner.

"The 1st June 1915."

It appears to their Lordships to be very strange indeed that no reference is made to the charge of fraud if it had, in fact, been put forward.

On the 18th August 1915, the Roys accordingly instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. They made the following persons Defendants: Satish, No. 1; Akshoy, No. 2; Sitanath, No. 3; and Kali Dasi, No. 4, as a formal Defendant.

The causes of action set forth in the plaint are substantially the following, that the Mouzah Atpur, being situated on the bank of the River Hooghly, afforded good sites for jute mills, that it was, in its then state, worth Rs. 15,000, that it was worth much more than Rs. 9,200, that Sitanath, with the object of inflicting pecuniary loss upon the Plaintiffs and serving his own pecuniary interests, in violation of his duty to his employer, entered into a conspiracy with Akshoy (an enemy of the Plaintiffs with whom they had been engaged in litigation) and Satish to purchase the aforesaid Towzi at the auction sale for the benefit of Sitanath, Satish and Akshoy; that with this end in view and to effect this purpose Sitanath abstained from depositing with the proper officer the sum of Rs. 26-4-8; that in further pursuance of this conspiracy these three co-conspirators caused the notices and proclamations of the sale proper to be given and made in such sales to be suppressed and false returns to be filed, thereby preventing the Gomasta of the Plaintiffs and also the general public from knowing anything about the wilful withholding of the aforesaid instalment of the Government revenue or of the impending sale by auction, by reason whereof no local purchasers attended the sale, and the zemindari was sold at an undervalue—Rs. 9,200. The relief claimed was: (1) that the sale should be set aside as invalid; (2) that if in the opinion of the Court the sale was not liable to be set aside that a decree might be passed ordering the Defendant Satish to convey to the Plaintiffs and to the daughter and heiress of Hemada the taluk sold at the auction sale; (3) that an ad interim injunction might be granted restraining the taking possession of the taluk by the purchaser and for general relief.

These are serious and damaging charges. It appears to their Lordships difficult to understand how any man, even with the feeblest feeling of honour or sense of shame, could, if he were innocent, abstain from filing a defence to such accusations and at the earliest moment availing himself of the opportunity of going into Court to meet his accusers face to face. Well, to this plaint Sitanath did not file any written statement or give any evidence. Akshoy, a man of weath, as he has admitted to be, did not file any written statement, and he and his two sons only gave evidence when, by the wise and peremptory action of the High Court, they were forced to do so.

Satish, on the 10th January 1916, did, four months all but eight days from the filing of the plaint, file a written statement. The evidence which he contrived to have substituted for testimony in open Court, in the presence of his accusers, will be presently referred to. In this statement he traverses all the allegations of fraud contained in the plaint, denies that he is related in any way to Akshoy as therein alleged, and alleges that the property purchased by him was not worth more than Rs. 9,200, that he purchased it for his own use and benefit without any connection with Akshoy or Sitanath. On the 15th January 1916, issues, eight in number, were settled on these pleadings. Of these only four seem of importance at this stage. They are: (1) Have the Plaintiffs any cause of action, and does the plaint disclose any cause of action against the Defendant No. 1 (i.e., Satish)? (2) Is the suit, in its present form, maintainable? (3) Was the revenue sale brought about by collusion and fraud on the part of Defendants? (4) Is the sale liable to be set aside as illegal and ultra vires? The trial did not come on till the 28th February 1917, over thirteen months after the issues had been settled. Satish was in no hurry to vindicate his character. On his behalf three adjournments were obtained for the filing of his own written statement. On the 21st June 1916, an order, signed I. G. Goswani S. J., was made which runs thus:—

"I think the Defendant should not be compelled to attend Court for deposing as he has got a big hydrocele from which watery substance comes, and he is not in a position to move to a distance from his house. It will be for the Presiding Officer of this Court to consider whether it would be possible for him to examine the witness at his house or to issue a commission for his examination. The learned pleader for the Plaintiffs urges strenuously for the examination of the witness before the Court in the interests of justice. That is the reason why the order is passed in the form given above."

On the 12th December 1916, a definite order is made directing a commission. It runs thus:—

"I have again heard the pleaders on both sides. The Defendant has been suffering from an ugly disease. He has got an unmanageable secreting tumour, and the medical certificate shows that he is unable to come to Court to give evidence here. There is nothing to controvert the fact. I should therefore confirm the order of my predecessor. On the 5th December 1916, a Commissioner is appointed and directed to submit his report before the 19th December 1916."

The date of the medical certificate mentioned in this order of the 2nd December is not given. No such document is to be found in the printed book, but in the list of omitted exhibits at p. xx is to be found this description: "Medical certificate given Satish Chandra Chatterji, dated 19th July 1916." The trial commenced on the 28th February 1917, and the Commissioner only sent in his report on the 15th February, the evidence having been taken on the 21st and 27th January, and 4th and 5th February 1917, previous.

The Plaintiffs filed a petition objecting to the reading of this deposition. The objection came on for consideration on the 23rd March 1917, when it was read in evidence. Nothing could be more unsatisfactory than this mode of procedure. The principal Defendant gives his evidence before the Plaintiffs' case has been opened or the evidence of their witnesses given. The Court which has to decide has no opportunity of judging of the veracity of the witness from his conduct and demeanour. All the advantage of confronting a witness, accused of a fraud, such as Satish is accused of, with his accusers is lost. Evidence taken on commission should only be permitted to be used where the witness is proved to be too ill to give his evidence in Court or is absent for other sufficient reason. If Satish went to the Court he could, and presumably would, have been accommodated with a seat. Moreover, unless several of the witnesses who have been examined are utterly mistaken, Satish at this time was quite able to drive about and walk from his carriage into houses. The whole procedure in this matter strongly suggests that it was his aversion to undergo the ordeal of an examination in open Court, in the presence of those who knew him, rather than ill-health, which kept him from the witness-box.

Charges of fraud and collusion like those contained in the plaint in this case must, no doubt, be proved by those who make them—proved by established facts or inferences legitimately drawn from those facts taken together as a whole. Suspicions and surmises and conjecture are not permissible substitutes for those facts or those inferences, but that by no means requires that every puzzling artifice or contrivance resorted to by one accused of fraud must necessarily be completely unravelled and cleared up and made plain before a verdict can be properly found against him. If this were not so, many a clever and dexterous knave would escape. Turning to the evidence given before the Subordinate Judge, the first witness of the Plaintiffs, Satindra Chandra Bose, does not give any evidence of importance. The same may be said of the second witness, Kalibar Mitter, save that he gives a description of Sitanath and Akshoy, mentions their respective residences and says that the market value of the property sold was Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000. The fifth witness, Hriday Nath Ghose, only gives evidence as to the service of the notices and proclamations of the sale. The sixth witness, Upendra Nath Sarkar, merely tells what Panchanan Mitter told him. (Why he was allowed to give this evidence is strange.) He says that after the auction Panchanan Mitter told him that Sitanath fraudulently caused the sale to be held by not paying the arrears of revenue; that Akshoy, Sitanath and Satish jointly purchased the taluk. He said Panchanan did not tell him the shares which they bought, but gave the dates of the purchase and the price. The witness said he did not inquire who supplied the purchase money, and that Panchanan did not give him any information on the subject. The eighth and ninth witnesses examined for the Plaintiffs only dealt with the service of the notices of sale. The tenth gives no evidence touching the formation of the alleged conspiracy, nor the alleged joining in it by Satish or the occurrences at the sale.

The eleventh witness Rajendra, the twelfth Ashutosh, and the Maharaja Sir Pradyot Kumar Tagore only deal with the admission of Satish made after the sale; and Sarat Chandra Roy, the thirteenth witness, only with the absence of notices and proclamations of the sale. It is obvious, therefore, from this analysis of the evidence of the witnesses, other than Panchanan Mitter and Prya Nath Ghose, that it affords no proof whatever of the formation of any conspiracy between Sitanath and Akshoy touching any subject. But both the Subordinate Judge and the High Court have found that there was a collusive arrangement between Akshoy and Sitanath to injure the Plaintiffs, and that in order to effect this end they agreed that Akshoy should bid at the sale by auction of the aforesaid Towzi in his own name, and that if declared the, purchaser, he (Akshoy) would convey a half-share of the property purchased in favour of Hemada, that Akshoy did bid at the sale, that he was outbidden by Satish, and that the nefarious plan hatched by these two Defendants thus failed. The High Court in reference to the same matter said "that it was indisputable that the default in the payment of the instalment of Hemada's share of the Government revenue with the object of injuring the Plaintiffs was, as the Subordinate Judge has found, deliberately made by Sitanath, and that this step was taken in collusion with Akshoy, who it was agreed should purchase the zemindari at the auction free from encumbrances." The High Court proceeded: "There is some discrepancy as to the exact proportions in which the spoil was to be divided amongst the conspirators, but the details of the proposed distribution are not very material for present purposes"; they (the Court) need only observe that the story seems very plausible; that the third Defendant Sitanath looked forward to a share for himself and another for his master; that the complicity of the second Defendant, Akshoy, in what the Subordinate Judge described as a nefarious plan, was proved beyond challenge. Thus there are, in effect, two concurrent findings of these two Courts upon an issue of fact, namely, the formation of the corrupt and fraudulent conspiracy between Sitanath and Akshoy of the character and with the aims described. But the only evidence given on behalf of the Plaintiffs to sustain these concurrent findings is that of the two witnesses passed over in the above analysis, namely, Panchanan Mitter and Prya Nath Ghose. Neither the Subordinate Judge nor the High Court had any other evidence upon which either could have found as they have found, and it is quite obvious that they could not have based the conclusion at which they have arrived on the evidence of these witnesses unless they believed that quoad the matters on which they so found, these witnesses were truthful and reliable. Panchanan, however, in his evidence goes beyond these matters. He brings Satish into touch with the alleged conspiracy, proves that he entered into it, and deliberately assisted the other conspirators in the carrying out of the objects of their conspiracy. His evidence may be divided into two parts. The first deals with what occurred up to the time they left Akshoy's house on the evening of the 7th January, and the second with what occurred from that time till after the sale. The High Court accepted both parts of Panchanan's evidence. The Subordinate Judge accepted the first part of it, but, for reasons which will be shown to be quite inadequate, rejected the second part of it. As it is this second part which implicates the Appellant Satish, it is necessary to deal with all Panchanan's evidence at length.

Panchanan Mitter was examined on the 2nd and 3rd March 1917; he deposed that he was 38 years of age, was, and for two years had been, clerk to a Jessore pleader named Babu Nibaran Chandra Bose (who happens to be the pleader of the Plaintiffs) and was for 14 or 15 years previously the sudder of Hemada, deceased; that he remained in the latter's service up to his death; that Sitanath was Hemada's manager up to that time; that he, the witness, used to write out and send the revenue payable by Hemada by money order to the Collector; that Sitanath calculated the dues on the land; that Hemada had one-third of the Atpur Panditnagar estate; that the Plaintiffs had the remaining two-thirds; that there was ill-feeling between Hemada and the Plaintiffs as they had many lawsuits between them; that before Hemada's death his taluk was sold by auction for arrears of revenue; that Sitanath, the manager, caused it to be sold by refraining from paying the instalment of the revenue which fell due in respect of the September Revenue for 1914, and deliberately withheld it; that Hemada had mortgaged his interest in his share to the Shebait of Dashmahabidya for Rs. 2,000; that this mortgage was purchased by and assigned to the Plaintiffs; that on inquiry from Sitanath the latter told him that he would take steps to suppress the publication of the necessary processes (i.e., presumably notices and proclamations) in the mofussil preparatory to the sale; that Sitanath and he were present at the Atpur Collector's at the time of the sale; that Prya Nath was the Karjyakarak of Akshoy; that Sitanath told the witness he had relations with Prya Nath (i.e., presumably was related to Prya Nath); that Sitanath came from Jessore to Calcutta four or five days before the auction sale; that some two days before the sale he, the witness, came to Calcutta, met Sitanath there and stayed with him at the Sealdah Hotel: that Hemada was then in Calcutta on his deathbed; that Sitanath told the witness that his, Sitanath's, son-in-law would not give security for bidding at the sale, so that the two must go to Akshoy for the purchase money; that the day before the sale the two went, between 9 and 10 a.m., to Akshoy's house, 112, Amherst Street, Calcutta, but found he was away from home at Puri; that they met Prya Nath and Akshoy's two sons, Taradas Babu and Shyamadas Babu; that it was not then settled who was to bid at the auction sale, but that it was arranged to telegraph to Akshoy in Puri to ascertain his views; that a telegram was accordingly sent and a reply received that was as follows :—

"AKSHOY KUMAR CHATTERJI,

Sagarika, Puri.

"Kumar Satish Khiroda Hemada are joint proprietors of towzi 2402 mahal Atpur 24-Parganahs on Ganges near Kidderpore. Hemada did not pay revenue and will cause the sixteen annas mahal to be sold tomorrow. Hemada represents total income as Rs. 1,200 and requests us to buy the same in auction within ten thousand rupees and sell half to him; going out to ascertain facts Wire permission.

"TARADAS CHATTERJI."

"112, Amherst Street, Calcutta.

"May bid less or more amount if income is as you represent.

The telegram was received at 13'30 and the reply received at 16'40.

The witness then stated that Sitanath and he returned to Akshoy's house in the afternoon; that Sitanath suggested that the property should be purchased benami; that one-half of it should remain with Akshoy and the other half be transferred to Hemada (the dying man) in benami of Sitanath by a kobala without any conditions; that the whole purchase money should be paid on behalf of Akshoy; that Akshoy had several holdings under the Plaintiffs and that there were several litigations between them and him, and that therefore the property should be purchased benami of Sitanath. The witness further stated that Sitanath, Prya Nath, Shyamadas and he himself then went to Satish's house. He corrects this in his cross-examination. In this statement the witness is in error, and says that Prya Nath only went half-way and then descended from the carriage and went to do some other business. The witness states that when they went to Satish's house the latter was informed that under the circumstances mentioned, which were stated to him, the property should be purchased in his benami; that Satish replied that a share should be given to him; that Sitanath agreed to this, and that it was settled that Sitanath, Satish and Akshoy should each get a third share; that the property should be bid at the sale up to Rs. 12,000, and that Sitanath said that the price offered should at least be Rs. 9,000; that in that state of things Sitanath, Panchanan and Shyamadas started for Satish's house to interview him; that Prya Nath accompanied them—not, however, with any intention of going to see Satish—half-way, then descended from the vehicle they were in and went off on some business of his own. Though Prya Nath corroborates Panchanan substantially in the latter's description of what occurred up to his separation from the three persons named en route to Satish's house, there are some trifling but immaterial discrepancies between these stories, but they are discrepancies of the character that strengthen rather than weaken the evidence of witnesses, since the diversity repels the idea of concocted uniformity.

But Panchanan is corroborated and his evidence strengthened in other ways in addition. He is corroborated by the telegram already referred to with the reply to it. He is corroborated by the silence of Sitanath, by the silence of Akshoy's two sons, Taradas and Shyamadas, until they were by the insistence of the High Court, forced into the witness chair. All the three were accused of being involved in the deliberate commission of a base and contemptible fraud. The elder of the two is a legal practitioner, the younger an engineer and contractor, educated at the Government Industrial College, presumably each an intelligent man. Their silence might have been wise if they were guilty and ashamed of what they had done, apprehensive of disgrace and punishment. It was idiotic and cowardly if they were innocent. When Shyamadas does appear he commences by swearing what is absolutely incredible, namely, that he did not know in connection with what suit he was summoned as a witness. He made no allusion to the alleged meeting at his father's house; never denied it had taken place there, or the making of the arrangement there deposed to by Panchanan and Prya Nath.

He denied, no doubt, that he visited Satish's house the night before the sale. He is asked if he knows Satish, and his reply is rather peculiar. He answers, "No, I never had any connection with him before," but that statement is followed by two others which are also incredible. He says he did not know he had a rival bidder at the sale and did not ask who the other bidder was, but he pretends to tell all this rival bidder did, though he never asked his name.

Well, Taradas, when produced, begins by refusing to admit that he sent a telegram, the copy of which is produced to him. He says he has no cause of doubt or any cause of belief he did. He does not deny that Sitanath was at his father's house before he sent the telegram, or that both were present there later in the evening. He says that Prya Nath Ghose was not there, that the Chandra Raja estate officer, i.e., Sitanath, was there, that he asked them to sell half of the property, but nothing was settled about the price; that he, Sitanath, asked the witness Taradas to send a telegram like that produced; that no arrangement was made as to the purchase money to be paid to his father for the sale of the half-share; that this officer stated to him what the income was and he stated that in the telegram. He says he does not know Satish. He was then asked if, to his knowledge, his father was served, as Defendant in this suit, with a copy of the writ. His reply is that this Gomasta told him that a summons had been left with him with a copy of the plaint. He is then asked if he meant to suggest that this Gomasta did not show it to him within a reasonable time. His reply was, he does not understand reasonable time, not that very day nor the next day; he might have shown it months or days after. He is asked if the signature on the summons is in his father's handwriting, and he replied it looks like it but is in pencil, and is not exactly like his; some portion of it is written in the hand of a lady which he never writes.

He is then asked if it is inaccurate to say he got a copy of the summons. And his reply is:—

"It may have been served on him (i.e., his father) but I got this (i.e., the summons) some time later, and I thought I ought not to take any steps. I did not consult my father regarding it. I might have said to him 'you have been made a party.' I do not remember whether I said anything or not. I might or I might not have said anything. I refer only important matters to him. I did not consider this matter to be important, because we had no connection with this property. I thought we should do nothing."

He is then asked, did he think it was important that his father should be charged with fraud and that he should be defended? And his reply was, "I did not think so at that time." He is then asked, "You thought that connection with the property was all-important?" And his reply is, "Yes, I do not remember any charge of fraud."

Taradas added that he did not know Satish. He is asked what instructions he gave his brother Shyamadas about the auction purchase. His answer is, "Probably I gave him the same instructions I received from my father." Then he was asked, "Was your instruction merely reading out the telegram you received from your father?" His answer is, "No, I gave him more instructions." Then he is asked what was it. And he replied, "I do not remember, he might not understand the telegram fully. I might have told him to go and bid up to Rs. 12,000." Then he is asked, "How much money did you send with your brother Shyamadas?" His reply was, "I do not remember; it might be one-fourth of the amount.' Then the question is put to him, "That is one-fourth of Rs. 12,000, equals Rs. 3,000." He is then asked when his brother came back from the sale, "Did you put it to him that if somebody bid higher than your brother why he did not ask permission to bid still higher?" And his answer was, "I do not remember whether I asked him."

It appears to their Lordships strange that any legal practitioner could suppose that clumsy, stupid and transparent prevarication such as this witness indulged in could impose upon any legal tribunal worthy of the name, much less upon one of the ability and distinction of the High Court of Calcutta. In their Lordships' view this man's testimony is utterly unreliable, and the evidence of Panchanan is quite unshaken by it. The Subordinate Judge, however, held that this latter witness's evidence is rendered unreliable by another particular matter. It is this. On his direct evidence this witness Panchanan undoubtedly swore that Prya Nath accompanied the rest of the party to Satish's house on the evening before the sale. On cross-examination he corrected that, and stated that Prya Nath only came with the others half the distance, then descended from the vehicle in which they were and went away on other business. On the face of it this correction looks quite innocent, the mistake being one which a man might well make at night under the circumstances deposed to, but the learned Subordinate Judge, though Panchanan was not asked a single question touching the alteration in his evidence, considered that it showed a dishonest attempt on the witness's part to alter his evidence so as to reconcile it with Prya Nath's, and therefore deprived him of all credit. In their Lordships' view that is not a reasonable construction of the incident, and they concur with the High Court in thinking that Panchanan's evidence is not shaken by it and that he is notwithstanding it worthy of credit on this as on the antecedent parts of his testimony.

In the second part of his evidence Panchanan says that he himself, Prya Nath, Satish, Shyamadas and a Durwan of Akshoy attended the sale; that a bid was made in the name of Satish, that Rs. 2,300 were deposited in Court that day; that the money was with Prya Nath, who paid it to Shyamadas, and Satish deposited it with the Collector. He said that Hemada owed some money to Sitanath, and that if the property was transferred to Sitanath by Akshoy, the money due to him would be realised; that this was the second object of causing the property to be sold. Shyamadas, he said, paid the purchase money to Satish in notes and gold. He does not remember to whom Satish paid it. Shyamadas bid on behalf of Akshoy; that Satish and Shyamadas stood there side by side. He was not present when the chalan for the money was written. He does not remember whether Satish said to the Collector, "I have not now with me more than Rs. 1,000, and may I be given time for the balance?" That he came downstairs as soon as the sale was over, and waited there for half an hour: that one-fourth of the purchase money was deposited with the Collector; that it was settled that Satish should pay half the purchase money in order that he might get a one-third share of the property, that according to the arrangement made Akshoy was to advance the whole of the purchase money in the first instance, and Satish was to pay him back half of it when it was settled. It is obvious that the ultimate pecuniary benefit to Satish under this arrangement would be the same as if he advanced the entire of the purchase money in the first instance and Akshoy paid back half. This latter mode of procedure would, doubtless, look to the officials more as if Satish was the real purchaser than the other, and in either case Satish could say with equal truth, as is sworn he did say to the Maharaja, that he had co-sharers in the property, and that Akshoy was one of them. The mere fact that Satish found in the first instance the money to pay the purchase money is not at all, therefore, such a crucial fact as Mr. DeGruyther contended it was. Akshoy could, doubtless, repay him half the money at any time. The witness then explained and excused with fair success, their Lordships think, the part he had taken in the business.

Some unfavourable comment was made upon this witness's evidence owing to the fact that he did not enumerate the particular sums which, together, made up the sum (Rs. 2,300) deposited, but treated it as having been deposited in one sum. That, no doubt, is so, but if that be a discrediting incident, he shares the discredit with Satish himself, who in his cross-examination said :—

"On the day of the sale, having put in notes to the amount of Rs. 2,500 into the Collectorate, I took a refund of Rs. 200 and thus deposited Rs. 2,300 only: this sum of Rs. 2,500 was in notes of the value of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 500 only. I borrowed those notes from the house of Tarak, my cousin" [No mention whatever is made of the Rs. 1,000 it is now alleged he brought with him to the sale, and he represented that the borrowing of the Rs. 2,500 was one transaction. Tarak Nath Banerji, the money-lender, says precisely the same. He said some two or two and a half years ago, in January, he borrowed from me Rs. 2,500 in two hand notes, one hand note for Rs. 1,000, the other for Rs. 1,500. "The amount of the first remains due, the other was paid. Satish owes money to me, my mother and my sisters also. I have no accounts of my loan transactions. I did not enter the payment of Rs. 2,500 to Satish Babu as debts."]

Prya Nath's evidence as to what occurred at the sale is not so full as Panchanan's, but it is quite consistent with the latter's. He mentions two important matters. He says that it was thought that the relationship with Satish would not be easily ascertained, and so he was chosen to be a fit person to bid at the sale and purchase the property. (It is not very clear what this means.) He also said that he went to Khulna three days after the sale and saw the entry of the purchase money in the rokar after coming back.

Now who and what was Satish? He was a feeble invalid, afflicted with a painful and unpleasant disease. Up to seven or eight months before he was given to drink, and since then, by way of reformation had become an opium-eater. That is the description he gave of himself. He was asked at the end of his cross-examination if he was addicted to intoxicants. His reply was :—

"Yes, formerly, I gave up the habit seven or eight months ago." (He was speaking on the 11th February, 1917.) "I have drunk wine up to the value of Rs. 13-8 per bottle. I never drank anything costlier than that; the price of the same bottle to-day is Rs. 30 to Rs. 32. I have poured out to the goddess of drink Rs. 50,000 or Rs. 60,000. I eat opium twice a day now. As I have got the rheumatism, one tolah of opium lasts me 14 or 15, eating twice a day."

SATISH CHANDRA CHATTERJI v. KUMAR SATISH KANTHA ROY.

For the last twenty-three years, he said, he had been purchasing taluks at revenue sales, certificate sales and Civil Court sales. He said he did not know Sitanath or Akshoy and never had any conversation with either of them. His debts, he said at the time he was examined, amounted to Rs. 18,000 or Rs. 19,000. Before buying this property, he said, he did not ascertain even where the property was situated or make any inquiries about it. After the institution of the suit he made no inquiry as to the extent of Hemada's share in the property or as to whether he had an officer called Sitanath, or as to the truth of the charges made against him or whether any officer of Hemada's, fraudulently or otherwise, caused the zemindari to be sold by auction by withholding the revenue. Nor did he make any inquiry as to who Akshoy was. On seeing the bid sheet two or three hours after the sale, for the first time, he knew Akshoy's name. He said he never made up his mind to purchase the property till after he had seen the bid sheet. He did not know Taradas nor Kaledas, sons of Akshoy; that he never went to Akshoy's house up to the day he spoke, 4th February 1917, and never inquired what are the quantities of lakeraj lands or mal lands in the taluk. The excuse he made for this amazing indifference and ignorance was that he did not send his officers there to make inquiries touching these matters because there was a criminal case once and if he sent them to inquire there might be another criminal case, which would cost money. He then added :—

"Therefore I am waiting till the case is over. I am not in very affluent circumstances, you, yourself, see. I have purchased property by borrowing money. How can I then say I am in affluent circumstances?"

The plaint was filed on the 18th August 1915; Satish was examined on the 21st, 27th and 28th January 1917. It seems to their Lordships quite incredible that for one year and four months he would have abstained from making any inquiries touching a property which he, an embarrassed man, alleged he bought, or have ignored so completely the charges made against him. His conduct as to the property might not be unnatural if he was merely a sham bidder put forward by Akshoy, but it certainly is inexplicable if he was the real purchaser.

Akshoy was examined on the 7th May 1919, he states that his income is about Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 40,000 per annum; that he had houses in Calcutta and elsewhere, and about a lakh of rupees in G. P. notes, most of it made by his own enterprise and speculation; that he had known the Chandra Rajas (i.e., the Plaintiffs) since he was at school; that they were the landlords of his family at Khulna; that there were lots of law-suits between his family and the Rajas, about a portion of their property, which ended about a year previous, i.e., in 1917. He said he heard before he got the summons to give evidence that a suit was going on with the Chandra Raja about properties sold for arrears of Government revenue: that somebody had purchased it; that the suit was going on in the Alipur Court: that this was all he knew. He did not know who the purchaser was; that he was not aware he was a Defendant in the suit to set aside the purchase till the day before yesterday (i.e., till the 7th May, 1917), when he heard; that he first heard of the institution of the suit to set aside the sale from Satish's Gomasta. He had no information about the property he bid for except his son's telegram. After the sale he had some information. He was asked whether on receipt of the telegram from his son he thought it a bonâ fide honest proposition, and he answered :—

"I never thought whether it was reasonable or not, or whether it was proper or not for me to bid at the sale, as the property was going to be sold by auction. I thought as a business matter I could enter it. Whether it was right or wrong I did not think at the time, because the revenue was not paid and the property was going to be sold. The only thing was that I had to sell half to him."

He was then asked did he buy any other property in auction sale, and he answered, "Of course, I bought the tenants' holdings. When they failed to pay the rent they (presumably the holdings) were sold by auction."

He admitted he had a talk with the Gomasta of Satish soon after the litigation was instituted; that the Gomasta told him they were going to apply to set aside the sale. This man did not tell the witness at that time that he was a Defendant in the suit: "that between Satish and ourselves (i.e., Akshoy and his people) a suit was pending, and he used to come from time to time in reference to this matter, but he never told me I was a Defendant in this suit, though I had occasional talks with him." He said his sons told him that they had not purchased at the auction; that they wrote about it; that they did not tell him who it was who purchased it; that since then he had come to know that Satish purchased it. At that time he did not care to know the name. His sons might have mentioned the name of Satish the first time or afterwards. He denies that he ...s helping Satish to buy the property. ... witness appears to their Lordships ...ite unreliable. He was a Defendant ... the suit out of which this appeal ... He was charged with fraud. Service of the plaint must have been effected upon him, and yet, he says, he was never told the nature of the suit. That appears to their Lordships to be quite incredible. They think, judging from all the probabilities, he must have been told of these things; but being resolved not to play the part of an innocent man and come boldly into Court and defend himself, he thought it wiser to lie low and remain silent, and is now professing this ignorance to excuse his conduct.

Mr. Dunne, in his argument on behalf of the Respondents, criticised in detail the evidence of the Appellants as to the persons from whom and the mode by which he found the purchase money of the property he purchased. Damaging as that criticism was, their Lordships prefer to rest their conclusions in the main on the somewhat broader aspects of the case, including the relative positions of the two most interested men, Satish and Akshoy. The latter, a very wealthy man, so anxious to acquire, though he should have to part with half of it, yet trusting to the information contained in the telegram which Sitanath must have supplied. Himself a tenant of the Roys, yet ready to join in their undoing by forwarding this auction sale provided only this could be effected without his co-operation being disclosed. And on the other side one has a diseased, intemperate and crippled man, accustomed to attend revenue and other sales by auction, but apparently at this time without an anna of his own available to pay for anything he might buy, obliged in this case to borrow every rupee of the purchase money (Rs. 9,200), in some instances at high rates of interest; and further obliged, according to his own story, to pledge to a relative the anticipated compensation which he might receive for the compulsory purchase of some of his property in order to raise Rs. 8,500. If Akshoy had desired to procure the service of a tool to buy for him this property at this auction, giving him, however, an interest in the property bought as a reward, and with the help of Shyamadas giving to a sham competition at the auction the appearance of reality, he could scarcely have found a person more qualified to fill the rôle than Satish. The question is, did he fill that rôle or a rôle something like it, or did he buy this property entirely for himself, for his own use and benefit? There is available evidence which, in their Lordships' view, is much more consistent with his having filled the first of these rôles than the second. It is the following: Rajindra Nath Banerji, the Naib on the estate of the Maharaja Pradyot Tagore named Mulajore, who says that this estate lies to the south of the Roys' estate of Atpur; that he knows the District well, including the taluk in dispute: that in 1915 Satish had purchased it at an auction sale; that his employer, the Maharaja, was anxious to purchase it; that he, the witness, went to Satish's house to propose to buy it on behalf of his master; that he met Satish and had a talk with him on the subject; that Satish said that he was not in a position to say whether he could sell the taluk: that he, the witness, then brought Satish to the Maharaja's house in Calcutta; that Satish there gave no final answer but said that he would have to consult one or two persons who had interest in the property purchased. He did not mention the names: that he, the witness, pressed him very much in the matter; that Satish then took him to the house of another person named Chatterji; that Satish entered the house, remained there for some time while the witness remained outside in the carriage; that after an interval Satish returned and said he could not sell the property; that Chatterji was unwilling to part with it. (The full name of Akshoy is Akshoy Kumar Chatterji.)

The Maharaja Sir Pradyot Kumar Tagore was examined on commission. He says he knows the villages of Atpur and Mulajore; that he is a zemindar; that after the auction he heard of the sale; that had he known before it took place that it was about to take place he would have attempted to purchase it. He heard from his amlas that the value of the property was from Rs. 25,000 to Rs. 30,000. He heard the name of the person who purchased the property at the auction. He tried to purchase it from him and sent word of that to Satish by Rajindra, the officer of his debuttar estate. After that interview, Satish had a talk with witness at his, the witness's, own house. The witness was asked "what did he say to your proposal?" And he replied: Satish said he had a partner named Akshoy, and other partners too, and that he was unable to say anything without consulting them; that conversation took place in August or the beginning of September 1915, as well as he could recollect. The negotiations progressed no further; his officer told him it would not come off. The witness said he had not seen Satish before; he had no personal knowledge of him. The witness was asked to describe the man he spoke to: he said he was about 45 years of age, rather stout, of dark complexion, stood rather uncomfortably, and spoke to him, the witness, in Bengali.

A number of quite irrelevant questions were put to the Maharaja which may be passed by.

The next witness is Ashutosh Bhattacharji. He was examined on the 7th March 1917. He states that he is only Superintendent of the Raja Kishori Lal

SATISH CHANDRA CHATTERJI v. KUMAR SATISH KANTHA ROY.

Gossain of Serampur; that his head office is at Serampur; that his master was a member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Bengal; that he himself is an undergraduate, an Honorary Magistrate of the Bhatpara Bench, and a Municipal Commissioner of Bhatpara Municipality; that he has served as Superintendent for twelve years. He knows Atpur. He knows the taluk 2402; that he knew of the sale of it in Baisakh from middle of April to middle of May 1915. Had he known of it before it took place he would have tried to acquire it for his master; that on his master's behalf he tried to purchase it several times from Satish. First he sent Mokhtar Tarpadi Dutta, to the knowledge of his master, on two or three occasions to Satish. After that he, witness, went in the middle of May. He said the case for setting aside the auction sale was then pending before the Commissioner, and that he must consult Akshoy. The witness then went to the house of Akshoy Chatterji on three or four occasions in July or August. He went to Satish for the last time in October 1915. After the disposal of the case he, Satish, said he could sell the property for Rs. 50,000. The witness says he then offered him Rs. 25,000. On cross-examination, the witness said that he, Satish, had a mind to sell as far as he understood him. He said he stayed at Satish's house about ten or fifteen minutes; that he did not know Akshoy before he went to his house in connection with this matter; that Satish gave him Akshoy's address; that he did not do or say anything to induce Satish to sell the property. On the first day he, the witness, saw Akshoy he expressed his willingness to sell the property. He saw him when the appeal before the Commissioner was over and he then demanded Rs. 50,000.

The learned Subordinate Judge has criticised unfavourably the Maharaja's evidence, but he bases his criticism on the most surprising error: "He says the conversation with the Maharaja took place, according to Rajendra, in Jaishta, i.e., which means from the middle of May to the middle of June; that there was an appeal to the Commissioner pending, which was disposed of on the 1st July; that the present suit was instituted on the 18th August 1915; that Satish is an astute man of business; that it is highly improbable that he would make such admissions of fraud on his part when in the appeal to the Commissioner his complicity with Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was distinctly alleged and the matter was being fought out between them. It has not been shown to this Board that the charge of fraud was made before or could be entertained by the Commissioner. He gave no decision whatever upon such a charge, if made. His decision is entirely confined to the irregularity of the sale, but it is strange that the learned Subordinate Judge did not take the trouble to verify his dates before he made such a charge as this against such a person as this Maharaja, based entirely on the assumed fact that the Commissioner's judgment was delivered on the 1st of July. Had he done so, he would have found that the Commissioner delivered his judgment not on the 1st July 1915, as he assumes, but one month earlier, namely, the 1st June 1915. The criticism based upon this blunder therefore falls to the ground.

Now, if Satish and Akshoy had admitted that they had had these interviews with the persons named, but that these latter had mistaken what they said, or that they were so pressed to sell that they said what they were alleged to have said as an excuse to get rid of the pressure, there might be something to say on their behalf. But they do nothing of the kind; they say these interviews never took place; that the whole thing is a myth, a work, it is to be supposed, of the perverted and diseased imagination of these three witnesses. Their Lordships are as unable as the High Court are to take that view. They think, on the contrary, that these three witnesses are reliable and their evidence most convincing. They believe that if this large sum of Rs. 25,000 or Rs. 30,000 was within the reach of this needy man Satish, then in debt to the extent of Rs. 15,000 to Rs. 18,000, he would have eagerly grasped at and gladly sold the property he purchased in order to procure it. The fact that he did not do this can only be accounted for on the assumption that he was not the absolute owner of this property, free to dispose of it as he might, but that his action was dominated and controlled by the wealthy co-owner he named to whom gains of Rs. 10,000 or Rs. 20,000, had not such a strong attraction. Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the Respondents-Plaintiffs have established the cause of action on which they sued, and that the appeal fails. The appeal having been dismissed, it is not necessary to discuss the matter further, as there is no cross-appeal. The Respondents are apparently content with the decree which has been pronounced by the High Court, and as their Lordships think it does substantial justice between the parties in the circumstances of the case, they will merely humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

GOPI LAL,
Appellant;
v.
LAKHPAT RAI and ors., Respondents.

Patent, revocation of—Banslochan, preparation of—Patent taken out on the ground of discovery of two kinds of improvement—One found invalid in law, sufficient to invalidate patent—Common earthenware vessels substituted for the usual iron ones for heating, if a valid subject-matter of grant of patent.

The Respondents had obtained letters patent in respect of improvements alleged to have been discovered by them in the preparation of "banslochan" consisting (1) in the addition of sulphuric acid to the substance when red hot, and (2) in the use in the process of heating of a stove constructed as described and illustrated in the said letters patent. The Judicial Committee agreeing with the trial Judge's finding that the addition of sulphuric acid at the stage alleged was commonly resorted to by other manufacturers affirmed the trial Judge's decree revoking the letters patent, the Indian law being that if either of the two claims upon which the letters patent were obtained was bad in law, the letters patent would be invalid; and it was thus unnecessary for their Lordships to examine the validity of the second claim. But their Lordships thought it desirable to make it clear that they must not be understood as assenting to the proposition that the substitution of well-known earthenware vessels in lieu of iron ones for the purpose of carrying out the process of manufacture would necessarily be a good subject-matter for a patent.

These were consolidated appeals (Nos. 37 and 40 of 1921) from two decrees of the High Court at Allahabad, dated 22nd May 1918, one of which reversed a decree of the District Court of Farrukhabad, dated 14th February 1917 and the other dismissed a petition for the revocation of Indian Patent No. 2191.

The patent was granted to the Respondents in respect of improvements in the manufacture of a medical preparation known as "banslochan."

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Board. On the 1st March 1916, the Respondents sued the Appellants in the 2nd appeal for infringement of their said letters patent and prayed for an injunction and damages.

The Defendants denied the infringement and alleged that the process and apparatus of the Respondents which were the subject-matter of the patent were of no utility and did not constitute a new invention.

The Additional District Judge gave judgment on the 14th February 1917 dismissing the suit.

On the 16th January 1917, the Appellant in the first appeal filed a petition for the revocation of the letters patent.

An order was made on the 12th June 1917 that the evidence in the infringement suit should be evidence on the hearing of the petition and the revocation proceedings were transferred to the High Court.

On the 22nd May 1918, the High Court (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.) gave judgment setting aside the decree of the District Judge and dismissing the petition for revocation. From the resultant decrees the present appeals were brought to His Majesty in Council.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD CARSON.—The material question to be determined in these consolidated appeals is: Whether the Respondents' Indian Patent No. 2191, and dated the 23rd June 1915, is a valid patent?

The Appellants resided and carried on business as merchants at Muhalla Sadhwara Farrukhabad, and the Respondents, who are the registered owners of the patent in question, resided and carried on business as merchants at Calcutta under the name and style of Lakhpat Rai Sampat Rai.

In the second appeal the Respondents, on the 1st March 1916, sued the Appellants for infringement of the said letters patent and in the first appeal the Appellants, on the 16th January 1917, presented a petition for the revocation of the said letters patent.

The said letters patent were granted to the Respondents in respect of "improvements in the manufacture of a medicinal preparation," and as stated in the specification, "the present invention relates to improvements in the treatment of a substance found in the interior of some bamboos and known as 'tabakshir' or 'bamboo manna,' for the purpose of refining the same when in the raw state to convert it into a nutritious and saleable article.

This medicinal preparation was commonly known and marketed as "banslochan," and admittedly had for many years prior to the date of the said patent been refined and sold throughout India.

It was not disputed, that prior to the date of the said patent "banslochan" had been prepared for the market by a process which included (a) washing the crude material in water; (b) treating it at some period of the process with sulphuric acid; and (c) calcining the mass which had been so treated in an iron stove or pan at a high temperature.

The improvements alleged to have been discovered by the Respondents, and in respect of which the said letters patent were granted, consist broadly (1) in the addition of sulphuric acid to the substance at a defined stage of the process, viz., when red hot, and (2) in the use of the process of heating of a stove constructed as described and illustrated in the said letters patent.

These improvements were the subject of distinct and separate claims in the said letters patent, and it was not disputed in the argument before this Board that under the law applicable in India, if either of the said claims was bad in law the letters patent would be invalid.

The action for infringement came to trial before the Additional District Judge of Farrukhabad, who, on the 14th February 1917, gave judgment in favour of the Defendants (the present Appellants), deciding as matters of fact "that long before the Plaintiffs' (Respondents') application for the patent, the stove with earthen vessels and of the same construction as the patent stove, was commonly used by other manufacturers at Calcutta, and that sulphuric acid was also applied to the material while it was red hot, and not while it was still cold."

From this judgment the Respondents appealed to the High Court of Judicature for the North West Provinces, and on the 22nd May 1918, the judgment of the Court was delivered reversing the judgment of the Court below and holding that the Respondents' patent was valid. As their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the first claim in the specification, viz., "in the preparation of the said substance the treatment of the same when red hot with an acid," is invalid on the grounds of want of novelty and prior user, it is necessary to examine the judgment of the Appellate Court to see how that question was dealt with, having regard to the definite finding of fact by the Additional District Judge before whom the matter first came. In the first place, it is to be noted that the the order of the Appellate Court of the 22nd May 1918, leaves entirely untouched the question of the Appellants' right to apply sulphuric or other acid in the treatment of the substance when red hot and only grants an injunction restraining the Defendants (Respondents) from constructing or using the special kind of stove which forms the subject-matter of the second claim in the Respondents' application for a patent. Upon turning to the judgment of the learned Judges, the matter is dealt with in the following passage :—

"A difficulty has been raised with regard to the first part of the claim where the patentees state that they claim in the preparation of the said substance the treatment of the same when red hot with an acid. We have purposely refrained from referring in detail to the evidence with regard to the use of acid. We think it clearly establishes what the Plaintiffs (Respondents) have not seriously denied, that in some form or another, and at some stage or another in the process of manufacture, acid has always been used for purifying the material, and there seemed at one time a difficulty with regard to this claim, namely, as to whether it was not either too wide or too vague, or, in itself, old."

Later on the judgment continues :—

"Therefore we must hold that it is established that the treatment of sulphuric acid at "red heat," which is a defined stage in the process of heating, is well known to the trade and perfectly intelligible, and also new, as nobody in the case suggests that there was any defined or ascertained stage at which it was always done."

Their Lordships find it very difficult to reconcile this statement with what follows :—

". . . and the patent does not confer upon the Plaintiffs either the sole right to manufacture and sell the substance itself or even the sole right to apply sulphuric acid at red heat so that nobody may use it. What people cannot do is to manufacture an oven or stove substantially as described and illustrated in the specification for drying, heating, roasting and calcining the said substance, and to use such construction for the purpose of applying sulphuric acid in the process of preparing and heating the substance to a red heat in the stove."

Their Lordships cannot help thinking that the Appellate Court did not keep sufficiently clearly before their minds the necessity of adjudicating on each claim independently and was construing the specification as if it was one for a combination and not for subject-matters which were distinctively claimed. Indeed, in another part of the judgment it is stated :—

"We find that the essential features of the process patented by the Plaintiffs is the treatment of the substance at a red heat with sulphuric acid inside a closed crucible or retort made entirely of earthenware."

Their Lordships can find no reason for disagreeing with the finding of the Additional District Judge on this point.

It is unnecessary to decide whether, when, as found by the Appellate Court, "that in some form or another, and at some stage or another in the process of manufacture, acid has always been used for purifying the material;" a valid claim for a patent can be made for the use of such acid for the same purpose at a definite stage, e.g., when the material is red hot. The evidence which has been given at the trial, and which has been carefully and ably analysed by the trial Judge, seems to their Lordships amply to support the finding of the Judge that long prior to the date of the letters patent, "the sulphuric acid was also applied to the material while it was red hot."

This was proved distinctly by Manna Lal, Ramishwar Bajpei, Shrovaj Narain, Maharaj Narain, Gobind Singh and Chhedu. No doubt there is evidence on the other side of the use of the acid at different stages, but as regards its use when the material is "red hot" the evidence is purely negative.

It is also worthy of note that from beginning to end of the plaint filed in the Respondents' action there is no mention of the claim in respect of the application of the acid to the material when "red hot," and the same observation applies to the notice served by the attorney of the Plaintiffs on the 3rd February 1916, before the action was commenced, when the complaint was founded on an alleged infringement of the second branch of the Plaintiffs' claim, viz., the construction of a special kind of earthenware stove.

Having come to the conclusion that the first claim put forward by the Respondents in the application for a patent cannot be sustained, and that therefore the letters patent are invalid, it is unnecessary for their Lordships to examine the second claim. Their Lordships, however, would like to make it clear that they must not be taken as assenting to the proposition that the substitution of well-known earthenware vessels in lieu of iron ones for the purpose of carrying out the process of manufacture would necessarily be a good subject-matter for a patent.

Under the circumstances, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the present appeals should be allowed with costs. This will involve that the decree of the Appellate Court of the 22nd May 1918, in the second appeal, should be set aside and the decree of the District Court of the 14th February 1917, should be restored with costs, and, further, that the decree made on the Appellants' petition in the first appeal on the 22nd May 1918, dismissing the claim for revocation of the letters patent should be set aside and an order for such revocation decreed with costs.

APP. No. 245 OF 1923.

SANDERSON, C. J.
CUMING, J.
1923,

Judgment, 6, August

KIAMUDDI KARIKAR, Appellant,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 71, separate sentences under sec. 147 and under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, legality of—Separate sentences, if legalised when they are made to run concurrently —Order of the sentences, if material in deciding the legality of the respective sentences.

An accused was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 147, I. P. C. and a further 3 years' under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, both sentences being directed to run concurrently:

Held per SANDERSON, C. J.—That the infliction of separate punishments for the two offences was illegal under para. 1 of sec. 71, I. P. C. and it did not make any difference that the sentences were directed to run concurrently. The learned Judge had no jurisdiction to sentence the accused for both the offences. The second sentence under sec. 325 read with sec. 149 must therefore be set aside.

NILMONEY PODDAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS (1) followed.

Per CUMING, J.—Where two separate sentences have been passed, the illegality does not necessarily attach to the sentence which is passed second in point of time. Obviously this would possibly reduce the question as to what sentence the accused would get to a lottery depending on the order in which the Judge or Magistrate passed the sentences and result in a serious miscarriage of justice. The prohibition in sec. 71, I. P. C. against punishing an accused with the punishment of more than one of the offences is obviously met by making all the sentences which have been imposed run concurrently.

This was an appeal preferred on the 23rd May 1923 against the conviction under secs. 147, 325/149, I. P. C., in agreement with the verdict of the jury and the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for 2 years under sec. 147, I. P. C. and for 3 years under secs. 325/149, I. P. C., passed on the 5th March 1923, by the Additional Sessions Judge of Dacca (Mr. P. C. De).

The facts are briefly as follows:—One member of an assembly, which was lawful in the beginning but became unlawful later on, caused grievous hurt to a person in pursuance of their common intention and was found guilty by the jury of an offence under sec. 147 and of an offence under sec. 325 read with sec. 149. The Judge accordingly sentenced the accused to 2 years' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 147, I. P. C. and to a further sentence of 3 years' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 325 read with sec. 149 and directed the sentences to run concurrently. Against this decision the present appeal was preferred.

Babus Jyotish Chandra Guha and Monmotho Nath Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Kiamuddi Karikar, who was tried by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Dacca and a jury. By the unanimous verdict of the jury he was found guilty of an offence under sec. 147, I. P. C. and of an offence under sec. 325 read with sec. 149. The jury found him not guilty under sec. 325, sec. 304 and sec. 304 read with sec. 149.

Shortly stated the facts were these :—

The police were summoned for the purpose of preventing a considerable number of people from fishing in a certain tank. In the first instance the police were attacked, but the next thing that happened was that the people, who had assembled for the purpose of fishing, apparently gave way and retreated. The allegation was that then some of the people, who were with the police, and the police themselves pursued the retreating crowd. The deceased man, who was aged about sixty, fell at the rear of the crowd, and he was so severely beaten that he died on the spot.

The accused, according to the evidence, was alleged to have been one of those who beat the deceased man. But, as I have already said, the jury acquitted him of the charge under sec. 325 and also of the charge under sec. 304. The learned vakil, who argued the case very well, relied mainly upon an alleged misdirection as to the accused being a member of an unlawful assembly. It is clear that the assembly, of which the accused was a member, was in the first instance a lawful assembly, and that was pointed out by the learned Judge. But the case of the prosecution was that after the people, who had come to fish in the tank, retreated and after there was no further necessity for any violence, some of those who formed the police party turned themselves into an unlawful assembly with the common object of unnecessarily beating some of those who had come to fish : and the learned vakil argued that the learned Judge had not sufficiently directed the jury upon this point.

The main part of the summing up in this respect, was as follows :—The learned Judge dealt fully with the facts. Then he said : " Now I come to the law. The first charge is under sec. 147. To understand it you should know sec. 141 read and explained." Therefore, it is clear that the learned Judge explained to the jury what was necessary to constitute an unlawful assembly under sec. 141—" common object is essential." Therefore, the learned Judge directed the attention of the jury to the fact that a common object was essential : and, I find that in a later part of his summing up he indicated that the alleged common intention was to beat the fishing party. Then he proceeded to say in his charge to the jury, " An assembly not unlawful at the inception may become so later. Then again, illegal act by one or two not acquiesced in by others does not change its character." There, I think, the learned Judge must have been explaining to the jury that if the police party in the first instance constituted a lawful assembly, the fact that one or two of them committed the alleged illegal act would not change the character and nature of the assembly, but that it would require five persons or more than five persons, who were actuated by a common intention, namely, that of beating the fishing party, to change the character of the assembly from a lawful one to an unlawful one.

In considering the learned vakil's point it must be remembered that these were "heads of charge" only, and it was impossible for the learned Judge to write down everything he said to the jury. I am satisfied, on the summing up, taking it as a whole, that the learned Judge appreciated the point and that he drew the attention of the jury to it.

Consequently in my judgment, there was no misdirection in that respect.

Another point, to which the learned vakil drew our attention, was that there were certain witnesses, who were not called on behalf of the prosecution; and, he argued that the learned Judge ought to have directed the jury that they were entitled to assume from that fact that if those witnesses had been called they would not have supported the case for the prosecution. The learned Judge did not say this in so many words, but in effect what he did say on that point, in my judgment, was sufficient.

The last point, with which it is necessary for me to deal, is the question of sentence. The learned Judge sentenced the accused to two years' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 147, I. P. C. He then proceeded to pass a further sentence under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, namely, for three years' rigorous imprisonment, and directed that the sentences should run concurrently.

The learned vakil drew our attention to the case of Nilmoney Poddar v. Queen-Empress (1). In that case the accused had been convicted of an offence under sec. 148, and there was a further conviction under sec. 324 coupled with sec. 149. A sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment was passed upon the Appellant under sec. 148 and a further sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment was passed for the offence under sec. 324 read with sec. 149. The learned Counsel for the Crown admitted that the case, which we are now considering, cannot be distinguished in principle from the case in Nilmoney Poddar v. Queen-Empress (1). The learned Chief Justice in that case said :"In this case the offence of voluntarily causing hurt under sec. 324 coupled with sec. 149 of the Indian Penal Code, of which these Appellants have been found guilty, is primarily made up of two parts, viz.: (1) of their being members of an unlawful assembly, by which force and violence was used in prosecution of its common object, and the members of which were armed with deadly weapons; and (2) of the offence of voluntarily causing hurt being committed by two other members of the unlawful assembly in prosecution of its common object. The first of these two parts is itself an offence, viz., rioting, armed with deadly weapons, under sec. 148 of the Indian Penal Code. It is nowhere expressly provided in law that, under the circumstances set forth above, the offender may be punished separately for the two offences constituted by the whole and the part respectively. Therefore we find that all the conditions laid down in paragraph 1 of sec. 71 of the Indian Penal Code are present here. Consequently the infliction of separate punishments for the two offences is illegal under it." In the result, the Court set aside the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment passed upon the Appellants under sec. 324 read with sec. 149. In the present case the first conviction was under sec. 147, I. P. C. instead of sec. 148 as in the Full Bench case; and the second conviction was under secs. 325/149 instead of secs. 324/149 as in the Full Bench case. It being admitted that the Full Bench decision is applicable to the present case, the infliction of separate punishments for the two offences is illegal under para. 1 of sec. 71 of the Indian Penal Code. It was suggested by the learned Counsel for the Crown at one time during the course of the argument that there was a difference between the case, which we are now considering, and the Full Bench case, inasmuch as the learned Judge who tried this case directed that the two sentences should run concurrently. I do not understand how that can make any difference. The provisions of para. 1 of sec. 71 forbid the infliction of separate punishments for the two offences in a case to which those provisions apply. In this case the learned Judge inflicted a sentence of two years under sec. 147 and a sentence of three years under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, I. P. Code. As the learned Chief Justice said in the Full Bench case, consequently the infliction of "separate punishments for the two offences is illegal under it." In my judgment, the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to sentence the accused in this case for both offences. If he had thought that it was necessary that the accused should be punished with a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment, he could have inflicted a sentence for that period under sec. 325 read with sec. 149, and he need not have passed any sentence under sec. 147. As a matter of fact he punished the accused first under sec. 147 and then proceeded to pass a further sentence under sec. 325 read with sec. 149. In my judgment, the sentence under sec. 325 read with sec. 149 should be set aside.

The result is that, in my judgment, the conviction of the accused under sec. 147 and the sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment passed upon him must stand. The conviction under sec. 325 read with sec. 149 must also stand but the sentence passed thereunder must be set aside.

CUMING, J.—I agree generally with the judgment which has just been delivered by the learned Chief Justice. At the same time I desire to make it clear that I am not prepared to hold that where, as in the present case, two separate sentences have been passed—one for rioting under sec. 147 and the other for constructive grievous hurt under sec. 325 read with sec. 149—the Court is obliged necessarily to maintain the one which was passed first in point of time and to set aside the sentence which come second in point of time. Obviously this might possibly reduce the question as to what sentence the accused would get to a lottery depending on the order in which the Judge or Magistrate passed the sentences and result in a serious miscarriage of justice. Sec. 71 provides that an accused person shall not be punished with the punishment of more than one of his offences which provision is obviously met by making all the sentences which have been imposed run concurrently. In the present case I am, however, of opinion that the ends of justice will be met by the sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment.

SATYA NARAIN SINGH, Appellant,
v.
SATYA NIRANJAN CHAKRAVARTI and ors., Respondents.

Ghatwali tenure, nature and incidents of—Where written grant produced, terms and conditions matter of construction—Inferences from subsequent dealings, if admissible—Law, if may be considered for purpose of construction—Grants by Government officers—Presumption that they were within their authority—Ghatwali tenure, if may be hereditary—Conditions of service, imply forfeiture on non-compliance—Continued demand and performance of service, if necessary—Readiness and willingness to serve and capacity for performance, sufficient—Ghatwali tenure, why inalienable—Local custom to contrary, what is necessary to prove—Proof of similar acts by doer, if admissible to establish validity of questioned act.

In a suit to enforce by sale certain mortgages executed by a former owner of the Hundwa estate against his heir, the latter pleaded that the estate being a ghatwali service grant direct from the Government was inalienable, and relied on two instruments executed by officers of the East India Company of 1776 and 1794, purporting to define the terms and conditions under which the lands were to be held, whilst the mortgagee's case was either that the grant was a non-ghatwali Istamrari Mokarari grant or at any rate a shikmi ghatwali of the Kharakpur Raj which have been judicially recognised as alienable with the consent of the Zemindar of Kharakpur; and to prove which they chiefly relied on a long series of administrative acts, records and reports of periods subsequent to the above-mentioned instruments which either affirmatively declared Hundwa to have been a shikmi ghatwali of Kharakpur or negatively treated it as, at any rate, wholly free from any ghatwali services to the Government:

Held—That the original instruments of grant having been produced and put in evidence, the nature of the grant rested upon their true construction and not upon notions entertained about them in later generations.

The Judicial Committee thought it advisable to consider generally the law relating to ghatwali tenures partly for the purpose of determining whether the construction adopted would in any way be inconsistent with that law and partly for the purpose of deciding the incidents which the law attaches to the form of tenure resulting from that construction.

Held—That upon the true construction of these instruments, the tenure was a Government tenure and this notwithstanding the fact that the grantees appeared to have been already holders of these lands under earlier grants or on customary service terms; that they granted a perpetual hereditary tenure, that the tenure was a service tenure, ghatwali in its nature, inalienable and indivisible and incapable of being sold in execution of a decree against the person of the incumbent of the office of ghatwal for the time being.

When the ghatwal's office has become hereditary in his family, alienation by him becomes impossible without infringing the right of his heirs; and when the office is of a public character and held for the general good, it is not enough to safeguard the superior's personal right of appointment, but it is also necessary to ensure that the lands and the services shall remain substantially connected, so that actual performance and not mere subordination may be assured, and this involves that the lands must remain impartible and inalienable.

That in construing these grants, it should be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the officers of Government were acting within their authority.

The law relating to ghatwali tenures stated.

Where services may be due in bulk and the obligation of the ghatwal consists not in personal guardianship of a particular post, but in providing the service of others who are competent to discharge the services in person (in this case the embodying and keeping up an armed force of 300 men with an appropriate staff of officers), the tenure may well be hereditary, the tenure in such a case being liable to forfeiture if the obligation of service is repudiated or if the heir be incapable of rendering even the vicarious service involved.

Though there was no express clause in the grants providing for forfeiture in case of non-compliance, in view of the very special and express words in which the terms of service were laid down, those terms should be regarded as the condition on which the ghatwal was to hold the lands.

Where a ghatwali tenure is created, as distinct from a mere personal employment, the tenure-holder has such an interest in the rendering of the services as entitles him to such benefit of the tenure as accrues from his readiness and willingness to perform his obligation. The service is not a mere burden on the land; it constitutes a personal right in so far as the land held on that condition is concerned and a personal obligation in so far as concerns the grantor which, being in the nature of a public obligation, cannot be waived by the grantor for his own advantage, nor being in the nature of a title to lands can be relegated to desuetude for the mere disadvantage of the ghatwal.

Readiness and willingness to perform the services when required may be inferred when there is no proof of any refusal to perform and where performance within a reasonable time, if required, is not shown to have become impossible. An actual appointment of the next heir to be ghatwal and actual performance of the stipulated ghatwali service is not required by law, for the maintenance of the ghatwali character of the tenure.

Government ghatwali tenures have to some extent lost, or appeared to lose, their identity by being included for revenue purposes in the assessment of Zemindari lands held by another and an independent proprietor. But the question whether or not a given ghatwali tenure is a Government ghatwali tenure must depend on the original grant; and unless the inclusion of the tenure in the assessment of Zemindari lands can be shown to have amounted to a release by the Government of the ghatwali services or to grant to a third party of the right to receive them and of the right to appoint the ghatwal, the tenure must remain as it originally was, a Government ghatwali tenure.

A local custom is one binding on all persons in the local area within which it prevails and differs entirely from a family custom, binding only on members of the family as to rules of descent and so forth. It is one which must be pleaded with particularity as to the local limits of the area of which it is alleged to be the custom and the evidence must be evidence as to the prevalence of the custom in that area. Except so far as analogy may serve to explain anything that is in itself obscure the customs of other localities are not relevant and such rules in cases relating to other areas are not in point.

Held—That the custom judicially found to exist in Kharakpur permitting alienation of ghatwali tenures within the Zemindari has no application to ghatwali tenures which like the present were found to be independent of the Kharakpur Zemindari, even though they may not be far off Kharakpur.

Where the whole matter in dispute was whether the alienation by a tenure-holder was valid, the fact that in other transactions besides the one in dispute he purported to alienate and appeared to believe in his own power to do so proves nothing.

These were consolidated appeals from a decree, dated the 9th July 1918, of the High Court at Patna, which varied a decree, dated the 14th September 1914, of the 1st Court of the Subordinate Judge at Bhagalpore.

The suit out of which the appeals arise was filed on the 20th April 1910 by Raja Ramranjan Chakravarti to enforce a mortgage, dated the 14th July 1895, executed by Raja Udit Narayan Singh, the adoptive father of the Defendant-Appellant.

Transferees of portions of the mortgaged properties which include the Hundwa estate were joined as co-Defendants.

The Appellant raised the defence that the Hundwa estate was ghatwali and therefore inalienable beyond the life of Udit Narayan Singh.

The trial Judge held that the Hundwa Raj was an ancient Zemindari heritable and alienable obtained by conquest long prior to the British rule, that it was not held on ghatwali tenure either from the Government or from the Zemindar but was an "ordinary Istamrari Mokarari tenure," and the Raja's interest did not terminate with his death. He further held that as the mortgagor had represented the property to be heritable and transferable his son, was estopped from pleading that it was inalienable.

The High Court (Roe and Coutts, JJ.) differed on one point from the Subordinate Judge holding that on a true construction of pattas granted in 1776 and 1794 to a predecessor-in-title of Udit Narayan Singh the grantee was a Moghul ghatwal prior to the Dewanee. They were of opinion, however, that Udit Narayan Singh did not hold as a ghatwal, that he was merely a de facto holder without licence from the ruling power of the lands attached to the post of ghatwal, and as such mortgaged his right, title and interest. His son succeeded to his rights and could not challenge his title.

The appeal was accordingly dismissed. The 2nd Defendant appealed to His Majesty in Council and the Plaintiffs cross-appealed against the amount of the interest decreed by the High Court.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.—The main question is whether Udit's tenure was ghatwali and, if so, whether it was a Government or a Kharakpur ghatwali. The Appellant's case is that it was a Government ghatwali, and as the Appellant was not allowed to bring the Government on the record the onus is on the Plaintiff to show that it has ceased to be a Government ghatwali. The Commissioner was not called as a witness and the onus was never discharged.

The High Court have decided that the tenure had ceased to be ghatwali from the time of Purandar Singh about 1808, but in that event it is not clear what estate his successor takes.

It is true that as services have been exacted from ghatwals in modern times but Government has never released the ghatwals from their liability nor have the latter refused to discharge their duties when called upon to do so.

Once it is shown that the estate is ghatwali it is established by the Courts that the tenure is hereditary, Durga Prosad Singh v. Tribeni Singh (18), and passes on the death of one holder to the next intact subject to service.

It is well established that it is not transferable, nor divisible, nor subject to sale in execution except with the consent of Government. Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Bakranath Singh (7). Moreover if the estate is ghatwali there can be no estoppel.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Respondents.—For the creation of a ghatwali tenure there must be a grant in specific terms. Hundwa was originally an independent Raj obtained by conquest by Bijai Singh about A. D. 1500. It was subsequently conquered by Kharakpur who levied tribute from it when he was strong enough to do so.

In 1776 the estate was settled by Capt. Brown. Brown's patta was a settlement with an existing Zemindar which involved no hereditary right. That so-called grant was different from a ghatwali grant in that although services had to be rendered the grant was not in consideration of services.

The document in 1776 was not a grant by Government. It was merely a pottah which is the confirmation of a title by the Settlement Officer.

In 1810 the dispute was whether Hundwa was a dependency of Kharakpur or an independent Zemindar. It was never suggested that it was a Government ghatwali.

In 1819 the question was decided and Hundwa was not included in the list of ghatwals prepared by Government.

The fact that Hundwa was included under Kharakpur by the Permanent Settlement shows that it was not independent of Kharakpur. Had it been a Government ghatwali it would have been resumed by Government. It was not so resumed because it was considered as a part of Kharakpur.

Leelanund Singh v. Government of Bengal (6).

The Plaintiffs contend that Hundwa was a proprietary zemindary which cannot be ghatwali.

The sanads are incapable of being construed as strict ghatwali grants, they are the ordinary sanads granted to a Zemindar appointing him as Zemindar with police and other duties.

[Field's Bengal Regulation's Introduction, p. 36, sec. 34.]

Further they are granted by officers who were incapable of making valid ghatwali grants and in any event ghatwali grants were extinguished by the Permanent Settlement.

In the records Hundwa is registered as "Istamrari Mokurari" which is inconsistent with a ghatwali tenure.

The High Court suggests that Hundwa is on the same footing as Pachete and Kharakpur which have been held to be alienable.

In any case now that the police services

Mr. Lowndes, K. C. in reply.

It is incorrect to say that Brown and Dixon had no authority to make the grants.

Their authority has never been called in question and the grants have been treated as sanads by this Board.

Lelanund Singh v. Munorunjan (3) and Leelanund Singh v. Government of Bengal (6).

The term "Zemindar" is not inconsistent with "ghatwal." Zemindars were originally mere revenue collectors and the name did not imply a free-hold title.

There is no evidence of the alleged local custom of the alienability of Kharakpur ghatwalis.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SUMNER.—This was a suit to enforce by sale certain mortgages of lands, which may be shortly called the Hundwa estates, created by the late Udit Narayan Singh of Lagma, in Pergana Hundwa, a jungleterry taluq in the Santal Parganas District. The suit was defended on behalf of Kumar Satya Narayan Singh, whom the widow of Udit Singh adopted under his testamentary authority as his son, and the ground of defence was that the Hundwa estates were and are inalienable and passed unencumbered to this Defendant as successor on the death of Udit Singh, the mortgages notwithstanding. Two main questions arose: the first, whether the estates were ever inalienable at all; and the second, even if so, whether before the dates of the mortgages they had not become alienable in full. Both Courts rejected the defence: the Subordinate Judge mainly on the first point; the High Court of Patna, while accepting the original inalienability of the estates, definitely upon the second. This Defendant now appeals.

The title and tenure asserted by the Appellant rest on an alleged grant and subsequent confirmation of a permanent ghatwali tenure made to his ancestor Subha Singh by Captain Brown and Mr. Dickinson, officers of the ruling power, in 1776 and 1794 respectively. The Respondents' case is that nothing more took place than an ordinary revenue settlement of these estates, then belonging to Subha Singh, confirmed at the Permanent Settlement, and subject to no tenure or condition of inalienability.

In a very elaborate judgment the learned Subordinate Judge examined the whole history of Hundwa for over a century and a half, and his conclusions may be thus summarised. Hundwa was originally acquired in absolute ownership in or before the sixteenth century by a Khetauri family driven from its earlier home by Rajput pressure from the west. Subsequently, at a date unknown, it became annexed to the Kharakpur Raj and was tributary to it, but, for their own purposes and not under obligation to any overlord, the Rajas of Hundwa continued to appoint their own ghatwals in Hundwa and to maintain an armed force of jaghirdars. Hundwa was at this stage of its history, when the East India Company obtained the Dewani in 1763 and, in assessing revenue on the mahal of Hundwa, included it as part of the Kharakpur estate for fiscal purposes. When the Santal Parganas came under martial law the landed proprietors ex majori cautela obtained pottas and sanads from the military officers in charge confirmatory of the rights which they had enjoyed in quieter times. They were, as was the whole population, liable to military service if called upon, and no doubt they accepted in their pottas mention of a service which arose out of the state of the country. When about the end of the century peace had been fully re-established in the district, no further service of the kind was requisite, and, in spite of the language of the pottas, none was ever required. Such was the case of Hundwa, as of many other estates. Nothing more had been done by its proprietors than the ordinary rural police work, which fell on all landed proprietors of consideration, and, although in a country where names die hard the old tradition of the existence of ghatwals in Hundwa, and with it the name, continued to survive, there was in fact no correspondence between the old and the recent state of things. The Raja of Hundwa himself never was a ghatwal, either appointed by the Mogul power at Delhi or by the East India Company. He was, when he chose, a grantor of ghatwali holdings of his own creation, but, subject only to his payment to the Zemindars of Kharakpur, he was an independent proprietor and not the holder of any service tenure.

The learned Judge thus made light of the title deeds, on which the Defendant relied, regarding them as mere recognitions, not very accurately expressed, of pre-existing rights, for which view he thought that he found conclusive record and authority in the reports of various officers of the company, which have been published from time to time. From similar sources, and to the like effect, was derived a whole series of other incidents and of official acts which he considered to be of capital importance.

At the beginning of the last century the Collector of Bhagulpore prepared a list of the ghatwals in Kharakpur, and this list does not mention the Defendant's ancestor, who was then in possession of the Hundwa estate and must have held it, according to the Defendant, as a ghatwali tenure. A few years later Mr. J. P. Ward reported, in 1833, that Hundwa was held by the Defendant's ancestor as a ghatwali tenure, but as a ghatwali tenure under the Raja of Kharakpur, though he added that this dependency had been successfully disputed. Mr. Ward records this without making any suggestion that it was really held from the Government direct, except that Captain Brown and Mr. Dickinson are spoken of as having respectively made and continued a "grant." In 1838 Government took proceedings under Reg. XI of 1819 to resume Hundwa, on the ground that it was lying unassessed to revenue, though it had been included in the Permanent Settlement of Mahalat Kharakpur in 1796, when Kadir Ali was the Kharakpur Raja. The claim failed, and the Government acquiesced in the decision, although an entry in the Settlement Register of Mokurrari Istamrari Jumma of Bhagulpore for 1801-1802 recorded in regard to Hundwa that after the Dewani a mokurrari potta had been granted subject to ghatwali and mentioned as the foundation for this record Captain Brown's potta for the whole Pargana Hundwa, dated 1776, and Mr. Dickinson's sanad of 1794. In 1863, after the adverse decision of their Lordships' Board, reported in 6 Moore's Indian Appeals, the Government agreed with the Raja of Kharakpur of that day, in consideration of an annual payment of Rs. 10,000, to surrender its right to the advantage of having ghatwals regularly appointed for the performance of public police services, whose jaghirs the Raja would have to provide himself. For this purpose a list had been prepared of the ghatwals, to whose services the Government might lawfully lay claim, but Hundwa is not in the list. It is, of course, matter for argument whether the reason for the omission is that Hundwa, as a ghatwali tenure, was not included in the Zemindary of Kharakpur, not being the subject of a public service as to which the Raja of Kharakpur had any responsibility, or whether, as the learned Judge thought, the true reason is that the Raja of Hundwa held his lands as an independent proprietor and not by any manner of ghatwali service at all. It certainly is of some importance that such a list should have been made for such a purpose without any mention of Hundwa and without any explanation of the reason why it was not mentioned. In subsequent years various less important proceedings took place, as to which the observation is that the official ignorance of the fact, if fact it was, that Hundwa was held direct from the Government on a ghatwali tenure is singular in any case and doubly so in view of the existence of Captain Brown's and Mr. Dickinson's grants, which could hardly have been entirely lost sight of. Thus in 1867 part of the lands of Hundwa were acquired for a public road and paid for without any indication that Hundwa differed from any other of the lands under Kharakpur. A similar incident, of no great importance in itself, was given in evidence when more land was required for the road in 1872. In 1875 the Commissioner for the Division called on the Collector of the district for information as to all ghatwali tenures, from which police services were then demandable, and again Hundwa was omitted from the replies, as though all trace had been lost of the Government right to call for ghatwali service. From his comments on these events the learned Judge appears to have thought that, if a Government could be conceived to be capable of losing sight of rights of great antiquity and small value, legal consequences would follow in the lapse of years, disabling the Government, to the advantage of the proprietor, from enforcing its claims. He recites, however, in his judgment, extracts from official correspondence from 1869 onwards, which show that the writers themselves were alive to the fact, that there might be still existing ghatwali tenures in the districts in question as to which, for various reasons, the demand of services had in fact ceased, and contrasts them with other passages, from which he infers, not without reason, that the writers had not lost sight, at any rate, of Hundwa, but were clearly, if erroneously, of opinion that it was not a Government ghatwali, but probably was a shikmi tenure under the estate of Kharakpur.

The Subordinate Judge finally attached very great importance to the entries in the record-of-rights relating to Hundwa, in which at the settlements made in 1874-79 and 1898-1907 the taluqas in question were entered as the Istamrari Mokurrari property of the Raja of Hundwa without any qualifying addition, such as might have been made and in the case of other ghatwali properties was made, and he regarded the record-of-rights as being "the clearest possible positive evidence of the fact that Hundwa is not a ghatwali at all, whether under the control of the Government or of the Zemindar."

Undoubtedly this long series of administrative acts, records and reports, which either affirmatively declare Hundwa to have been a shikmi ghatwali of Kharakpur or negatively treat it as, at any rate, wholly free from any ghatwali services to the Government, is, as the learned Subordinate Judge found it, a very impressive circumstance. If the problem had been to infer the true original grant, which, in the absence of the text of it, could only be collected from the evidence of what was done and left undone in connection with Hundwa by the ruling power, it would, no doubt, have been difficult to infer, as the explanation which best fitted all the facts, that the right originally granted consisted of a ghatwali tenure, held from the East India Company direct. The production of the authentic texts of the original grants completely alters the question, and it becomes in the first instance one of construction. The reports of the Government officers are not even contemporanea expositio, for the earliest one must have been based on hearsay accounts, already one or two generations old, and presumably not on any inspection of the original grants, since they are not mentioned.

In the High Court the learned Judges differed from the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge, holding that Hundwa was originally a Mogul ghatwali, hereditary in the family of the Defendant's ancestors, which Captain Brown and Mr. Dickinson confirmed but did not originate, by the potta and sanad in question. They arrived at this conclusion on the construction of the two documents, read in the light of contemporaneous conduct and of prior history, which they conceived to have been sufficiently established or to be common knowledge. Roe, J., thus states their conclusions :—

"The Hundwa tenure was, prior to the Dewanee, a Mogul ghatwali. The effect of assumption of jurisdiction over the jungle Terai Mahals by the East India Company was at most to convert the allegiance of the ghatwal from an allegiance to the Mogul Empire to an allegiance to the East India Company. The permanent settlement did not destroy the Company's right to enforce nor relieve Purander Singh from liability to render that allegiance. Nothing that has since been done has altered the position. The descendants of Purander Singh have never specifically refused to render services as ghatwals. . . . The entry of the ghatwali service attached to the Mahal in Ex. F still stands. . . It may be that the power to enforce these services has lapsed by limitation. That question was not argued at the bar and could not be raised in this suit. I am satisfied that the right has not been destroyed by any definite act."

As the construction, which was put upon these documents in the High Court, was strenuously contested at their Lordships' bar by the Respondents, who prayed that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge on this point should be restored, the first question for decision will be whether or not the lands of

SATYA NARAIN SINGH v. SATYA NIRANJAN CHAKRAVARTI.

Hundwa were at any material time a ghatwali tenure at all or not. Without proceeding upon the same line of reasoning as that adopted in the High Court, their Lordships are of opinion that they were. Formidable as the series of official acts and reports above-mentioned appears to be, their Lordships think that, as soon as the texts of original instruments, such as the potta and sanad in question, dating from a time anterior to all these matters, are produced and put in evidence, the nature of the estate of Hundwa rests upon their true construction and import and not upon the notions entertained about them in later generations.

The instrument of 1776 is one of a considerable number of similar instruments executed by Captain James Brown of the East India Company's service, who gave a full account of the district, which was published in India Tracts, 1787. He was one of the officers employed in introducing order into the five jungle Terai Mahals, including Birbhum and Kharakpur. Though the originals of the two documents in question are not now forthcoming and probably have been lost, they had been so often produced and accepted in numerous suits for the last eighty years and more, that the translations used in the present case have been accepted without question as truly representing authentic originals. The document of 1776 is headed "Patta in terms of Kabuliyat granted," etc. (which Kabuliyat, however, is also not forthcoming), and is entitled in the commencement thus: "This Istamrari Mokurrari Patta is granted to you . . . . at a varying consolidated jumma, Rs. 2,701, in respect of Pergana Hundwa." The document itself sets out no parcels for Pargana Hundwa, though there is an express exception of Brahmottar and other lands, "jagirs granted to archers and Barkandases, perquisites of Imlah lands and other Zemindari expenses." Then follow certain clauses which may not go beyond duties then ordinarily discharged by Zemindars, though among them occur the words "You should go round your village, escorted by archers and Barkandases holding jagir grants, as per details given below, and protect the villages"; but further on occurs this most significant clause: "When called by the Hazur you should be escorted by a body of archers and Barkandases 307 in number, of whom the Sardars will be 7 and archers and Barkandases will be 300, and should appear before the Huzur, and you ought to be careful about the boundaries and limits of your village."

There follows a sort of summary or schedule headed "Annual jama of the Istamrari Mokurrari settlement . . . . . Barkandases and archers," with details showing how Rs. 2,701 are made up, which throw no light on the present question. It is clear that the whole sum payable to the revenue is payable by Raja Subhao Singh. There is, further, a contemporaneous Dowl, which, it is common ground, supplies the parcels intended to be included in this settlement. It is admitted that the lands in mortgage are lands to which the instrument of 1776 applied, but it has to be observed that, when Hundwa is mentioned in the interval, since then, it cannot always be concluded that the whole of the lands so referred to were either lands covered by this instrument or lands belonging to the family of Subhao Singh and Udit Singh. Their content seems to have changed from time to time. These facts add to the obscurity of the past history of Hundwa, but as no issue turned on these discrepancies in the Courts below, their Lordships are of opinion that they do not affect the present question one way or the other.

SATYA NARAIN SINGH v. SATYA NIRANJAN CHAKRAVARTI.

Importance has further been attached to the persons named in the instrument of 1776 and to the manner in which they are referred to. It is expressed to be granted to "Raja Subhao Singh, Babu Udit Singh, Babu Gopal Singh, Babu Lal Singh and others, ghatwals of Pargana Hundwa appertaining to Kharakpur." No doubt the senior of the kinsmen is called Raja out of respect. The term does not mean that Subhao Singh was an independent proprietor, while the other kinsmen were not but were ghatwals only; the whole class are ghatwals of Hundwa, though varying in social importance. In the operative part it is mandatory, though always in general terms—"You should always obey the Government," and so forth. The Dowl mentions Subhao, Gopal, Lal and Udwant (who may really be Udit), in connection respectively with the Taluqas Khandwa, Phuljheri, Kesri and Sarji, and it names six or seven other persons whom the instrument itself does not name at all. These discrepancies, for the same reason as that above stated, seem to their Lordships not to require further discussion.

In 1794 this instrument was perused and considered by Mr. Dickinson, the Government officer then in charge of this district, and he issued a Parwana, which is also relied on by the Appellant as part of his title and, in view of the fact that it purports to be a substantive confirmatory grant, has throughout been accepted on both sides as being one with the instrument of 1776 for purposes of construction of the title. It is in the name of the East India Company. It is addressed to the Mutsaddis, present and future, of Pargana Hundwa, and ultimately directs them to "treat the said Pargana as a mokurrari tenure," to "receive the fixed Jama of the said Pargana by regular instalments each year from Raja Purandar Singh, Zemindar, and others"; and it adds, "You shall not demand anything in excess, nor shall you demand production of fresh sanads every year."

The rest of this Parwana consists of recitals of details and parcels and of words of grant. It records that, since Captain Brown granted Hundwa, "old Zemindari of Raja Subhao Singh," "as permanent Mokuarrari to him, Udit Singh, Gopal Singh, Lal Singh, Bishun Singh, Fatêh Singh, and other ghatwals of the said Pergunna," all these persons except Gopal Singh have died, and Subhao Singh's nephew, Purandar Singh, has been in possession of the shares of his uncle and also of Udit Singh and of Gopal Singh, paying the Government revenue; while in the case of the others, sons in each case have succeeded to fathers' shares. The Parwana concludes: "Therefore, taking into consideration their right of inheritance, so much of the said Pargana as formed the share of Raja Subhao Singh, Zemindar, and of Udwant Singh and Gopal Singh, ghatwals, is granted as before to Raja Purandar Singh, Zemindar, and so much of it as belongs to Lal Singh has been granted to Budhan Singh, the share of Bishun Singh to Manik Singh, the share of Fatêh Singh to Rohan Singh and other ghatwals, and to their descendants as permanent Mokurrari tenure." The rent, "excepting the Jagir lands of Barkandases and archers," is Rs. 2,701. The obligations of the document of 1776, as to looking after the villages and appearing before the Huzur with a force 307 strong, are referred to, but whether for the purpose of reciting that these obligations have hitherto been performed, or of directing the Mutsaddis to see that they are performed in the future, is not, as a matter of drafting, quite clear. What is clear is that there is nothing to take away from the earlier document in this respect and that, reading the two instruments together, effect must be given to these provisions as part of their terms. What, then, must that effect be?

The Respondents' contention, briefly, is that these provisions are nothing more than the expression of duties then currently required of Zemindars, and whether required or not, discharged by them in their own interests and in the interests of their ryots; that the mention of ghatwals does not include Subhao Singh or Purandar Singh themselves; and that the "other" ghatwals mentioned do not include them in one class but are ghatwals subordinate to them, whose duties are of earlier origin than either of these instruments and are not based upon them. The language employed is relied upon in support of the view that Hundwa was, before 1776, an independent Zemindari in the family of Subhao Singh, held subject only to payment of Government revenue; that such ghatwals as then existed, were his shikmi ghatwals, and that all that Captain Brown and Mr. Dickinson did was to settle what eventually became the permanent revenue payments due in respect of the whole estate and to signify this in an ordinary settlement potta, confirmed by the later Parwana. These contentions their Lordships think unsound.

It may be advisable to consider generally the law relating to ghatwali tenures, partly for the purpose of determining whether the construction adopted by their Lordships is in any way inconsistent with that law, and partly for the purpose of deciding the incidents which the law attaches to the form of tenure resulting from that construction. In the Santal Parganas there are for practical purposes three classes of ghatwali tenures, (a) Government ghatwalis, created by the ruling power; (b) Government ghatwalis, which since their creation and generally at the time of the Permanent Settlement have been included in a Zemindari estate and formed into an unit in its assessment; and (c) Zemindari ghatwalis, created by the Zemindar or his predecessors and alienable with his consent. The second of these classes is really a branch of the first. The matter may, however, be looked at broadly. In itself "ghatwal" is a term meaning an office held by a particular person from time to time, who is bound to the performance of its duties, with a consideration to be enjoyed in return by the incumbent of the office. Within this meaning the utmost variety of conditions may exist. There may be a mere personal contract of employment for wages, which take the form of the use of land or an actual estate in land, heritable and perpetual, but conditional upon services certain or services to be demanded. The office may be public or private, important or the reverse. The ghatwal, the guard of the pass, may be the bulwark of a whole country-side against invaders; he may be merely a sentry against petty marauders; he may be no more than a kind of gamekeeper, protecting the crops from the ravages of wild animals. Ghatwali duties may be divided into police duties and quasi-military duties, though both classes have lost much of their importance, and the latter in any strict form are but rarely rendered. Again, the duties of the office may be such as demand personal discharge by the ghatwal and personal competence for that discharge; they may, on the other hand, be such as can be discharged vicariously, by the creation of shikmi tenures and by the appointment and maintenance of a subordinate force, or they may be such as in their nature only require to be provided for in bulk. It is plain that where a grant is forthcoming to a man and his heirs as ghatwal, or is to be presumed to have been made though it may have since been lost, personal performance of the ghatwali services is not essential so long as the grantee is responsible for them and procures them to be rendered [Shib Lall v. Moorad Khan (1)]. So much for the ghatwal. The superior, who appoints him, may also in the varying circumstances of the organisation of Hindostan be the ruling power over the country at large, the land-holder responsible by custom for the maintenance of security and order within his estates, or simply the private person, to whom the maintenance of watchmen is, in the case of an extensive property, important enough to require the creation of a regular office. It would not be easy to draw with precision the distinction in the duties performable by him between a person who might properly be called a ghatwal, and a person, who is only to be styled a chowkidar, though the legal incidents of the respective positions are clearly different. At the other end of the scale the term "ghatwal" may be the honourable badge of a great proprietor, who in his day was a veritable Warden of the Marches. In the minor senses of the word, "ghatwal" can hardly be said to connote a tenure at all. A jaghir, assigned for the support and remuneration of a ghatwal, may be no more than wages in kind, arising from the use of a plot of land customarily in the occupation of the ghatwal for the time being, and in such a case personal service by the employee and personal selection and appointment by the employer may well be in every case essential incidents of the relationship. Incompetence and misconduct on the part of the employee may be causes for removal of the ghatwal and resumption of his holding [Neelanund v. Surwan Singh, (2)]; actual appointment may be the necessary initiation and seal of his office; personal selection may be the whole basis of his service and mere family claims valueless in the matter. On the other hand, there are great estates, whose proprietors are found holding them or parts of them upon the terms of providing that ghatwali services shall be forthcoming, either regularly or when required; services, which it is impossible for the proprietor himself to render in his own person, and which become possible to him and to those to whom he renders them simply by virtue of his possession of the lands thus granted. In such cases the ghatwali tenure, even if not originally granted as heritable, easily becomes so, and is commonly found on the death of an incumbent of the office to descend to some member of his family, if not necessarily to the senior member. Thus in Kharakpur ghatwals have a perpetual hereditary tenure at a fixed jumma [Munrunjun v. Lelanund (3)]. A recognised right to be appointed ghatwal, then takes the place of a formal appointment; a recognised right in the superior to dismiss the ghatwal, if he is no longer able and willing to render the service required by his tenure, and to appoint another person to the office and the tenure of the lands, then readily suffices to maintain in perpetuity the incidents of the tenure. Women of rank have thus in some instances come to be the recognised holders of ghatwali lands [Doorga Pershad v.

Doorga Kooeri (4)]. The case of Rani Surbessuri occurred in 1783 in Kharakpur, and there are said to have been many such cases in Birbhum. A further incident of such a tenure is the inalienability of the ghatwali lands; for it is obvious that, if the whole lands were alienated together at the choice of the ghatwal, he would be in a position either to make his own alienee, possibly a person non-resident or unfit, the ghatwal in succession to himself without the consent of his superior, or to deprive himself of the whole of the means provided to enable the services to be rendered, while himself retaining the office, whose obligations he could in consequence no longer fulfil. The office cannot, except by special custom, grant or other arrangement, either run with lands or be severed from them. If the lands are alienated piece-meal—and this must be involved in a right to alienate them at all—the same difficulty arises in another form, for here, the office being indivisible, the question is to which of a number of several purchasers of the lands is it to pass? Hurlal Singh v. Jorawun Singh (5), Lelanund Singh v. Government of Bengal (6), Nilmoni Singh v. Bakranath Singh (7) and Munrunjun v. Lelanund (3). It is true that, so far as the superior is concerned, the inconveniences which would arise from allowing to the ghatwal a free right of alienation may be met by reserving to the superior the right of withholding consent to the alienation and thus defeating it, and this, coupled with the right to appoint a successor to the office when it falls vacant, may in practice be sometimes all the protection that the superior requires, but in two points affecting others it is insufficient. First of all, when the ghatwal's office has become hereditary in his family, alienation by him becomes impossible without infringing the right of his heirs; and secondly, when the office is of a public character and held for the general good, it is not enough to safeguard the superior's personal right of appointment, but it is also necessary to ensure that the lands and the services shall remain substantially connected so that actual performance and not mere subordination may be assured, and this involves that the lands must remain impartible and inalienable. These considerations peculiarly apply where the superior, by whom ghatwals are appointed and of whom ghatwali lands are held, is the ruling power itself. In Mogul times such grants were common; nor did their existence by any means come to an end with the assumption of the Dewanny. Government ghatwali tenures have to some extent lost, or appeared to lose, their identity by being included for revenue purposes in the assessment of Zemindary lands held by another and an independent proprietor, but the question whether or not a given ghatwali tenure is a Government ghatwali tenure must depend on the original grant, and unless the inclusion of the tenure in the assessment of Zemindary lands can be shown to have amounted to a release by the Government of the ghatwali services or to a grant to a third party of the right to receive them and of the right to appoint the ghatwal, the tenure must remain, as it originally was, a Government ghatwali tenure.

In view of these considerations, their

Lordships think that there is nothing in the general law to limit the interpretation of these documents according to their natural sense, and they are unable to accept the argument, which the Respondents base on the special words employed in them. Even now the words "raja," "zemindari," "potta" and "istamrari mokurrari" are not so strictly used as always to bear a precise meaning or to refer invariably to cases, in which nothing is due but an annual Government jumma for an absolute estate in lands. There is even less ground for so holding when the documents under construction are nearly 150 years old. No authority is forthcoming to show that a holding on the terms of both yielding a jumma and rendering a quasi-military service may not be consistent with the use of these words. Whether the service tenure is made a term or not, the holder might be a "Zemindar" or land-holder and his holding be "perpetual" and "on fixed terms," and the position of Subhao Singh depends not on his being styled "raja" and Zemindar, which are general expressions of consideration, but upon the conditions upon which he held the land. Their Lordships are further unable to refer the obligation to furnish a force of 307 men to any ordinary police administration of a Bengal Zemindari. The force is precise and it is large; it is military rather than civil; it does not vary according to the needs of the moment, but is fixed at a standing number at all times, and attendance on the Huzur with the whole force on demand is clearly beyond the scope of mere constabulary duties. Effect must be given to these very special and express words, and although no forfeiture is stated in case of non-compliance with them, it is only possible to do so by regarding them as descriptive of an obligatory service tenure, whether of the ordinary ghatwali type or not, and as the condition on which the ghatwal holds the lands.

It is, however, objected that the authority of Captain Brown and Mr. Dickinson to make a grant on combined terms of revenue rental and quasi-military service is an essential matter and that, as servants of the East India Company, then only exercising the Dewanny of Bengal, Orissa and Behar, these officers would naturally be concerned only with military action and with revenue revisions, and not with making new grants of old estates. It may be conceded that there is no evidence to show that the holder of this estate prior to 1776, who appears to have been Subhao Singh himself, had conducted himself in any way that would have justified a forfeiture of it, nor is it shown that, if it were so, Captain Brown had any authority to forfeit the lands into the Company's hands. He was acting under martial law it is true, in a time of acute disturbance in this region, but that of itself would not make him a person to exercise such a power. The answer to these objections appears to their Lordships to be this. It must be presumed that for anything done by Captain Brown in the purported discharge of his functions some valid authority existed until the contrary is proved, especially in a matter which was repeatedly brought before Government officials and Courts of law within but a short time of the event without once, so far as their Lordships know, having any doubt cast upon its validity. It is very probable, though not absolutely proved, that before 1776 some ghatwali tenure of these lands had existed in this family for many years and that Captain Brown's policy was to confirm what he found already existing. The grant to Subhao Singh of land previously held by that proprietor would be explicable and regular, if Subhao Singh either surrendered this estate, already held on a ghatwali tenure, in consideration of a re-grant from the new ruling power on satisfactory terms as to jumma and service, or if, being already holder on joint rent and service terms, subject to revision at the will of the old ruling power, which is known historically to have been common in Mogul times, he now received and accepted from the new ruling power a grant, which fixed his rent and his service favourably and for a term, which was expected to be, and soon actually became, a term in perpetuity. It is probable enough that Subhao Singh would turn from the setting to the rising sun and make new terms if he could. It is certain, from the map in Mr. Macpherson's report and from the history of the district, that, if Hundwa was not a ghatwali tenure, whatever be the time of its first creation, a singular and perilous gap was left for no discoverable reason in the line of defences consisting of ghatwali tenures, which was devised to protect the lands, known as the Dâman-i-Kôh. In upholding old titles, of which the authentic records are still forthcoming, their Lordships are justified in making all reasonable presumptions to explain them and give them validity. Certainly in making either of these assumptions they are not trespassing beyond the bounds either of actual probability or of legal precedent, and as the alternative would be either to disregard express words and to leave them no force at all, or else to assume that what has been treated as a good title for over a century is really an instance in which an official, unsuspecting and unsuspected, has outstepped the limits of his unknown power, their Lordships have no hesitation in saying that the grants of Captain Brown and Mr. Dickinson created a valid permanent service tenure of the estate of Hundwa.

It must be conceded that from the time of Purandar Singh to the present day no Zemindar of the Hundwa estate has ever been personally appointed ghatwal either by Government sanad or otherwise. The fact is common ground. It may be observed that, if the fact be material in this case, the consequences would not be those contended for by the Respondents, for if a person enters into possession of a ghatwali jaghir, not having obtained the appointment which is required to make him the lawful holder of it, his possession is without title at all, and until by prescription or otherwise he acquires a right which he is capable of alienating—a question which does not arise here—the lack of a sanad of appointment is really the proof of the defect of his title, not of the completeness of it. In this case, however, the grant of 1794 expressly makes the tenure hereditary without any renewal of the appointment. It is a grant to the named persons and their descendants, and the direction to the Mutsaddis is, "Nor shall you demand production of fresh sanads every year." Nor is this inconsistent, as the Respondents contend, with the grant being a service grant at all. Their Lordships are unable, however, to accept the argument that in this case the lands are merely subjected to a pecuniary charge, so that the personality or the appointment of the holder would be of no importance. The tenure-holder has to raise and maintain the force, not merely to pay for it. Whatever may be the other incidents, it is clear that these grants impose on him the duty of providing a specific armed force and of attending with it upon the competent Government officers whenever this service is required of him. What can this be but a service tenure?

Again, it is objected that true heritability is inconsistent with a ghatwali tenure when the office is of a personal character. A jaghir may, it is true, be held by a ghatwal on the terms of personal employment and service of the strictest kind and in the most complete subordination. In such a case selection and appointment are the natural commencement of the service, and its determination in fact involves the determination of this highly personal tenure. Where everything depends on personal qualifications and exertions a heritable tenure is out of place. On the other hand, services may be due in bulk and the obligation of the ghatwal may consist, not in personal guardianship of a particular post, but in providing the service of others who are competent to discharge the services in person. The obligation to embody and keep up an armed force of 300 men with an appropriate staff of officers is pre-eminently an obligation of this kind. It is personal in that the grantee under this tenure is himself bound to the provision of this force from time to time and is not merely chargeable in respect of the expense, or bound to make a contribution to the expense of forces embodied and kept on foot by others. It is personal in that the lands are granted upon this tenure in order that out of their produce the obligation in question may be discharged by the grantee. It is, however, impersonal in that the very nature of the service is rather one of purveyance than of arms. For this purpose the ghatwal must be a person of property, and for that reason he is the grantee of lands as ghat wali lands; but he need not be himself a soldier or watchman, and for that reason also the lands, though ghatwali lands, may descend to heirs without personal selection and appointment, as is the case here. Since the tenure is a service tenure, the lands are liable to forfeiture if the obligation of service is expressly repudiated, while the rights of the ruling power are similarly sufficiently safeguarded by holding that the succession of an heir incapable of rendering even the vicarious service involved in the provision of this armed force, might be treated as being in itself a ground of forfeiture in the person of that successor, if not in the persons of the entire family, for it is what might be called an anticipatory repudiation. It is enough to indicate this principle as an answer to the argument that the absence of actual appointments and the presence in the Parwana of 1794 of an actual dispensation from periodic sanads are both fatal to the existence of any true ghatwali tenure. It is not necessary to decide whether and to what extent an appearance of personal unfitness in a particular heir would operate to disable him from succession as ghatwal.

In view of the considerations above set out, their Lordships have arrived at the following conclusions with regard to the construction and effect of the potta of 1776 and the sanad of 1794 :—

(1) The instruments contain words of grant and purport to make grants on behalf of and in the name of the East India Company. They must be so interpreted, nor can this construction be defeated merely because there may be ground for thinking that the grantees were already holders of these lands under earlier grants or on customary service terms. The tenure is therefore a Government tenure. A similar construction was adopted by the High Court of Calcutta in Raja Lelanund's case (3).

(3) 3 W. R. 84 (H. C.) (1865); L. R. I. A. Sup. Vol. 181; 13 B. L. R. 124 (P. C.) (1873).

(2) As the grants are expressed to be istimrari mokurrari grants, and as in fact the lands have for generations descended in the family of the Defendant from ancestor to heir, they are a perpetual and hereditary tenure. A similar conclusion was arrived at in Munrunjun Singh's case (3) when a sanad of 1777, granted by Captain Brown in similar terms, was under construction.

(3) The express obligation imposed on the grantees, as an integral part of the grant, to support a specified number of Barkandases, and with them to attend the Huzur when required, shows that the tenure is a service tenure and is ghatwali in its nature.

(4) A tenure so granted is inalienable and indivisible [Hurlal Singh v. Jorawun Singh (5)] and cannot be sold in execution of a decree against the person of the incumbent of the office of ghatwal for the time being [see Nilmoni's case (7) and Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of Burdwan (8)].

(5) Neither by the terms of the grant nor by the general law applying to such ghatwali tenures is an actual appointment of the next heir to be ghatwal in the room of his predecessor requisite, nor is actual performance of the stipulated ghatwali services from time to time necessary. Readiness and willingness to perform them when required may be inferred where there is no proof of any refusal to perform and where performance within a reasonable time, if required, is not shown to have become impossible.

At the last stage of this argument the Respondents' counsel raised the further contention that Hundwa is in any case locally in Kharakpur, and that, by a well-established local custom, now always recognised, Kharakpur ghatwali lands are alienable. They disclaimed any contention that a family custom existed, and put the point solely as one of local custom. Their Lordships might well have refused to entertain this contention, for it involves important considerations of fact as well as of law, and it had not been determined or even discussed in the Courts in India. It was, however, said to rest on a series of decisions of long standing, and their Lordships, loth to appear to cast any doubt upon such authorities by refusing to take account of them on the ground of a rule of procedure, have determined, under the circumstances, to deal shortly with this contention.

The proposition that Hundwa is in Kharakpur must, in consequence of the litigation of 1812 to 1819, to be mentioned hereafter, be now regarded as a purely topographical statement. What the area or the site known as Kharakpur may be is a matter for evidence, and no evidence was given about it. It is further a matter as to which the Courts in Bengal have original means of knowledge which their Lordships do not possess, and for this reason the fact that the contention was never submitted to those Courts becomes doubly significant. If it is well founded, the whole of the discussions and proofs, which led to two long hearings and two elaborate judgments, would have been obviated in limine, for the whole point of the defence disappeared, if Hundwa was by binding custom and by decisions recognising that custom an alienable tenure. If such a crucial point was never made, it was probably because the local knowledge of the Courts themselves would have compelled them to overrule the point as soon as stated.

A local custom is one binding on all persons in the local area within which it prevails, and differs entirely from a family custom, binding only on members of the family as to rules of descent and so forth [Rajkishen v. Ramjoy (9)]. It is one which must be pleaded with particularity as to the local limits of the area of which it is alleged to be the custom, and the evidence must be evidence as to the prevalence of the custom in that area [Marquis of Anglesey v. Lord Hatherton (10) and Hiranath v. Ram Narayan (11)]. Except so far as analogy may serve to explain anything that is in itself obscure, the customs of other localities are not relevant and such rules in cases relating to Birbhum or Pachete are not in point.

It has been long held that certain ghatwali tenures in this district are alienable with the consent of the Zemindar. This was decided after an elaborate examination of the evidence in Kali Pershad v. Anund Roy (12) by their Lordships' Board. This authority has repeatedly been followed and applied in India, and, so far as the reports show, without proof of the custom being required over again. What, however, does this amount to? Their Lordships' Board pointed out that ghatwali tenures are generally inalienable but that evidence may be given to show that in a certain district they are by local custom subject to special incidents in this regard. Such evidence was forthcoming and was to the effect that many transfers had taken place in Kharakpur without being questioned or questionable, provided that the Zemindar of Kharakpur expressly assented to and accepted the transferee as his ghatwal or indicated an implied acceptance by an absence of objection after twelve years' notice of the transfer. This evidence satisfied both the High Court and the Judicial Committee. It is plain that the custom depended on the proof, and as the tenure in question was one in the Zemindari of Kharakpur and under its Zemindar, it could have no reference to ghatwali tenures not under him or forming part of his Zemindari. The personal intervention or omission to intervene on the part of the Zemindar could not be material unless the ghatwali tenure, to which it applies, was one as to which the Zemindar had the right to appoint to the office of ghatwal, and this view is confirmed by the further observations of Lord Fitzgerald, that the conclusion arrived at is encouraged by the fact that the purposes for which the Kharakpur ghatwals were originally appointed no longer existed. In sundry cases, both previously and subsequently decided in India in conformity with this decision, the ghatwali lands appear always to have been held under the Zemindar of Kharakpur [Lelanund v. Doorgabutty (13)]. The explanation of the customary rule, that the Zemindar's consent is necessary, is said in Sartuk Chunder v. Bhugut Bharut Chunder (14), which was followed in Lelanund v. Doorgabutty (13) to be that the Zemindar is responsible to Government if the ghatwal's services, which are public services, are not performed, and so ought in self-defence to have a veto on any transfer. If this is so, it is an additional reason for saying that, until the Government releases or abolishes the services in some effective and lawful manner, the tenure-holder remains bound and holds the lands without power of alienation [see too Nilmoni's case (7)].

With regard to Hundwa this is not so. All that can be said of Ram Chandra Marwari v. Keshobati Kumari (15) is that, if the Udit Narain Singh then concerned was the Appellant's father, as may be the case, no one seems to have thought it advisable on that occasion to rely on the inalienability of his tenure. Nothing, therefore, comes of it. Their Lordships see no ground for thinking that the custom of Kharakpur, relied on by the Respondents' counsel, has any application to ghatwali tenures, which, like Hundwa, are independent of the Kharakpur zemindari, even though they may be not far off Kharakpur.

The ultimate conclusion of the High Court was that "the property mortgaged by the late Udit Narain Singh was a ghatwali tenure not held by him as a ghatwal," and it was on this ground that they decided the suit in favour of the mortgagee. The proposition requires somewhat close examination.

It is true that Udit Singh neither himself rendered the services prescribed in Captain Brown's potta, nor appeared to be conscious of any legal restrictions upon his power of alienating the lands of Hundwa. In the first respect he differs little, if at all, from the position of his predecessors after the time of Purandar Singh; in the latter he certainly stands alone, for he was the spendthrift of the family and purported to dissipate the estate of Hundwa by all forms of alienation, nor in his life-time did anyone venture to say him nay. As, however, there is no question here of any actual assent being given either by his family or by the Government, and as the whole matter in dispute is whether his alienations were valid, the fact, that in other transactions besides the present, he purported to alienate and appeared to believe in his own power to do so, proves nothing. What is singular is that from the time of Purandar Singh the officials of the ruling power never required that the services in question should be rendered, and for long periods and in important connections even seem to have been unaware that any obligation of the kind existed.

The first matter to be cleared up is the relation of Hundwa to Kharakpur. As early as 1781 a Parwana, signed by Mr. Hastings as Governor-General in Council, records that the duties of Zemindar of the Pargana Kharakpur have been conferred on Raja Kadir Ali, and includes, at a revenue payment of Rs. 2,800, Hundwa among the estates, to which the Parwana applies. A Potta and Kabuliyat of 1796 are next forthcoming, which purport to include in Raja Kadir Ali's Zemindari of Kharakpur the Pargana Hundwa. To these documents, however, and to the transactions, whatever they were, out of which they arose, no ancestor of the present Appellant was a party, and although the East India Company itself is a party, still, as they relate only to the jumma payable and to other ordinary obligations of Zemindars, and as the jumma for Hundwa was in fact paid through the Raja of Kharakpur, these documents do not greatly advance matters. What is of more significance is that in 1802 the result of the Permanent Settlement for Hundwa was registered as involving the annual payment of a jumma of Rs. 2,701 under Captain Brown's potta; that Purandar Singh is then recorded as the present possessor, personal and not hereditary; and that in the "Remarks" column it is stated that the potta was "subject to ghatwali," while the Parwana of 1794 is recorded as a sanad, under which the persons named, other than Purandar Singh, were in possession as heirs of their father.

Between 1809 and 1819 protracted litigation was carried on between Kadir Ali, then Zemindar of the Kharakpur Mahals, and the family of Purandar Singh, recently deceased, with reference to the estate of Hundwa. Kadir Ali asserted a right to nominate the ghatwal, who was to succeed to Purandar Singh, a claim which eventually Jhabban Singh disputed, asserting that he was mokuraridar of Pargana Hundwa with heritable rights. Though he was also described as malik Zemindar, this is not enough in such a context to show that he alleged that his estate was not a ghatwali tenure. In order to inform itself as to the ownership of the disputed Taluqas, the Court referred it to the Collector of the District to report, who the Zemindar of the lands in litigation really was, although this would appear to have been one of the very questions which arose for the determination of the Court itself. This report, which is now not forthcoming, was in favour of the Raja of Kharakpur. Nevertheless, when the case was heard in the Civil Court of Bhagulpore in 1812 and on appeal in the Court at Murshidabad in 1819, both judgments were in favour of Jhabban Singh, the ancestor of the present Appellant. Accordingly, no further appeal being taken, the claim of the Raja of Kharakpur to be entitled to appoint the ghatwali of Hundwa, whenever a vacancy occurred, was finally dismissed. It is not necessary to consider how far, if at all, these judgments, which as between the holders of the two estates are res judicata, would technically preclude the present Respondents, as mortgagees from one of the holders of Hundwa, from re-opening this question as against their mortgagor's heir, for in fact no attempt has been made to do so, and in no event after the lapse of a century would their Lordships have been disposed to entertain or to make criticisms upon judgments, arrived at upon ampler documentary materials than those now available, which have, for long, laid at rest a claim once so keenly advocated.

These decisions, which separate Kharakpur from Hundwa so far as this appeal is concerned, have a profound effect on the position of Hundwa. Whatever else Hundwa may be now, it is not nor ever was for present purposes a ghatwali estate under Kharakpur and its rajas. Comment is, however, justly made that, with the documents of 1776 and 1794 before them, neither Court pointed out nor apparently was invited to hold that, as they granted Hundwa to Subhao Singh and to Purandar Singh on the terms of services to be rendered to the Government, the holders of Hundwa were therefore Government ghatwals and could not be the ghatwals of the Raja of Kharakpur. Furthermore, as has been already stated, the reports relating to the Santal Parganas generally and to Kharakpur and Hundwa in particular, nowhere mention Hundwa as an original and direct Government ghatwali. Thus Mr. Sutherland in 1819 records the history of the estate of Hundwa, but nowhere suggests that the holders owed military service to the ruling power. In 1833 a Special Commissioner, Mr. Ward, deals with the relations of the Rajas of Kharakpur and Hundwa from Mogul times downwards and refers in some detail to the potta of 1776, to the Parwana of 1794 and to the litigation above discussed, and records his conclusion thus :—

"24. Under the foregoing history of Hundwa the tenure under which the jagir is held can only be considered ghatwali subject to the payment of a certain fixed rent and other conditions of service, but claimed by Jhuban Singh as a Zemindari for which no revenue has been paid since 1828."

All that can be said of these and similar passages from other and later reports is this. The writers were dealing with large tracts of country and were chiefly concerned with questions strictly affecting the Government revenue. Ghatwali services, as services to be actually called for and performed, were not in question. Their sources of information were largely hearsay. Dr. Buchanan, for example, records that he was only told the family account of Hundwa matters and did not hear the other side. It is doubtful if they had the opportunity of seeing the actual documents of 1776 and 1794, but if they had, the interest of the Government in the service of the Barkandases of Hundwa was so inconsiderable that it is small wonder if the somewhat complex language of those instruments did not deeply engage their attention. High as the reputation of these reports for care and research deservedly stands, there can be nothing surprising if an error is made in the account given of particular rights connected with a single estate, where the value of those rights to the Government must be trivial and on the whole problematical, and where their relevancy, as this case shows, chiefly regards the private rights of heirs as against the incumbent for the time being. If, in the result, their conclusions were erroneous, they can, fortunately, be corrected by attaching the real weight to the potta and the sanad and upholding the rights as disclosed therein, without further considering the mistaken accounts of them given by some officials and the pardonable ignorance of them displayed by others. Nor must it be forgotten that the entry in the register of permanent mokurrari right in 1802 is a precise statement to the contrary and rests on a precise reference to the material documents of title, and that the entries in the record-of-rights of 1874-79 and 1898-1907 are not inconsistent, to say the least of it, with the same state of things; [see observations in Lelanund Singh v. Munrunjun Singh (3)].

The High Court appears to have attached little or no importance to the express direction in the sanad of 1794 that "production of fresh sanads every year is not to be demanded," and dwells on the fact that since the death of Purandar Singh no proprietor of Hundwa had applied for a renewal of the Istamrari Mokurrari ghatwali grant or had been required to do so. For a hundred years no muchlika or kabuliyat, undertaking military service, had been given. No ghatwal of Hundwa had been appointed by Government. Udit Narain Singh "was merely de facto holder, without licence from the ruling power, of the lands attached to the post of ghatwal," and it was as such that he mortgaged these lands to the Plaintiffs. His son, who succeeds by inheritance, cannot, it is concluded, impugn his title or ask that it should be investigated, for, the ruling power not being represented, its permanent title cannot be gone into.

It appears to their Lordships that, as this decision does not purport to rest on prescription or adverse possession of the lands by Udit Narain or his predecessors against the Government, it must be rested on legal assumption that, if during a sufficiently long period the incumbent of the office of ghatwal does not happen to be called on to render the services which he is bound to render when required, the quality and incidents of his tenure of ghatwali lands change, at any rate so long as this abeyance of the services lasts, and that he becomes, to the prejudice of his heirs—who are, be it said, heirs of ghatwali lands with the advantages as well as the disadvantages attaching thereto—a full mokurrari istamrari proprietor for the time being. This seems to be involved in the argument, on which Roe, J., bases his conclusion, for he propounds this dilemma. If the Defendant's right to succeed was a right to succeed to Udit Singh's interest as ghatwal, there was nothing to succeed to, for Udit Singh, if ghatwal at all, held nothing heritable in virtue of that office. If, on the other hand, the right to succeed was a right to succeed to the right and interest, which Udit Singh then had even pro tempore, that right was one which Udit Singh could and did encumber in favour of the Plaintiffs, and since the Defendant is not in a position to discharge the encumbrance, he must suffer the legal consequences and submit to have these lands alienated from him. In truth the Defendant is not asking, as the learned Judge seems to have thought, to have the Government's title investigated. He is relying on his own interest in the tenure of the Hundwa estate, which on the true construction of the original grants bears the character of a ghatwali tenure with its legal incidents. He does not set up a jus tertii; his case is not that there is an interest outstanding in a stranger to the suit—the Government, to wit—in which he seeks some defence against a decree for sale against himself, but he alleges a title in himself to succeed his father in the enjoyment of lands which, as against himself, his father had held without any right to encumber them in favour of strangers. This, and this alone, is the relevancy in the present suit of the circumstance that the lands are held on ghatwali tenure, for the ghatwali services themselves have long been so insignificant that little remains in the tenure, except potentially, beyond the quality of being heritable, impartible and inalienable.

To terminate the ghatwali character of the lands, it seems to their Lordships that it is necessary to find something done or omitted to be done on the part of the Government, as the grantors, which would have the legal effect of a surrender and re-grant of the lands on new terms, or, at any rate, of a release of the right to appoint the ghatwal and call for the performance of the services. Nothing of this sort, at any rate, is shown. The burden of proof is on the mortgagees, and the Government not having been made a party, such proof may even have been for the time being inadmissible. Even the corps of Barkandases was still in existence within living memory, whether in embryo or in dissolution does not matter. Not to mention the dubious exploits of this force in the Santal rebellion of 1855, when with their bows and arrows they were said to have slain 300 rebels at the cost of three casualties, there was called as a witness a veteran member of the force, who still held a jagir as such, and down to twenty years before had continued to receive from the Raja presents of money on the occasion of weddings in his family. The trial Judge does not deal with this evidence at all, though he comments naturally and adversely on the supposed battle, by which the force of Barkandases quelled the revolt of the Santals.

As is well known, the estate of Kharakpur was the subject of long and complicated litigation arising out of claims to re-assess or to resume ghatwali lands where, as was no doubt generally the case, ghatwali services had ceased to be of practical importance. Long before 1765 ghatwali tenures under the Zemindar of Kharakpur had been created by the various holders of those lands for their own purposes, and as late as 1770-1785 Mr. Cleveland, who managed the estate during the minority of Kadir Ali, followed the same policy. The lands thus made the subject of ghatwali tenure were included in the Permanent Settlement of the whole Kharakpur estate in 1796, and the Government of Bengal sought long afterwards to re-assess these lands to a further jumma beyond that fixed in 1796, on the ground that local Zemindars had ceased to be called on to render police services, since the Government had itself undertaken the necessary Thanadari organisation (Regulations 49 and 50 of 1792). The claim was finally dismissed by their Lordships' Board in 1855 [Raja Lelanund v. The Government of Bengal (6)]. Now there is a clear distinction between the case where the Government thinks fit itself to perform duties theretofore performed by ghatwals and the case where the ghatwali service is formally abolished or discharged [per Sir Barnes Peacock, Lelanund v. Munrunjun (3) and see the analogous case as to a palayam in Madras—Malayandi Appasami Naicker v. Midnapur Zemindary Co. (16)]. In the Kharakpur district it does not appear that there has been any formal termination by law of ghatwali public services apart from the above-mentioned composition inter partes with the Zemindar of Kharakpur.

It is true that in Appendix XVII to Mr. Macpherson's Report on the Santal Perganas, which contains extracts from Dr. Buchanan's MSS., there occurs this passage: "By far the greater part of Hundwa is still in the possession of a Ksl etauri family, although it pays to the Raja of Kharakpur Rs. 2,372 a year; but it has been entirely exempted from military service." What foundation there may have been for this statement remains unknown. It may be a lax allusion to the Regulations of 1792. At any rate, Roe, J., records: "To this day no outpost has been set up in Pargana Hundwa, which is still a non-police tract." After 1855 there followed numerous suits, in which Raja Lelanund endeavoured to resume his shikmi ghatwali lands, alleging that he was entitled to disclaim the services and thereupon to oust the ghatwal, and also that by his agreement of compromise with the Government for an annual money payment in lieu of further services, the ground for the appointment of ghatwals and for the tenure of ghatwali lands had disappeared. These attempts failed, and it was held that he could not renounce the services without the consent of Government or some legislative or administrative extinction of them [Kooldeep Narain v. The Government of India (17) and Lelanund v. Munrunjun (3)]. As long as they were ready and willing to render services, if required, the Zemindar could not put an end to the ghatwals' services, whether required or not, even by compromising with the Government and substituting a rent for the former services, for, as against the tenure-holders, this was res inter alios acta [see Lelanund v. Munrunjun (3)].

Although none of these decisions governs the present case, they involve the principle that where a tenure is created, as distinct from a mere personal employment, the tenure-holder has such an interest in the rendering of the services as entitles him to such benefit of the tenure as accrues from his readiness and willingness to perform his obligation. The service is not a mere burden on the land; it constitutes a personal right in so far as the land held on that condition is concerned, and a personal obligation in so far as concerns the grantor, which, being in the nature of a public obligation, cannot be waived by the grantor for his own advantage, nor, being in the nature of a title to the lands, can be relegated to desuetude for the mere disadvantage of the ghatwal. The truth is that, where rights can once be shown to have been established and continue to be vested in living persons, obsolescence and desuetude are popular expressions rather than solid legal grounds for refusing a continuing recognition to the right as originally established.'

One circumstance remains to be mentioned, if only for the purpose of pointing out that no definite conclusion can be drawn from it one way or the other. For a time the revenue assessment on the Hundwa lands was paid to the Government direct, but now and for a century or so past—in fact ever since the time of the Permanent Settlement—it has been paid to the Zemindar of Kharakpur by the Hundwa proprietors, he being assessed to the revenue on the lands both of his own Zemindari and on those of Hundwa too, and paying the revenue contribution direct in respect of both. As it is now settled that Hundwa is not an under-tenure to Kharakpur, one obvious inference from these facts is finally negatived. The other, that there is a direct liability of Hundwa for revenue payments, which are for convenience collected indirectly, is, after all, immaterial when once it has been decided that the ghatwali tenure of Hundwa, as it now exists, rests on grants made directly by the East India Company. The explanation suggested for the bare fact is that in disturbed times the transport of treasure through the jungles from Lagwa in Hundwa to Bhagulpore was precarious, but as it is not shown to have been any safer from Kharakpur to Bhagulpore, and as in any case Hundwa's money must have run the risks of transport to Kharakpur, the explanation is unconvincing. Fortunately, it is also academic.

In the result the appeal succeeds. The judgments of the High Court and of the Subordinate Judge in favour of the Plaintiffs-mortgagees ought to be set aside and their action should be dismissed with costs both here and in both Courts below. There is a cross-appeal by them consolidated with the Defendant's main appeal, which refers to the interest to be allowed to them upon a decree, if any, in their favour, and this cross-appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

[Appeal from Bombay.]

Lord Dunedin.

1923,
Heard, 19, October.
Judgment,
19, October.

Khanderao Vithoba Kore, since deceased (now represented by Bhimabai), Appellant,
v.
The Municipal Corporation of Bombay and anr., Respondents.

City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888, Bom), secs. 91, 296—Street improvement scheme—Power of municipality to acquire additional land for recoupment.

The language of sec. 296 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act clearly authorises the Commissioners to acquire land outside the regular line of the street proposed to be improved but contiguous to it for the purpose of leasing, selling or otherwise disposing of the same with a view to recoupment. The discretionary power given to the Commissioners is not untrammelled, being subject under sec. 91 of the Act to the discretionary power of the Government.

Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1) and Galloway v. London Corporation (2) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Bombay dated the 21st October 1920.

The suit in which that decree was passed was brought by the Appellant on behalf of himself and other land-owners of the Mahim Land-owner's Association for a declaration that the Respondents were not entitled to take from the Plaintiff and other land-owners more land than was actually required for the extension and widening of 2 roads in the Mahim District. The Respondents claimed the right to acquire such land under sec. 296 of the Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888) as it had seemed and did seem expedient for them to do so.

The suit was heard by a Division Bench composed of Macleod, C. J. and Fawcett. J., who decided that the proposed acquisition was within the powers of the Corporation.

The Appellant appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant contended that sec. 296 of the Bombay Municipal Act, III of 1888, did not give the Corporation power to acquire land for the purposes of recoupment.

The municipality might possibly purchase surplus property for ornamental or any other purpose which would come within the term "Improvement" but their powers are limited to the requirements of the street.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents were not called upon.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Lord Dunedin.—In this case the question arises upon what is proposed to be done by the Municipality of Bombay in connection with a projected improvement of a public street. The municipality propose in improving a certain street, not only to widen it, but to take a certain amount of extra ground contiguous to, but beyond, the actual limits of the widened street, with the avowed intention of erecting new buildings thereon and afterwards reselling the land with the buildings upon it. The powers of the municipality with regard to this matter are dealt with in sec. 296 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, which is as follows :—

"(1) The Commissioner may, subject to the provisions of secs. 90, 91 and 92—(a) acquire any land required for the purpose of opening, widening, extending or otherwise improving any public street or of making any new public street, and the buildings, if any, standing upon such land; (b) acquire, in addition to the said land and the buildings, if any, standing thereupon, all such land, with the buildings, if any, standing thereupon, as it shall seem expedient for the corporation to acquire outside of the regular line, or of the intended regular line, of such street; (c) lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of any land or building purchased under cl. (b)."

Reference has been made to certain cases, but it is perfectly clear that in cases of this sort each must be determined upon its own circumstances, and its circumstances consist first and foremost of the precise terms of the Act in question and secondly of the thing which is proposed to be done. In one sense no other case is an authority; but at the same time certain principles have been very clearly laid down by this Board in the case of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1). In that case what was proposed to be done was similar to what is proposed to be done in the present case, that is to say, the land was going to be acquired for the purposes of future sale and, if prices realised their expectancy, part of the expense to which the municipality had been put would be recouped. Sec. 42 of the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911, provided :—

"Any improvement scheme may provide for—(a) the acquisition by the Board of any land, in the area comprised in the scheme, which will, in their opinion, be affected by the execution of the scheme."

"It is not immaterial to observe that there was at the date of the passing of the Calcutta Improvement Act no novelty in the recoupment principle."

Then he cites Galloway v. London Corporation (2) and continues :—

"But whether this principle has been sanctioned in the Calcutta Improvement Act must be determined on the language used, and the case of Donaldson v. South Shields Corporation (3) shows, if authority is necessary, that where an Act authorises land to be taken for the actual works only, a local authority, or other public body, will be restrained from taking more than is actually necessary for such works."

Their Lordships have no doubt that that is the correct principle. One, therefore, has to find in the Act something more than the mere possibility of acquiring land for the purposes of the improvement where it is proposed to do what is proposed to be done in this case. When their Lordships come to this Act they find that the case is a fortiori of the Calcutta Case. It appears to their Lordships that it is clear beyond all doubt, not only that the municipality may acquire land for the purpose of making a street, but that they may acquire, if it seems expedient, land outside the regular line of such street. If the matter had ended there it might have been said that the land outside the street was only meant to form an appendage to such street; but then comes cl. (c) which says : that they may "lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of any land or building purchased under cl. (b)." This seems to their Lordships to point to recoupment with almost the greatest certainty that could be expressed in words. The powers no doubt are drastic, but they are not altogether untrammelled, because when sec. 91, which is one of the sections to which sec. 296 is subject, is looked at, it is found that if the Commissioner is unable to acquire any property by agreement Government may, in their discretion upon the application of the Commissioner made with the approval of the Standing Committee, order proceedings to be taken for compulsory acquirement; so that in the discretionary power of the Government would always be found a certain limitation over and above the limitation which their Lordships think necessarily follows from the fact that what is done must be done in the course of making or widening the street, for it appears to their Lordships that the municipality certainly could not take land which was not in contiguity. Their Lordships think that this result would follow notwithstanding any of the somewhat more vague words which are used in the earlier sections of the Act.

In these circumstances their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

PRIVY COUNCIL APPLICATION.

MOOKERJEE, J. CHATTERJEA, J. 1923, Heard, 5, October. Judgment, 8, October.	BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE, Petitioner, v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Calcutta High Court Letters Patent, cl. 41—Leave to appeal, on behalf of a convicted prisoner, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, when may be granted—Principles regulating the Judicial Committee's practice in granting or refusing leave to appeal in criminal cases

The prisoner was tried at the High Court Criminal Sessions, Calcutta, by a Judge and a special jury on a charge of offences punishable under secs. 302 and 394 of the Indian Penal Code. He pleaded "guilty" to the charge under sec. 394, and "not guilty" to the charge under sec. 302. The jury brought a verdict of "guilty" of murder with the result that he was convicted and sentenced under sec. 302. The Advocate-General granted a certificate under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. It was contended inter alia at the hearing of the reference under cl 26 that the trial Judge had misdirected the jury on a point of law relating to the interpretation of sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. The Full Bench who heard the reference dismissed it. Thereupon the prisoner applied for a certificate under cl. 41 of the Letters Patent that his case was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council:

Held, granting the certificate—That the case was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council inasmuch as the judgments by the Full Bench at the reference established that there has been a deep-seated divergence of judicial opinion in every superior Court in India as to the true interpretation of sec. 34 and inasmuch as the interpretation of the section not only goes to the root of the matter, but is of great and general importance and of frequent occurrence in the administration of criminal law wherever the Indian Penal Code is in operation.

Principles regulating the practice of the Judicial Committee in disposing of applications for leave to appeal in criminal cases adverted to.

Held, also, following the usual practice—That the prisoner should not be re- quired to furnish security for the costs of the Crown.

DAL SINGH v. KING-EMPEROR (40) referred to.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Messrs. H. D. Bose, Arabinda Ray and S. C. Chaudhuri for the Petitioner.

Messrs. B. L. Mitter and S. Ray for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under cl. 41 of the Letters Patent, which is in the following terms :—

"41. And we do further ordain, that from any judgment, order or sentence of the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, made in the exercise of Original Criminal Jurisdiction, or in any criminal case, where any point or points of law have been reserved for the opinion of the said High Court in manner hereinbefore provided, by any Court which has exercised Original Jurisdiction, it shall be lawful for the person aggrieved by such judgment, order, or sentence to appeal to us, our heirs, or successors in Council: Provided the said High Court shall declare that the case is a fit one for such appeal, and under such conditions as the said High Court may establish or require, subject always to such rules and orders as we may, with the advice of our Privy Council, hereafter make in that behalf."

The Petitioner Barendra Kumar Ghose was placed on his trial at the last Sessions, before Mr. Justice Page and a special jury, on charges under secs. 302 and 394, I. P. C. The jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty on the charge of murder and Mr. Justice Page thereupon sentenced the prisoner to death. A certificate was then obtained on his behalf from the Advocate-General, under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, that in his judgment, whether an alleged direction and an alleged omission to direct the jury did not in law amount to a misdirection should be further considered by the High Court. The question was accordingly argued before a Full Bench. On the 26th September 1923, the Full Bench delivered judgment and ordered that the application made by the prisoner under cl. 26 do stand dismissed. The present application was made on the 3rd October 1923 for a certificate under cl. 41 that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The matter has been exhaustively argued before us on behalf as well of the prisoner as of the Crown and our attention has been invited to the relevant authorities on the subject.

It is indisputable that as His Majesty the King is supreme over all persons and Courts within his dominions, a right of appeal in all cases, civil and criminal, to the King in Council, exists, from the highest Court of each separate colony, province, state or possession, whether it be a Court of error or not, except so far as the prerogative in this behalf has been expressly surrendered; Cushing v. Dupuy (1) and Re: Wi Matua's Will (2). Criminal proceedings, however, are, in practice, reviewed, only if it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Judicial Committee do not, as a rule, advise His Majesty to grant appeals in criminal cases, except where questions of great and general importance, likely to occur often, are raised, and where the due and orderly administration of the law is shown to be interrupted, or diverted into a new course, which might create a precedent for the future, and where there are no other means of preventing these consequences. Such appeals lie either by the right of grant, in pursuance of leave obtained by the Appellant from the Court appealed from, or by reason of special leave granted by the Judicial Committee. The latter appeals arise, either where the Court below does not possess power to grant leave to appeal, or where leave to appeal has been refused by the Court below, or where the leave to appeal was granted on some special point and the Appellant wishes to raise points not included in the leave to appeal; R. v. Louw (3), Daily Telegraph Co. v. McLaughlin (4), Victorian Railway Commissioners v. Brown (5) and Albright v. Hydro-Electric Power Commission (6). But whether leave is granted by the Court appealed from or by the Judicial Committee, it is plain that the answer to the question, whether the case is a fit one for appeal, must depend on the same considerations; the grant of the leave to appeal is a step ancilliary to the determination of the appeal, and the principles which regulate the ultimate decision of the appeal cannot obviously be ignored when an application for leave is examined: Ibrahim v. R. (7).

The judicial pronouncements on the subject fall broadly into two divisions, according as they were made in Indian cases or in Colonial cases. The decisions in Indian cases, again, may be conveniently considered in two groups, namely, first, those that had reference to sentences in original criminal trials governed by cl. 41 of the Letters Patent or a provision of like import, and secondly, those that arose out of Appellate decisions not subject to the operation of cl. 41 or a similar rule.

In the first group of Indian cases, the earliest decision which has been brought to our notice is that of Poonea Khoty Moodlier v. R. (8). The Appellant had been convicted at a Sessions held on the Crown side of the Court of the Recorder of Bombay on a charge of uttering a forged receipt for money, with intent to defraud the East India Company. The prisoner obtained leave to appeal from the Court of the Recorder. The Judicial Committee considered the appeal on the merits, affirmed the conviction in respect of one offence, but reversed the judgment as erroneous in respect of another offence. Important questions of law including a question of jurisdiction were involved in the appeal. The next case in point of time is that of Aga Kurboolie Mahomed v. Queen (9). The Appellants were tried on charges of assault and battery in the Supreme Court at Calcutta before Sir John Peter Grant and a jury and were convicted. A rule was granted to set aside the verdict but was discharged, Sir Edward Ryan, C. J., dissenting. The Supreme Court at the same time gave leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council. The Judicial Committee heard the appeal on the merits and directed that the rule for new trial be made absolute; and they also intimated their hope that the indictment would not be further prosecuted. It may be noted that when the Judicial Committee (Lord Brougham, Lord Campbell, Knight Bruce, V. C. and Dr. Lushington) heard the appeal, Sir Edward Ryan sat as assessor. These two cases, as we shall presently see, stand in a class by themselves, and were not followed in the case of R. v. Eduljee Byramjee (10). There the Petitioners applied for leave to appeal from a conviction for felony at a trial held in the Supreme Court of Bombay before Sir Henry Roper, C. J. and Sir Erskine Perry, J. and a jury who returned a verdict of guilty. Dr. Lushington who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee ruled that there was no power reserved to the Crown by the charter of the Supreme Court, 1823, which conferred on that Court and that Court alone full and absolute power and authority to allow or deny appeals in criminal causes. With this may be compared the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ames v. R. (11), where leave granted on an ex parte application to appeal from a criminal proceeding in Jersey, was recalled. The same view was reiterated in Queen v. Alloo Paroo (12), We next come to the case of Nga Hoong v. Queen (13), where an appeal was allowed from a judgment on a conviction by the Supreme Court at Calcutta in a case of murder. The prisoner was tried before Sir James Colvile, C. J. and a jury, who returned a verdict of guilty. A question of jurisdiction, which had been reserved, was argued before the full Court. The Chief Justice and Buller, J. held that the Court had jurisdiction, while Jackson, J., held that the Court had no jurisdiction. The question turned upon the construction of sec. 56 of Stat. 9, Geo. IV, c. 74. The Judicial Committee held that the Court had no jurisdiction and annulled the conviction. In Macrea v. R. (14), which was approved in Re: Rajendra Nath Mookerjee (15), the prisoner was convicted of offences under secs. 420 and 511, I. P. C. and was sentenced to imprisonment. The High Court of Allahabad refused to certify under sec. 32 of the Letters Patent of 1866 that the case was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The Judicial Committee declined to grant special leave. Lord Halsbury observed that there were no doubt very special and exceptional circumstances in which leave to appeal was granted in criminal cases, but it would be contrary to the practice of the Board and very mischievous, if any countenance were given to the view that an appeal would be allowed in every case in which it could be established that there had been a misdirection by the Judge who tried the case. In Gangadhar Tilak v. Queen-Empress (16), the Judicial Committee refused to grant leave to appeal. The question raised related to the true construction of sec. 124A, I. P. C., which, it was urged, had been erroneously interpreted by Strachey, J., in his charge to the jury. Lord Halsbury observed that taking a view of the whole of the summing up, there was nothing in that summing up which called upon their Lordships to indicate any dissent from it nor any necessity to correct what was therein contained, looking at the summing up as a whole and looking at each part of what was said by the light of what else was said. In Subramaniya v. King-Emperor (17), the Appellant was tried in contravention of sec. 234, Cr. P. Code, on an indictment in which he was charged with no less than 41 acts extending over a period of two years. The Judicial Committee annulled the conviction and sentence on the ground that the trial was prohibited in the mode in which it was conducted. In Re: Bal Gangadhar Tilak (18), the accused was tried before Davar, J. and a jury on charges under sec. 124A, I. P. C. and was convicted. Sir Basil Scott, C. J. and Batchelor, J. declined to grant leave and ruled that before a certificate could be granted the Court must be satisfied that there was reasonable ground for thinking that grave and substantial injustice might have been done by reason of some departure from the principles of natural justice. Reference was made to the decisions of Dinizulu v. A.-G., Zululand (19), Ex parte Carew (20) and In re Dillet (21). To the same effect are the decisions in Clifford v. King-Emperor (22) and Arnold v. King-Emperor (23), where leave to appeal was refused. It is worthy of note that in the second case, there was a clear indication that even if the Judicial Committee could sit as a Court of Criminal Appeal, it was hardly doubtful that the appeal would fail. In the first case, Viscount Haldane pointed out that it would be contrary to their constitutional duty, if the Board were to assume the position and functions of a Court of Criminal Appeal, a Court which could go into questions of evidence and procedure and could deal with the case on the same footing as an ordinary Court of Appeal. In the same way, in Besant v. A.-G., Madras (24), where important questions arose as to the scope and effect of the provisions of the Indian Press Act, 1910, the High Court of Madras refused to give a certificate. The Judicial Committee granted special leave to appeal; the decision of the High Court was, however, ultimately affirmed on the merits and the appeal was dismissed.

In the second group of Indian cases, we have instances where, in the absence of a provision like that of cl. 41 of the Letters Patent, application for special leave was made to the Judicial Committee. It will be re-called in this connection that, as pointed out in R. v. Reay (25), Chintamon Singh v. King-Emperor (26), Ataur Singh v. King-Emperor (27) and Billinghurst v. King-Emperor (28), where there is no provision like cl. 41 applicable, no Indian Court can grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, and this was apparently overlooked by Wilson, J., in Queen-Empress v. Nilmadhab Mitter (29). In such cases, the remedy is by an application for special leave to His Majesty in Council. The earliest instance is afforded by the case of Joykissen Mookerjee v. Queen (30). The Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that justice had not been very well administered in the case and yet refused the application. Dr. Lushington observed that the consequences of granting an appeal in cases of this description were so exceedingly strong, they were so entirely destructive of the administration of all criminal jurisprudence, that the Board could not for a single moment doubt that they were of the greatest importance in guiding their Lordships to form a judgment. The application was thus refused, because, if it were granted, "not only would the course of justice be maimed, but in very many instances it would be entirely frustrated." This standpoint was emphasised by Sir Michael Westropp, C. J., when he was invited to grant a certificate in the case of R. v. Pestonji (31). The decision in Maharaja Madhab Singh v. Secretary of State (32) does not directly touch the question, because there the decision impeached was that of the Governor-General in Council which might be treated as a political act—an act of State—not a decision of a Court from which an appeal lay to His Majesty in Council. Similar observations apply to Exp. Mgomini (33), where the Judicial Committee declined to interfere with an act of the executive Government of Natal, as later on in Tilonko v. Attorney-General of Natal (34). The decisions of what were undoubtedly criminal Courts were sought to be challenged before the Judicial Committee, by special leave, in Painda Khan v. King-Emperor (35), Muhammad Yusufuddin v. Queen-Empress (36), Birch v. King-Emperor (37), Vaithinatha Pillai v. King-Emperor (38), Balmukund v. King-Emperor (39), Dal Singh v. King-Emperor (40), Bugga v. King-Emperor (41), Kalinath Roy v. King-Emperor (42), Sayyapureddi v. King-Emperor (43) and Muruga v. King-Emperor (44). In Muhammad Yusufuddin v. Queen-Empress (36), the appeal was allowed on the ground that the Magistrate who had taken cognizance of the alleged offence and had issued a warrant against a subject of the Nizam, had "acted without jurisdiction. In Vaithinatha Pillai v. King-Emperor (38), which was an appeal by special leave in a murder case, the appeal was allowed and the conviction was set aside. The Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that there was no evidence which could support a conviction for murder or abetment of murder. In Sayyapureddi v. King-Emperor (43), the sentence of transportation for fourteen years was held to be illegal, and the case was remitted to the High Court with instructions to pass a sentence according to law. In Dal Singh v. King-Emperor (40), Bugga v. King-Emperor (41), Kalinath Roy v. King-Emperor (42) and Muruga Goundan v. King-Emperor (44), special leave was granted, but the appeal in each instance ultimately failed on the merits. On the other hand, in Painda Khan v. King-Emperor (35), Birch v. King-Emperor (37) and Balmukund v. King-Emperor (39), the application for special leave to appeal was dismissed.

In the series of cases which came before the Judicial Committee from Colonial Courts, the earliest is the decision of Falkland Islands Co. v. Queen (45), where Lord Kingsdown quoted with approval the observations of Dr. Lushington in Joykissen Mookerjee v. Queen (30). This set the tradition, as it were, and it came to be recognised that though it was the settled prerogative of the Crown to receive appeals in all Colonial cases [In re Bishop of Natal (46)], the inconvenience of entertaining such appeals in cases of a strictly criminal character was so great, the obstruction that it would offer to the administration of justice in the Colonies was so obvious, that it was only on rare occasions, in exceptional circumstances, that applications of that description should be encouraged or entertained by the Judicial Committee. This doctrine will be found to permeate the stream of later decisions. Amongst these may be mentioned Levien v. Queen (47), In re McDermott (48), R. v. Bertrand (49), R. v. Murphy (50), R. v. Coote (51), Esnouf v. Attorney-General, Jersey (52), Riel v. R. (53), In re Dillet (21), Dinizulu v. Attorney-General, Zululand (19), Macleod v. *A. It is not necessary to set out here a detailed analysis of all the observations of their Lordships in the cases mentioned; their essence will be found concisely stated by Lord Watson in In re Dillet (21), which has been repeatedly followed :—

"The rule has been repeatedly laid down and has been invariably followed that Her Majesty will not review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings, unless it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done."

This principle was successfully invoked on behalf of the Crown in the cases of R. v. Bertrand (49), R. v. Murphy (50) and R. v. Coote (51); where a Colonial Court had, in each instance, set aside a conviction and granted a new trial in excess of its jurisdiction. There was no occasion to apply the doctrine in Levien v. Queen (47), as the prisoner obtained a free pardon and was discharged from prison before his appeal could be heard; the Judicial Committee held that as the prisoner had obtained the substantial benefit of a free pardon they would not enter upon the merits of the case or pronounce an opinion upon the legal objections to the conviction. But the principle was successfully invoked on behalf of the accused in the cases of Falkland Islands Co. v. Queen (45), In re McDermott (48), In re Dillet (21), Macleod v. A. G. N. S. W. (54) and Nelson v. R. (62). A noteworthy instance of successful appeal will be found in Lanier v. R. (66), where the conviction was for embezzlement, and this may be taken along with Vaithinatha Pillai v. King-Emperor (38) which was, as we have seen, a successful appeal against conviction for murder and sentence of death. In this connection, the following passage from the judgment of Lord Sumner in Ibrahim v. R. (7) may be usefully re-called :—

"Having regard to the particular position in which their Lordships stand to criminal proceedings, they do not propose to intimate what they think the rule of English law ought to be, much as it is to be desired that the point should be settled by authority, so far as a general rule can be laid down where circumstances must so greatly vary. That must be left to a Court which exercises, as their Lordships do not, the revising functions of a general Court of Criminal Appeal: Clifford v. King-Emperor (22). Their Lordships' practice has been repeatedly defined. Leave to appeal is not granted 'except where some clear departure from the requirements of justice' exists, Riel v. Reg. (53) : nor unless 'by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done' : In re Dillet (21). It is true that these are cases of applications for special leave to appeal, but the Board has repeatedly treated applications for leave to appeal and the hearing of criminal appeals as being upon the same footing : Riel v. Reg. (53) and Ex parte Deeming (55). The Board cannot give leave to appeal where the grounds suggested could not sustain the appeal itself; and, conversely, it cannot allow an appeal on grounds that would not have sufficed for the grant of permission to bring it. Misdirection, as such, even irregularity, as such, will not suffice : Exp. Macrea (14). There must be something which, in the particular case, deprives the accused of the substance of fair trial and the protection of the law, or which, in general, tends to divert the due and orderly administration of the law into a new course, which may be drawn into an evil precedent in future : Reg. v. Bertrand (49)."

The same principle was emphasised by Viscount Haldane in Dal Singh v. King-Emperor (40) :—

"It is well-settled that the unwritten principles of the constitution of the Empire restrain the Judicial Committee from being used in general as a Court of review in criminal cases. But while the Sovereign in Council does not interfere merely on the question whether the Court below has come to a proper conclusion as to guilt or innocence, such interference ought to take place where there has been a disregard of the proper forms of legal process, grievous and not merely technical in character, or a violation of principle in such a fashion as amounts to a denial of justice. Their Lordships have now heard full arguments in the case before them, and have examined the procedure and evidence with minuteness. Before considering the result, it is right that they should state what they conceive to be, in a case such as that before them, the character of the limitation of their function. The constitution of the Empire is tending to develop in the direction of regarding as final decisions given in the local administration of criminal justice. The general principle is established that the Sovereign in Council does not act, in the exercise of the prerogative right, to review the course of justice in criminal cases, in the free fashion of a fully constituted Court of Criminal Appeal. The exercise of the prerogative takes place only where it is shown that injustice of a serious and substantial character has occurred. A mere mistake on the part of the Court below, as, for example, in the admission of improper evidence, will not suffice if it has not led to injustice of a grave character. Nor do the Judicial Committee advise interference merely because they themselves would have taken a different view of evidence admitted. Such questions are, as a general rule, treated as being for the final decision of the Courts below."

The principles thus enunciated must be deemed well-settled, though there may be considerable room for refinement of argument and divergence of opinion in their application. This is amply indicated by the fact that cases are by no means rare where leave to appeal has been granted after full examination, and yet the appeal has not ultimately been sustained; two such instances are furnished by Ibrahim v. King-Emperor (7) and Besant v. Attorney-General, Madras (24). Here it may be re-called that as stated by Lord Watson in Robinson v. Canadian Pacific Ry. Co. (67) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, when called upon to grant special leave to appeal in civil cases, do take into consideration the general importance of the question raised and the fact that it has evoked great difference of judicial opinion.

In the case before us, the legality of the conviction rests upon the correct construction of sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. The judgments delivered by the Full Bench establish that there has been a deep-seated divergence of judicial opinion in every superior Court in India as to the true interpretation of that section. The question not only goes to the root of the matter in the present case, but is of great and general importance and of frequent occurrence in the administration of criminal law wherever the Indian Penal Code is in operation. It is not the function of this Bench to pronounce an opinion upon the question of the construction of sec. 34; we cannot arrogate to ourselves the authority which belongs to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee under cl. 41 of the Letters Patent. But this is plain that if sec. 34 has not been correctly interpreted by the Full Bench, substantial and grave injustice has been done to the prisoner. In the view we thus take, we shall not express an opinion, whether there may not be other questions also in the appeal, such as the question of the true construction of cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, which by themselves bring the case within the limited category of criminal proceedings reviewable, according to established practice, by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. On anxious consideration of the character of the questions involved in this case and full recognition of the principles which regulate the functions of the Judicial Committee in respect of criminal proceedings, we have come to the conclusion that we should declare that this case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council under cl. 41 of the Letters Patent. We direct accordingly that a certificate be granted to this effect.

We further direct that as a certificate under cl. 41 has been ordered, the execution of the sentence under appeal be stayed, subject to such orders as may be passed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. We are not unmindful of the observations of their Lordships in Balmukund v. King-Emperor (39) made under different circumstances. In that case, an application for special leave to appeal from conviction and sentences of death, was made to the Judicial Committee. The application was made a few days before the date fixed for the carrying out of the sentences. Counsel for the Petitioners stated that they were not in a position to proceed with the petition for leave to appeal as the transcripts of the judgment of the Chief Court and of the evidence had not reached them, and they asked the Board to make an order or a recommendation to the Government of India for the postponement of the execution of the sentences pending the hearing of the petition. Viscount Haldane intimated that their Lordships were unable to advise His Majesty to make any order on the petition for special leave to appeal at that stage or to interfere to stay execution. The attention of their Lordships was not drawn to the fact that in Re: Ames (11) when special leave to appeal was granted by the Judicial Committee on the 7th July 1838, the sentence against the Petitioners was suspended; this is not affected by the fact that the leave granted ex parte was subsequently revoked. Be that as it may, the Petitioners in Balmukund v. King-Emperor (39) were left to notify the Government of India that an application for special leave was pending before the Judicial Committee; this they did, and they were in fact reprieved, pending the hearing of the petition, which was ultimately dismissed as no ground of appeal was shown to bring the matter within the limited class of cases where the Judicial Committee intervenes in criminal proceedings. In the case before us, a certificate has been directed under cl. 41, and there is consequently an appeal pending from the sentence. Cl. 42 ordains that this Court shall, in all cases of appeal to His Majesty in Council, conform to and execute such judgments and orders as His Majesty in Council might think fit to make in the premises; and this has to be read along with sec. 21 of the Judicial Committee Act, 1833 (Stat. 3 and 4 Will. 4, c. 41) which renders it obligatory on every Court of justice to carry into effect the order or decree of His Majesty in Council on any appeal from its order, sentence or decree. In such circumstances, it is essential in this case that the sentence passed by this Court should be suspended in order that the appeal to His Majesty in Council may not be frustrated. There is more than one instance where the Court which had passed the sentence stayed execution thereof pending decision of the questions in controversy by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee; see Nga Hoong v. Queen (13) decided by the Supreme Court of Calcutta: In re Levien (68) decided by the Supreme Court of Jamaica; and Ibrahim v. Rex (7) decided by the Supreme Court of Hongkong. Reference may in this connection be made to the decision in Nanda Kishore Singh v. Ramgolam Sahu (69), where this Court, in exercise of its inherent power to stay proceedings pursuant to its own order, stayed proceedings in a civil matter in view of an application to the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. We may add that the applicability of the doctrine of inherent power to criminal cases was expressly recognised by a Special Bench of this Court in Pigot v. Ali Mahamed Mandal (70).

The prisoner will not be required to furnish security for the costs of the appeal. As Viscount Haldane observed in Dal Singh v. King-Emperor (40), where the appeal by special leave was ultimately dismissed, "there will, as hitherto has been usual in such cases, be no order as to costs." The order for costs made in the case of Besant v. Attorney-General, Madras (24) must consequently be deemed an exception to the ordinary rule, justifiable only in the special circumstances of that case. We observe that in Vaithinatha Pillai v. King-Emperor (38), Sir Robert Finlay, on behalf of the prisoner whose appeal had succeeded, asked for costs against the Crown. But Lord Atkinson, referring to Johnson v. King (71), stated that their Lordships were of opinion that the application should not be granted. This accords with Poonea Khoty v. R. (8) and Nelson v. R. (62). But in Lanier v. R. (66), which was heard shortly afterwards, before the Board differently constituted, their Lordships, looking to the exceptional nature of the case, held that the Crown should pay to the Appellant the costs of the appeal. A precedent for this course may be found in Macleod v. A. G. N. S. W. (54). We cannot and do not express an opinion as to the costs of the present appeal before the Judicial Committee: we merely hold that in view of the observation of Viscount Haldane in Dal Singh v. King-Emperor (40) as to the usual practice in this class of cases, the prisoner be not required to furnish security for the costs of the Crown.

We finally direct, under cl. 42, that a complete copy of the record (to be printed in the usual manner) be transmitted for the use of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. This will be prepared, as is done in capital cases, at the cost of the Crown and will include

We further direct that the memorandum furnished by Mr. Justice Page to the members of the Full Bench (from which an extract was read out in open Court) be printed in its entirety as a confidential document and be transmitted in a sealed cover, to be placed before their Lordships for such use as their Lordships may determine. We consider it essential that all the materials available to this Court should be placed at the disposal of their Lordships.

Let six copies of the paper-book when printed be furnished free of charge to the prisoner.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 649 OF 1923.

SUHRAWARDY, J.
CUMING, J.
1923,
Heard, 17 and 21, August.
Judgment, 28, August.

BHUPENDRA KUMAR DUTT, Petitioner,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR.

Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), sec. 109, refusal to vacate a compartment reserved by the Railway for Europeans, if an offence under - Sec. (1) (b)—Reserving a compartment for Europeans only in trains carrying passengers, if illegal—Sec. 42 (2), such reservation, if constitutes undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person or class "Passenger," significance of —"Another passenger," if includes a class of possible passengers.

A passenger attired in Indian dress and seated in a third class railway compartment, reserved for Europeans only, was asked to vacate the compartment at Howrah by a ticket examiner, but he refused saying that he had as much right to occupy that compartment as any European. He was thereupon prosecuted and convicted:

Held per SUHRAWARDY, J.—That setting apart of a compartment for Europeans is not apparently intended to accord invidious treatment to a particular class of passengers but the object is to secure the convenience of the travelling public with due regard to the diversity of their habits, customs and prejudices. A European, specially of the class which ordinarily travels in such reserved third class compartments may be more disagreeable to his Indian fellow passengers, particularly of the orthodox type and peaceful disposition.

The word "passenger" which has not been defined in the Railways Act is used in sec. 109 of the Railways Act in the ordinary sense of the word and includes a possible traveller and "another passenger" includes a class of passengers.

EMPEROR v. NARAYAN KRISHNA GOGTE (1) followed.

That the departmental rule under which compartments are reserved for Europeans is not made under sec. 47 of the Act but is framed in exercise of the general power of administration by the Railway which the Company possesses as manager of the concern. If the rule is not inconsistent with any express provision of the law in the general scheme of the Act, it should not be held ultra vires of the powers of the Company in the absence of the Governor-General's sanction. In the Company is vested the management of the Railway and ordinarily they should be deemed to hold the power, unless expressly curtailed by law, to make such arrangements as they consider necessary for the convenience of their customers and in their own interests.

PERTH GENERAL STATION COMMITTEE v. ROSS (2) and IN RE KOMARAN (3) referred to.

It cannot be denied that the action of the Railway Company in reserving compartments exclusively for Europeans does tend to give preference to a particular class of persons to the consequent prejudice or disadvantage to others. And in particular circumstances the reservation of a compartment for a class of passengers or intending passengers without remuneration may amount to undue preference within the meaning of sec. 42 (2) of the Act and a violation of the terms of the section, but the Company has a general power to regulate its traffic and arrange for the accommodation and convenience of its passengers so long as it does not bring itself within that section. If it had been proved that no room was available for the accused in the train except in the reserved compartment, the reservation for a particular class might amount to undue preference, which would be unreasonable and disadvantageous to other passengers. But no such circumstance having been proved the preference cannot be said to be undue.

EMPEROR v. NARAYAN KRISHNA GOGTE (1), EMPEROR v. BRIJBASI LAL (4) and other cases referred to.

Per CUMING, J.—That a Railway Company has an absolute right to regulate its own traffic in its own way so long as it does not contravene any express provision of the law. It is one of the duties of the Company to see to the comfort and convenience of its passengers, and in making a reservation for a class of passengers it must be supposed to have acted as it is entitled to do on one or other of these motives.

PERTH GENERAL STATION COMMITTEE v. ROSS (2) and IN RE KOMARAN (3).

That there is no section in the Act which gives the Company any power to reserve accommodation for any one. But the fact that there are sections in the Act to punish persons who interfere with such reserved accommodation shows that by implication the Act recognises the right of the Railway Company to reserve such accommodation.

That sec. 42 (2) does not provide that the Railway shall not show preference to

BHUPENDRA KUMAR DUTT v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Taluqdar regards as the sheet-anchor of his case, has not been able to accept it. I have not been induced by anything that has been urged by the learned vakil to hold a contrary view. The point seems to me so simple that it does not require serious consideration.

It is next contended that "passenger" means a person who is travelling or is about to travel having purchased a ticket for the purpose, or, in other words, a bonâ fide passenger and not a person who may or is likely to travel by that train. It is admitted that at the time of occurrence there was no European passenger in the compartment travelling or about to travel. I am unable to accept this restricted sense of the term. "Passenger" has not been defined in the Act and it is used in the ordinary sense of the word including a possible traveller. To attach to it the restricted meaning contended for by the Petitioner would render the provisions of sec. 47 (1) (b) of the Railways Act too narrow and unworkable, for if the word "passenger" in that clause were regarded as signifying passengers who are actually travelling by a particular train having purchased tickets therefor, an unreasonable demand would be made on the Railway Company to provide for the "accommodation and convenience of passengers" at the start of each train in view of the particular kind of passengers travelling by it. Besides there may be passengers eligible to travel in that compartment waiting at some intermediate stations.

The next point pressed is that a Railway administration has no power under the law to make a rule setting apart a compartment for a particular passenger or passengers, except in cases provided by the Act, as in the case of female passengers under sec. 64. No doubt every Railway Company is empowered under sec. 47 to make general rules consistent with the Act for, inter alia, providing for the accommodation and convenience of passengers but such rules shall not take effect until they have received the sanction of the Governor-General in Council and been published in the Gazette of India; but the present rule is not so sanctioned and published. It is submitted by the Railway Company that the departmental rule under which compartments are reserved for Europeans is not made under sec. 47 of the Act; it is framed in exercise of the general power of administration of the Railway which the Company possesses as manager of the concern. In my view, if this particular rule which, as has been proved, is based on a recommendation to this effect by the Railway Board, is not inconsistent with any express provision of the law or the general scheme of the Act, it should not be held ultra vires of the powers of the Company in the absence of the Governor-General's sanction. The Petitioner has not succeeded in maintaining that this rule contravenes any specific provision of the law, leaving sec. 42 of the Act out of consideration for the present, which will be discussed later, but has argued on the general frame of the Act that the Company have not been vested with any such power. This argument is mainly founded on sec. 64 which enacts that "every Railway administration shall, in every train carrying passengers, reserve for the exclusive use of females one compartment at least of the lowest class of carriage forming part of the train." It is argued that if the Railway administration were free to arrange for the accommodation of a particular class of passengers, the legislature would not have vested it with special power in favour of this particular section of the travelling public and therefore, according to the accepted canon of construction of statutes, this special authorisation denies the general authority of the Company in the cases of other classes. As I read the section, it helps the assertion of the Railway Company more than that of the Petitioner. It acknowledges the right of the Company to secure reserved accommodation for females which must exist in the Company as an ordinary right as manager of the concern, but it makes obligatory on it to provide at least one compartment for female passengers. In the Company is vested the management of the Railway and ordinarily they should be deemed to have the power unless expressly curtailed by law, to make such arrangements as they consider necessary for the convenience of their customers and in their own interests. See the remarks of Lord Halsbury in Perth General Station Committee v. Ross (2), quoted by Oldfield, J., in the case of In re Komaran (3). In coming to this conclusion I have not lost sight of the fact that the East Indian Railway Company are monopolists and a statutory body which exists for the benefit and convenience of the public and has more limited powers than those of a private concern. The action of the Company challenged in this case is not calculated to further its pecuniary interest—it is rather detrimental to it—but is taken, according to the view of the Company, as conducive most to public convenience and comfort.

The view that I have above expressed in regard to the general power of the Company to make arrangements for the accommodation and convenience of its passengers is strengthened by the wording of sec. 109 of the Act which supposes in the Company the existence of such power though there is no express authorisation in that respect in the Act.

I now turn to the most substantial question in the case, namely, whether the departmental rule entitling the Railway Company to reserve a compartment for Europeans contravenes the provision of sec. 42 (2) of the Railways Act and consequently beyond the rule-making power of the Company as limited by sec. 47. Sec. 42 (2) is thus worded "A Railway administration shall not make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to or in favour of any particular person . . . . in any respect whatsoever, or subject any particular person . . . . to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever." It is argued that the action of the Railway Company under consideration is calculated to give undue preference to a particular class of passengers to the undue prejudice of other passengers. The expression "undue preference" has not been defined in the Railways Act. The definition of the term is to be found in the English Act known as the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, on which the Indian Act is modelled. Sec. 55 of that Act says: "The term 'undue preference' includes an undue preference or an undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage, in any respect, in favour of or against any person or particular class of persons or any particular description of traffic." It is conceded and it cannot be denied, that the action of the Railway Company to which exception is taken does tend to give preference to a "particular class of persons" to the consequent prejudice or disadvantage to others. The controversy therefore turns on the question, whether the preference thus given is undue or unreasonable, which two words stand as synonymous and explanatory of each other.

(2) [1897] A. C. 479.
(3) I. L. R. 45 Mad. 215 (1921).

BHUPENDRA KUMAR DUTT v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Mr. Mukerji, who appears for the Railway Company, in his usual fairness, has conceded that the act of the Company in reserving a Railway compartment for any particular class of passengers may amount to undue preference provided other circumstances exist and are proved to render such act unreasonable and disadvantageous to other passengers, for instance, if it is proved that the train by which the Petitioner wanted to travel was full and no room was available for him except in the reserved compartment, that as the Petitioner, so argues the learned vakil, has not alleged or proved any such circumstance, the question of undue preference or otherwise does not arise in this case. I have given this case my best consideration and I have come to the conclusion that the contention of the learned vakil for the Railway Company must prevail. There is no evidence that the Petitioner looked for and could not secure a seat in any other compartment, nor has he proved any other circumstance showing his inability to travel by that train except in the compartment so reserved. As I have remarked above, he has rested his case solely on the question of law which I have formulated. I agree that in particular circumstances the reservation of a compartment for a class of passengers or intending passengers without remuneration may amount to undue preference within the meaning of sec. 42 (2) of the Railways Act and to this extent I am in full agreement with the view expressed by Shah, A. C. J., in Emperor v. Narayan Krishna Gogte (1). I am unable to accept the view which has found favour with some of the Judges who are parties to the reported cases to which I propose to refer later that it is within the absolute right or power of the Railway Company to reserve a compartment for Europeans only. Now the effect of such reservation is that a European, or one who is included in that term, for whom a compartment is reserved may travel in any compartment he likes but an Indian suffering from the disability of not being classed as a European is debarred from travelling in the European reserved compartment. I am unable to concede that such an apparently invidious distinction is not to be considered preference in favour of one community to the prejudice or disadvantage of another.

This question came up for consideration before the Allahabad High Court in the case of Emperor v. Brijbasi Lal (4). Walsh, J., held that sec. 42 of the Railways Act was no bar to the power of the Railway Company to reserve a compartment as in the present case, chiefly on the ground that that section concerned itself with facilities for traffic by which was understood the carriage of goods only and not of passengers. The attention of the learned Judge does not seem to have been drawn to the definition of the word "traffic" in sec. 3 of the Railways Act. This case was considered in Emperor v. Narayan Krishna Gogte (1) and expressly dissented from on this point. Its authority is accordingly so weakened that it may not be necessary to consider it further. In the case of In re Komaran (3), the point now before us did not actually arise and the judgment of Oldfield, J., not necessary for the purposes of that case, must be regarded as an obiter. The case in which the question directly came for consideration is that of Emperor v. Narayan Krishna Gogte (1). The two learned Judges who originally heard it came to different conclusions and it was referred to a third Judge who upheld the view in favour of the Railway Company. The only other case which has some bearing on the present question is that of Visvanath Ganesh v. G. I. P. Ry. (5). But there also as in the Madras case the expression of opinion was un-called for. On a consideration of all these cases and of the full and elucidating arguments of the learned vakils appearing on both sides, the conclusion I have come to is that the departmental rule enabling the Company to reserve a compartment for a class of ordinary passengers may be a violation of the term of sec. 42 (2) in certain circumstances but the Company has a general power to regulate its traffic and arrange for the accommodation and convenience of its passengers so long as it does not bring itself within that section.

In the above view of the matter, this rule fails and should be discharged.

CUMING, J.—The facts of the case in which this rule has been granted are these :—

The Petitioner one Bhupendra Kumar Dutt was a passenger by the train known as the 3 Up Bombay Mail from Howrah on the 9th March last. He intended to go to Dehri-on-Sone.

He got into a third class compartment which was labelled for Europeans. There were a number of Indian gentlemen already in the same compartment. The ticket examiner asked them to vacate the compartment as it was reserved for Europeans. The Indian gentlemen who were in the compartment did so. The Petitioner apparently with the idea of, as he says, making a test case in order to dispute the right of the Railway Company to reserve a compartment for Europeans refused to do so. He was therefore ejected by the police. He was prosecuted for obstructing a Railway servant in the execution of his duty and was convicted and sentenced under secs. 109/121 to pay a fine of Rs. 5.

Mr. Taluqdar who has appeared in support of the rule argues that sec. 109 of the Railways Act (Act IX of 1890) does not cover the present case. He contends that the expression "passenger" as used in sec. 109 does not include a class of passengers. That it only covers the case of a person who has taken or intends to take a ticket and for whom a compartment has been reserved and does not cover the case of a class of possible passengers who may or may not intend to travel by the train. That the only class of passengers for whom the Railway Company may reserve a compartment are females, which power, he contends, is given by sec. 64 of the Act. That sec. 42 (2) of the same Act prohibits the Company from showing any undue or unreasonable preference to any particular person or any particular class of traffic and to reserve a compartment for Europeans is showing undue preference. Now in the words of Lord Halsbury [Perth General Station Committee v. Ross (2)] "a Railway Company has an absolute right to regulate its own traffic in its own way, its own interest being the best security that its strict legal right to do so will not be abused" and I may add so long as it does not contravene any express provision of the law. It is one of the duties of the Company to see to the comfort and convenience of its passengers and as Oldfield, J., remarked, in making a reservation for a class of passengers it must be supposed to have acted as it is entitled to do on one or other of these motives [In re Komaran (3)].

Mr. Taluqdar argues that its power to reserve compartment for ladies only is given by sec. 64 of the Act and that as the Act here expressly gives the Railway powers to reserve compartment for ladies it must be held by implication that it has no power to reserve accommodation for any other class of passengers.

This argument is obviously based on a mis-reading of sec. 64. Sec. 64 does not give the Company power to reserve accommodation for ladies. It makes it compulsory to reserve at least one compartment of the lowest class in every train for females, failure to do which is punishable under sec. 95 of the Act. This section certainly gives the Company no powers to reserve 1st or 2nd class compartments for ladies.

There is no section in the Act which does give the Company any powers to reserve accommodation for any one. But the fact that there are sections in the Act to punish persons who interfere with such reserved accommodation shows that by implication the Act recognises the right of the Railway Company to reserve such accommodation. It has been argued further that to reserve accommodation for a particular class of passengers is to show that class undue or unreasonable preference. Now sec. 42 (2) does not provide that the Railway shall not show preference to any passenger or class of passengers. It provides that it shall not show undue or unreasonable preference. What is or is not undue preference obviously depends on the facts of each particular case. In the present case there is no evidence that there was not other equally good accommodation in the train which the Petitioner could have availed himself of, if he had been so disposed. The evidence shows that one compartment alone had been reserved for Europeans. Mr. Taluqdar argues that he could have no grievance whatever if some compartments were reserved for Indians only and that if this was done he could not argue that to reserve a compartment for Europeans only was showing undue preference. If this is really a grievance the remedy might well be sought for by a representation made in the proper quarter. It has nothing to do with the present question. It is not likely that persons for whom a compartment is set apart will go and avail themselves of other accommodation to the exclusion of those entitled to that accommodation. It may be that some persons owing to difference in habits and customs will travel more conveniently both as regards themselves and also as regards other people if they travel by themselves and in making arrangements so that they can do so the Company had in mind not only their convenience but the comfort and convenience of the entire body of passengers. The arrangements made admittedly had the sanction of the Railway Board.

I am of opinion that the Railway Company have not by making the reservation shown undue preference to any passenger or class of passengers.

The last argument to be considered is whether admitting that this Company had the right to reserve such a compartment for Europeans, the Petitioner by refusing to vacate such a compartment when required to do so by the Railway authorities comes within the mischief of sec. 109. Mr. Taluqdar contends that the expression "passenger" used in the sentence reserved by a Railway administration for the use of another passenger means a definite person for whom that particular compartment has been reserved on the understanding that he would take a ticket and travel by that particular train and not for an indefinite person who may or may not avail himself of the accommodation provided.

I see no reason to restrict the expression "passenger" in this way and I am of opinion that the expression "passenger" in sec. 109 includes a class of passengers. This is the view that has commended itself to the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Allahabad [see Emperor v. Narayan Krishna Gogte (1), In re Komaran (3) and Emperor v. Brijbasi Lal (4)] and I see no reason to differ from it.

Under sec. 13 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) words in the singular include the plural. The expression "another passenger" may therefore be read as "other passengers" and it is doing no violence to the language to hold that other passengers include a class of passengers. It seems to me that it does. An attempt has been made to convert what is clearly only a question of Railway administration into racial question. So far as I can see no racial question whatever is involved in this case and it is to be regretted that attempts should have been made to make it one.

The order of the learned Magistrate is right and I would discharge the rule.

Judgment, 6, March.	Respondents.

Arbitration—Award when open to question in Court, as being illegal on the face of it—Jurisdiction of arbitrator, question for Court—Reference, clause of, determines—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of arbitrator to decide questions of both law and fact.

An error in law on the face of an award, such as will justify the Court in setting it aside, must be an error in some legal proposition to which the arbitrators have tied themselves, the same being found in the award or a document actually incorporated therein (as for instance, in a note appended by the arbitrators stating the reasons for their judgment), and which is the basis of the award. It does not mean that if in narrating the facts the arbitrators refer to the contention of one party that opens the door to seeing first what that contention is and then going to the contract on which the parties' rights depend to see if the contention is right.

HODGKINSON v. FERNIE (2), BRITISH WESTINGHOUSE COMPANY v. UNDERGROUND ELECTRIC RAILWAYS COMPANY (3) and LANDAUER v. ASSER (1) referred to.

The question whether an arbitrator acts within his jurisdiction is for the Court to decide, but whether the arbitrator acts within his jurisdiction or not depends solely upon the clause of reference.

Where relying on an award given as to the quality of goods delivered, the buyers rejected them and then the parties referred the whole of the dispute (other than that of quality) arising out of the contract to arbitration:

mination by the arbitrators who therefore had jurisdiction.

These were consolidated appeals from two orders, dated the 29th July 1919 and 20th November 1919 of the High Court at Bombay reversing two orders, dated the 13th March 1919 and 4th August 1919 of a single Judge of that Court and setting aside awards, dated the 23rd September 1918 and the 10th March 1919.

Champsey Bhara & Co. entered into two contracts for the sale of cotton to the Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co., Ld. The contracts were subject to the rules of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association, Limited.

The buyers alleged that the quality of the cotton was inferior, and on arbitration they were awarded an allowance. The buyers therefore contended that the cotton offered was not a valid tender under the contract and refused to take delivery. The sellers claimed damages for such refusal and there was a further reference to arbitration under r. 13 of the rules of the Association. The buyers contended that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction and that the sellers being the party in default were unable to claim damages. The award was in favour of the sellers and this suit was brought by the Spinning Co. to have the award set aside.

The suit was dismissed by the trial Court (Pratt, J.) on the ground that there was no error patent on the face of the award to justify setting it aside.

On appeal the High Court (MacLeod, C. J. and Heaton, J.) reversed that decision and set aside the award.

In the 2nd appeal the same Bench of the High Court held that on the facts before them there was no error apparent on the face of the award.

In each case there was an appeal to His Majesty in Council and the two appeals were heard together.

Messrs. W. H. Upjohn, K. C. and W. Wallach for Champsey Bhara & Co., Appellants.—The Courts will not enquire whether the conclusion of the arbitrators is right or wrong unless an error appears on the face of the award or on some document so closely connected with it as to be regarded as part of the award.

This was the rule laid down in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2) and approved in Attorney-General for Manitoba v. Kelly (5).

"Document forming part of the award" does not include every document referred to in the award by way of recital. It must be an integral part of the adjudication. The doctrine of the High Court based on Landauer v. Asser (1) is erroneous and if pushed to its logical conclusion would nullify every award. An award can only be upset if it is clear on the face of it that it was based on a question of law.

[LORD DUNEDIN referred to Holmes Oil Co., Ltd. v. Pamplurston Oil Co., Ltd. (6)].

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C., Messrs. E. B. Raikes and Claughton Scott for the Respondents.—The award was without jurisdiction. The agreement to refer had come to an end after the first award and the consequential rejection by the buyers of the cotton.

The arbitrators have misinterpreted r. 52.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—The question turns on r. 13, viz., is this a dispute arising out of the contract.

The very fact that you have to refer to

r. 52 shows that it is a dispute arising out of a contract.]

There is no dispute because the contract out of which disputes might have arisen has come to an end.

There is a finding by the original award that the contract was at an end and nothing was then left to arbitrate on.

[LORD DUNEDIN referred to Sanderson v. Armour (4).]

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—In these consolidated appeals it will be convenient to consider the first case by itself. The Appellants as sellers entered into two contracts with the Respondents as buyers of certain bales of cotton. The contracts were made subject to the rules and regulations of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association, Limited. R. 12 of the said Association provides :—

" All questions or disputes as to quality between buyer and seller shall be referred to the arbitration of two disinterested persons, one to be chosen by each disputant, such arbitrators having the power to call in a third arbitrator. The award made by such arbitrators or any two of them shall be final and binding subject only to the right of appeal to the Appeal Committee. All arbitrations held under this Rule must be held in accordance with Rule 5, and only shareholders and/or Directors shall be eligible to act on arbitrations held in the rooms of the Association. Associate members, however, shall be eligible to act as arbitrators when the arbitration is held in the seller's jetha and/or godown as provided under R. 5."

R. 13 provides :—

" All questions in dispute (other than that of quality) arising out of, or in relation to, contracts made subject to the Rules and Regulations of The Bombay Cotton Trade Association, Limited, provided one of the parties to the contract is a member or associate member of the Association, shall be referred to the arbitration of two disinterested persons being shareholders or directors of the Association, one to be chosen by each disputant; such arbitrators having the power to call in a third arbitrator who must also be a shareholder or director of the Association.

" The award made by such arbitrators or any two of them shall be final and binding on both parties, subject only to the right of appeal to the Board within 15 days of the date of the arbitrators' award on payment of Rs. 100."

The cotton was delivered but objected to by the Respondents as being not up to contract. Upon this an arbitration was entered into between the parties, and the arbitrators under sec. 12 made an award as to quality. Thereupon, the Respondents rejected the cotton. The Appellants retorted by claiming damages. This dispute was referred to arbitrators under sec. 13. They issued their award as follows :—

" To all to whom these presents shall come, we, Purshotamdas Thakoredas of Bombay, Hindu Inhabitant, and Vincent Alpe Grantham, also of Bombay, European Inhabitant, send greeting. Whereas by a contract dated 17th day of August 1918, Messrs. Champsey Bhara and Company had agreed to sell to the Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, 100 bales of Mundra M. G. Fully Good Staple cotton on the terms and conditions mentioned in the contract. And whereas by another contract dated 4th day of September 1918, the said Messrs. Champsey Bhara and Company had also agreed to sell to the said Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, 100 bales of New M G. Mundra Cotton Fully Good Staple on the terms and conditions therein contained. And whereas both the said contracts were made subject to the rules and regulations of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association, Limited. And whereas the goods tendered under the said contracts by the said Messrs. Champsey Bhara and Company were rejected by the Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, on the grounds contained in their letters dated 25th November 1918, and 11th November 1918, respectively. And whereas the said Messrs. Champsey Bhara and Company claimed from the said Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, the sum of Rs. 25,000 (rupees twenty-five thousand) in respect of the aforesaid contracts. And whereas the said Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, denied liability in respect of the said sum or any part thereof. And whereas the said disputes were referred to the arbitration of us, Purshotamdas Thakoredas and Vincent Alpe Grantham, who were appointed Arbitrators by the Deputy Chairman of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association, Limited. And whereas on the 12th day of December the time for making our Award was extended by the Deputy Chairman to the 27th day of December 1918. Now know ye that we, the said Purshotamdas Thakoredas and Vincent Alpe Grantham, having taken upon ourselves the burden of the said reference, and having done all acts necessary to enable us to make a valid Award, hereby make our Award as follows, that is to say:—We award and direct that the said Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, do pay to the said Messrs. Champsey Bhara and Company the sum of Rs. 25,000 (rupees twenty-five thousand), and we do further award and direct that the said Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, do pay the costs of this our Award, which we assess at the sum of Rs. 55 (rupees fifty-five).

"In witness whereof we have hereunto set our respective hands this 23rd day of December 1918.

An appeal was made to the Appeal Committee, who confirmed the award. The Respondents then presented a petition to the Court asking that the award should be set aside. They alleged two grounds (1) that there was no question referable to the arbitrators under sec. 13; (2) that there was an error of law on the face of the award. The case depended before Pratt, J., who dismissed the petition. Appeal was taken to the Appellate Division of the High Court, and they reversed the judgment holding that there was an error in law on the face of the award. The way that the learned Judges arrived at that conclusion was this: They said that the recital that the Respondents had rejected the cotton on the grounds mentioned in the letters of the 11th and 25th November 1918, respectively, allowed them to look at the letters. The letter of the 11th November is as follows:—

"To Messrs. Champsey Bhara and Company.

"Dear Sirs,

"Re: D/Order No. 27 dated 6-11-18 for "100 bales N. M. G. Mundra.

"Please note that at the survey held this day on the above lot tendered by you against contract No. 56, dated 4-8-19 as the Arbitrators have in their award allowed Rs. 10½ off, we hereby reject the said lot and refuse to take delivery thereof.

"THE JIVRAJ BALLOO SPINNING AND WEAVING COMPANY, LTD."

The letter of the 25th November is in identical terms referring to the other contract. The learned Judges then held that if cl. 52 of the Regulations is looked at—it being the clause which deals with what is to happen when arbitrators, as to quality, make certain findings—it becomes apparent that the arbitrators here could only have arrived at their judgment if they entirely misinterpreted Art. 52.

They based their opinion upon the case of Landauer v. Asser (1).

The law on the subject has never been more clearly stated than by Williams, J., in the case of Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2) :—

"The law has for many years been settled, and remains so at this day, that, where a cause or matters in difference are referred to an arbitrator, whether a lawyer or a layman, he is constituted the sole and final judge of all questions both of law and of fact . . . . The only exceptions to that rule are cases where the award is the result of corruption or fraud, and one other, which though it is to be regretted, is now, I think, firmly established, viz., where the question of law necessarily arises on the face of the award, or upon some paper accompanying and forming part of the award. Though the propriety of this latter may very well be doubted, I think it may be considered as established."

This view has been adhered to in many subsequent cases, and in particular in the House of Lords in British Westinghouse Company v. Underground Electric Railways Company (3).

The question to be decided is : Does the error in law appear on the face of the award? In the British Westinghouse case (3), it clearly did. The arbitrator had stated a special case and got an opinion of the Divisional Court; in making his award he stated that opinion and founded his award upon it. The opinion as given was held to be erroneous, and so there was an error in law on the face of the award. In Landauer v. Asser (1), the state of affairs was different. The question was as to liability and interest on a policy of insurance effected by sellers for and on account of buyers, and the arbitrator framed his award thus :—

"I decide that as the parties to the contract dated the 3rd November, 1903, were by the terms thereof principals thereto, their interest and liability in insurance is defined to be the value of the invoice plus 5 per cent., and that the buyers are therefore entitled to and only to the said amount, the balance one way or the other being due from or to the sellers."

The Court of Appeal held that this entitled them to look at the contract and to come to the conclusion that the decision was erroneous in law. The case of Landauer v. Asser (1) is not binding on their Lordships, and it was contended that it was wrongly decided, but in their Lordships' opinion it is not necessary to consider that point, for the present case differs from Landauer's case (1) in an essential particular. In that case the legal proposition was stated in terms on which the award proceeded. In the present case, no legal proposition at all is stated as a ground of the award. The reference to the letters is only in the narrative, and even when the letters are looked at they only contain the view of one party. To make this case equiparate with that of Landauer (1) the award would have to run somewhat thus :—"In respect of the ground of rejection contained in the letters of the 11th and 25th November, and in respect of cl. 52 of the articles, I decide that, etc"

Now the regret expressed by Williams, J., in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2) has been repeated by more than one learned Judge, and it is certainly not to be desired that the exception should be in any way extended. An error in law on the face of the award means, in their Lordships' view, that you can find in the award or a document actually incorporated thereto, as for instance, a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment, some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which you can then say is erroneous. It does not mean that if in a narrative a reference is made to a contention of one party that opens the door to seeing first what that contention is, and then going to the contract on which the parties' rights depend to see if that contention is sound. Here it is impossible to say, from what is shown on the face of the award, what mistake the arbitrators made. The only way that the learned Judges have arrived at finding what the mistake was is by saying : "Inasmuch as the arbitrators awarded so-and-so, and inasmuch as the letter shows that the buyer rejected the cotton, the arbitrators can only have arrived at that result by totally misinterpreting cl. 52." But they were entitled to give their own interpretation to cl. 52 or any other article, and the award will stand unless, on the face of it, they have tied themselves down to some special legal proposition which then, when examined, appears to be unsound. Upon this point, therefore, their Lordships think that the judgment of Pratt, J. was right and the conclusion of the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal erroneous.

The Counsel for the Respondents then argued the other point, which the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal found it unnecessary to decide, and which the trial Judge decided against them. He said that upon a proper construction of the contract the moment his client rejected the cotton in virtue of the decision by the arbitrators as to quality, he was entitled to do so, and the contract was repudiated or came to an end; that then the arbitration clause could no longer be appealed to, and he said that inasmuch as this was a plea to jurisdiction the Court ought to decide it.

Their Lordships think that this argument is based upon a confusion of thought. The question of whether an arbitrator acts within his jurisdiction is, of course, for the Court to decide, but whether the arbitrator acts within his jurisdiction or not depends solely upon the clause of reference. It is, therefore, for the Court to decide in this case whether the dispute which has arisen is a dispute covered by cl. 13 of the articles. It clearly is so, because it is undoubtedly a dispute arising out of or in relation to a contract made subject to the rules and regulations of the Cotton Trade Association. Now that clause refers to the arbitrator the whole question whether it depends on law or on fact, with the exception only of dispute as to quality. It is, therefore, for the arbitrator and not for the Court to decide what is the effect of a rejection based on an award as to quality. In truth this point is decided in terms by the recent case of Sanderson v. Armour (4). It was a Scotch case, but in no way depended upon any peculiarity of the law of Scotland.

The decision of the first appeal in this sense disposes of the second appeal without further argument, as it is obvious that in that case even the reference in the narrative to the grounds of defence in the letters is absent, and there is nothing but the bare statement that a certain sum was awarded. It follows that in the first appeal, the appeal must be allowed and the judgment of the trial Judge restored; the Appellants must have their costs here and in the Courts below. The second appeal must be dismissed and the Respondents will have their costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

RULE No. 855 (F) OF 1923.

MOOKERJEE, J.
CUMING, J.
1923,
Heard, 28 and 29, August.
Judgment, 18, September.

NANDI LAL AGRANI, Appellant, Petitioner,
v.
JOGENDRA CHANDRA DUTTA, Respondent, Opposite Party.

Court Fees Amendment Act (IV of 1922, B. C.), Sch. I, Art. 5, court-fee payable on an application for review of Appellate judgment where the appeal was filed under the old Act—"Leviable," point of time to which the expression has reference—Rights of a purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree, if can be defeated by taking advantage of an error in the boundaries in the mortgage-deed—Position of a purchaser in execution of a money decree, if better than the judgment-debtor's in the application of the doctrine of estoppel—Mortgagor, if can dispute validity of mortgage—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 89, mortgage security, if extinguished after order absolute—Mortgagee, if debarred from proving that description of the property mentioned in the decree is erroneous—Court's power to rectify boundaries in the sale certificate after sale confirmed.

Where an application for review of an Appellate judgment was made, after the Bengal Court Fees Amendment Act of 1922 came into force, with one-half of the court-fee payable and paid on the memorandum filed before the new law came into force:

Held—That neither under the Court Fees Act as originally framed in 1870 nor under the Court Fees Act as amended in 1922, can a Petitioner for review of judgment be called upon to pay court-fee on the basis of the fee which would be payable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal if it were to be filed on the date of the application for review. The amount must be calculated on the basis of the fee leviable (which, in the normal course of events, is the fee actually levied) on the plaint or memorandum of appeal according to the law in force when the plaint or memorandum was filed in Court. Therefore the application in the present case must be deemed to bear the correct court-fee.

The expression "leviable" in Art. 5 has reference to the time when the plaint or memorandum was filed. As soon as a suit has been instituted, the amount of court-fees payable on a possible application for review of the prospective judgment in the suit becomes fixed.

Where a purchaser in execution of a money decree for arrears of rent wanted to defeat the rights of a previous purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree, taking advantage of a clerical error in the mortgage deed which was reproduced successively in the plaint, mortgage decree and the sale certificate and it transpired on enquiry that there was no land corresponding to the incorrect boundaries.

Held—That by the sale in execution of the money decree for rent nothing could vest in the purchaser except the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and the purchaser would thus be bound by the same rule of estoppel as the judgment-debtor. Further, the judgment-debtor mortgagor was bound by the rule of estoppel not to dispute the validity of the mortgage. Therefore the purchaser in

It may be conceded that under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, which regulated the rights of the parties as the decree was made before Or. 34, r. 5 of the new Civil Procedure Code came into operation, the mortgage security was extinguished as soon as the order absolute for sale was made, and the relative rights of the mortgagor and mortgagee were thenceforth regulated by the decree, but it does not follow that the mortgagee became thereby debarred from proving that the description of the property mentioned in the schedule to the decree itself was erroneous. There was nothing to prevent the Courts from granting relief as among the decree-holder, the auction-purchaser and the judgment-debtor and to rectify the boundaries in the schedule to the sale certificate. For this purpose, it was not material to go back behind the decree to the mortgage instrument itself. The clerical error having become apparent on the result of the local enquiry held on the basis of the boundaries in the sale certificate, the Court had ample authority as a Court of justice, equity and good conscience to mould the relief accordingly as between the original parties or their representatives in interest.

This was an application for review of judgment, dated the 29th August 1922, delivered by this Court in Appeal from Original Decree No. 314 of 1919, which had been preferred from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Howrah, passed dated the 18th September 1919.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows:—A tract of land measuring 30 bighas belonged to some Sahas, who mortgaged the same and a mortgage decree was obtained in September 1902. The property was sold in execution of the mortgage decree in May 1907, and the purchaser obtained the sale certificate in April 1908. The auction-purchasers sold the property to the present Plaintiff Jogendra Chandra Dutta. In the meantime the 6 as. co-sharer landlords of the Sahas obtained a money decree against the Sahas for arrears of rent in respect of the said 30 bighas of land in 1907. In the execution sale which followed on the 12th May 1908, the right, title and interest of the Sahas were purchased by one Sarkar, who in October 1908 sold the same to the present Defendant Agrani. The present suit was instituted by the Plaintiff to recover the said 30 bighas from the Defendant Agrani, who in defence relied on a clerical error in the boundaries scheduled in the mortgage deed. The error was successively reproduced in the plaint in the mortgage suit, in the decree and in the sale certificate. On an enquiry directed by the High Court upon the Defendant's appeal against a decree made in Plaintiff's favour in the trial Court, it transpired that there was no land corresponding to the boundaries given in the sale certificate. The appeal to the High Court was ultimately dismissed and the

This is a Rule for the review of the judgment of this Court in Nanda Lal Agrani v. Jogendra Chandra Dutta (1).

A preliminary question of considerable importance has been raised with regard to the amount of court-fee payable on the application. We have heard the Assistant Government Pleader as the matter affects the public revenue and the point must be examined before we consider the application on the merits.

The subject-matter of the appeal was valued at 7,750 and on the 20th December 1919, a court-fee of Rs. 385 was paid on the memorandum in accordance with the table of rates of ad valorem fees embodied in Sch. I of the Court Fees Act, 1870. The appeal was thereupon registered and was heard in due course. Judgment was pronounced on the 29th August 1922, when the appeal was dismissed with costs. On the 21st November 1922, the Appellant presented the application for review of judgment now under consideration. The application bore a court-fee of Rs. 192-8-0, that is, one-half of Rs. 385, the amount payable and paid on the memorandum of appeal when it was lodged in this Court. The Stamp Reporter to whom the application was presented in the first instance, made a note that there was a deficiency of Rs. 115. In the opinion of the Stamp Reporter, the amount payable as court-fee was Rs. 307-8-0, that is, one-half of Rs. 615 which would have been payable on the memorandum of appeal, if it were lodged in this Court on the 21st November 1922, when the application for review was filed. At this stage, it is necessary to mention that after the 20th December 1919 when the memorandum of appeal was filed and before the 21st November 1922, when the application for review was lodged, the Bengal Court Fees Amendment Act, 1922 (Act IV of 1922, B. C.) had come into force on the 1st April 1922. Sec. 5 of this amending statute modified Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act, 1870, by enhancement of the rate of fee payable on plaints, written statements and memorandums of appeal. Sec. 9, as a corollary altered the table of rates of ad valorem fees appended to the same schedule. The consequence was that from the 1st April 1922 the amount of court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal valued at Rs. 7,750 was raised from Rs. 385 to 615.

The determination of the question now raised before us depends upon the true construction of cls. 4 and 5 of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act. Art. 4 provides that the proper fee for an application for review of judgment, if presented on or after the ninetieth day from the date of the decree, is the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal. Art. 5 provides that the proper fee for an application for review of judgment, if presented before the ninetieth day from the date of the decree, is one-half of the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal. There is no dispute that as the application in the present case was made before the ninetieth day from the date of the decree, Art. 5 is applicable, and the argument has centred round the question, what is the point of time to which the expression leviable has reference.

The Assistant Government Pleader has invited us, on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council, to read into the third column of Arts. 4 and 5 the following expression: "If the plaint or memorandum of appeal were presented when the application for review is made." There are two obvious objections to the proposed construction: namely, first, it requires us to read into the articles words which are not to be found there: and, secondly, the fiction that is invoked is absolutely contradictory to the actual facts, because an application for review of judgment cannot be concurrent with a plaint or memorandum of appeal which must of necessity precede the judgment to be reviewed. As Lord Mansfield observed in Johnson v Smith (2), fiction has no place where substantial justice does not require its interference, still less where substantial justice would suffer from its operation. "The Court would not endure that a mere form or fiction of law, introduced for the sake of justice should work a wrong, contrary to the real truth and substance of the thing." This is an echo of what Lord Coke had said in Butler and Baker's case (3): "The law will never make any fiction, but for necessity and in avoidance of a mischief."

The Petitioner, on the other hand, urges that the Court Fees Act itself contains a provision which specifies when the fee is leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal and he invites our attention to sec. 6 which is in the following terms:—

"Except in the Courts hereinbefore mentioned, no document of any of the kinds specified as chargeable in the first or second schedule to this Act annexed, shall be filed, exhibited or recorded in any Court of justice, or shall be received or furnished by any public officer, unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said schedules as the proper fee for such document."

This shows conclusively that the requisite court-fee is leviable when the plaint or memorandum is filed; Amjad Ali v. Muhamad Israil (4). This is corroborated by the provisions of Or. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. R. 1 requires that the plaint shall, in addition to other particulars, contain a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of court-fees. R. 11 ordains that the claim shall be rejected, when written upon paper insufficiently stamped, if the Plaintiff has failed to supply the requisite stamp paper within a time to be fixed by the Court.

The Assistant Government Pleader urges that if the expression "leviable" refers to the time of presentation of the plaint or memorandum of appeal, the legislature might as well have replaced it by the word "levied." This argument is fallacious and overlooks the fact that what is leviable might not have been levied. In this connection, reference may be made to secs. 12 and 28 of the Court Fees Act.

"12. (i) Every question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee chargeable under this chapter on a plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be decided by the Court in which such plaint or memorandum, as the case may be, is filed, and such decision shall be final as between the parties to the suit.

(ii) But whenever any such suit comes before a Court of Appeal, reference or revision, if such Court considers that the said question has been wrongly decided to the detriment of the revenue, it shall require the party by whom such fee has been paid to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable had the question been rightly decided, and the provisions of sec. 10, para. 11, shall apply."

"28. No document which ought to bear a stamp under this Act shall be of any validity, unless and until it is properly stamped.

But, if any such document is through mistake or inadvertence received, filed or used in any Court or office without being properly stamped, the presiding Judge or the head of the office, as the case may be, or, in the case of a High Court, any Judge of such Court, may, if he thinks fit, order that such document be stamped as he may direct; and, on such document being stamped accordingly, the same and every proceeding relative thereto shall be as valid as if it had been properly stamped in the first instance."

Reference may also be made to sec. 149 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

"149. Where the whole or any part of any fee prescribed for any document by the law for the time being in force relating to court-fees has not been paid, the Court may, in its discretion, at any stage, allow the person, by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part, as the case may be, of such court-fee; and upon such payment the document in respect of which such fee is payable, shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance."

It is plain that if the legislature had, in Arts. 4 and 5 used the expression "levied" instead of "leviable," the result would have been that if by mistake a smaller amount than what is leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal, has been levied, the applicant for review will be entitled to the continued benefit of the mistake. Conversely, if the amount levied is in excess of what is leviable, the Petitioner will be prejudiced, though he may be entitled to a refund of the sum paid in excess; Lakhi Narain v. Kirtibas Das (5) and Re: Prasanna Chandra Roy (6). There is thus ample reason why the legislature should have used the term "leviable" and not "levied." The use of the term "leviable" does not, in our opinion, justify the inference that the legislature intended to introduce a fiction into the law, namely, an imaginary presentation of the plaint or memorandum of appeal at the time when the application for review is filed.

We are fortified in this conclusion by another circumstance of a very special character. In the case of a suit or an appeal, the litigant is required to value the relief claimed and to pay court-fee accordingly. In the case of an application for review, the applicant is not required to value the relief claimed and to pay court-fee on the basis of such valuation. It is immaterial whether the applicant seeks a review of the judgment in respect of the whole or a fraction of the subject-matter of the controversy. The proper fee for the application is the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal, whether the review affects the whole or a part of the decree: Nobin Chandra v. Mahomed Uzir Ali (7), Imdad Hosein v. Badri Prasad (8), Re: Moqbul Ahmad (9) and Hussaina v. Shaheb (10), though the decisions in Anon (11) and Re: Manohar Tambekar (12), may perhaps point to the opposite conclusion. The policy of the legislature is obvious. The substance of the matter is that for the purpose of ascertainment of the court-fee payable on the application for review, the application relates back to the plaint or memorandum of appeal, as the case may be : the amount is levied in a fixed proportion, independent of the scope of the application for review. To put the matter differently : as soon as a suit has been instituted, the amount of court-fee payable on a possible application for review of the prospective judgment in the suit becomes fixed.

We may note that the Assistant Government Pleader did not formulate the point for decision accurately when he stated that the question is, whether the case before us is excluded from the operation of the amending statute. The real question is, does the amending statute affect the decision of the question? The answer, in our opinion, must be in the negative : and we are supported in this view by two additional considerations. In the first place, the true construction of Arts. 4 and 5 must be determined irrespective of the amending statute which makes no reference to them. These articles found a place in the Court Fees Act as framed in 1870 : and the intention of the legislature, as expressed in the language used, cannot obviously be affected by the supposed object of the framers of the amending statute of 1922. There is nothing to show that the framers of the statute in 1870 anticipated and kept in view the contingency which has now arisen : there is equally nothing in the amending statute to indicate that the legislators of 1922 realised and provided for this case. Sec. 17 of Act IV of 1922, B. C., which was interpreted in Thadeous Nahapiet v. Secretary of State for India in Council (13) clearly does not advance the contention of the Assistant Government Pleader : on the other hand, the decision in Taraprasanna v. Nrishinha (14) militates against his argument. In the second place, we must bear in mind the elementary rule that, although as pointed out in Inland Revenue v. Oliver (15), provisions in fiscal statutes are not to be so construed as to furnish a chance of escape and a means for evasion, a fiscal statute must be strictly construed, and liability or additional liability cannot be imposed on the subject except by clear and unambiguous terms : Stockton Ry. Co. v. Barrett (16), Partington v. A.-G. (17), Cox v. Rabbits (18), Pryce v. Monmouthshire Canal and Ry. Co. (19), Oriental Bank Corporation v. Wright (20), Tennant v. Smith (21), Secretary of State for India v. Scoble (22), Deputy Commissioner of Singbhum v. Jagadish Chandra (23) and Raj Rajeswari v. Gatikrishna (24). From whatever point the question may be viewed, there is thus no escape from the conclusion that neither under the Court Fees Act as originally framed in 1870 nor under the Court Fees Act as amended in 1922, can a Petitioner for review of judgment be called upon to pay court-fee on the basis of the fee which would be payable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal if it were to be filed on the date of the application for review. The amount must be calculated on the basis of the fee leviable (which, in the normal course of events, is the fee actually levied) on the plaint or memorandum of appeal according to the law in force when the plaint or memorandum is filed in Court. Tested in the light of this principle, the application in the present case must be deemed to bear the correct court-fee and must accordingly be heard on the merits.

To appreciate the ground for review, it is essential to recall the relevant facts which are set out in the following passage of our judgment :—

"The subject-matter of the litigation is a tract of land, measuring about 30 bighas, described in Sch. A to the plaint. The land belongs admittedly to the Sahas, who executed a mortgage in favour of Mallik on the 29th September 1900. The mortgagee sued to enforce his security and obtained a decree on the 27th September 1902. At the execution sale which followed in due course, on the 14th May 1907, Samalka became the purchaser. He obtained a sale certificate on the 28th April 1908. Samalka, it is said, was the nominal purchaser and bought in the property, one-third for the benefit of Ramdeo and two-thirds for the benefit of Rooya. On the 3rd June 1910, and on the 8th July 1910, respectively Rooya and Ramdeo, the beneficial owners, executed two conveyances in favour of Banerjee. The Plaintiff Dutt alleges that he was the real purchaser, and the conveyances were taken by him in the name of Banerjee. It would be a needless digression to narrate the story of the dispute between Dutt and Banerjee as to who became the beneficial owner under the conveyances: it is sufficient to state that Dutt may now be taken to have established his title against Banerjee, who has consequently disappeared from the scene."

The history of the title set up by the first Defendant who is the rival claimant may now be stated. In 1907, the Chaudhuries, who were the 6 annas co-sharer landlords, obtained against the Sahas a money decree for arrears of rent in respect of the disputed lands. This decree was executed, and at the sale which followed on the 12th May 1908, the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor was purchased by one Sarkar. On the 14th October 1908, the first Defendant Agrani purchased the property from Sarkar on the basis of an alleged agreement for sale, dated 6th July 1908. In the interval, Sarkar had sold to Bose on the 20th July 1908, and on the strength of the title so acquired, Bose sold to the second Defendant, Dutt, brother of the Plaintiff, on the 25th May 1920. These transactions, it has been held, do not affect the purchase by Agrani from Sarkar, and were evidently attempts made by the Plaintiff to perfect his title, by buying in outstanding claims. The controversy between the Plaintiff and the first Defendant must consequently be determined on the following basis, namely, that the title of the Plaintiff is traced to the mortgage sale of the 14th May 1907 which itself rests on the mortgage of the 29th September 1909, while, on the other hand, the title of the first Defendant cannot be traced beyond the execution sale of the 12th May 1908 when the right, title and interest of the Sahas was exposed for sale. Before that date, the property had already vested in Samalka by virtue of the mortgage sale and could not again be brought to sale at the instance of the co-sharer landlords in execution of the money decree they held against the Sahas; we are consequently not called upon to consider what would have been the position, if the so-called rent decree were not a mere money decree and had the qualities of a true rent decree. The inference is thus irresistible that, primâ facie, the first Defendant has no title which can be successfully set up against the Plaintiff. What then is his answer to the claim? His defence, as will presently appear, is founded on a clerical error which crept into the mortgage instrument.

In the schedule to the mortgage bond, the boundaries of the hypothecated property were described as follows :-

"Within District Hoogly Sub-Registry Howrah, Station Golabari, Thana Golabari, Pargana Paik[illegible] village mouza Salikha, lies the Tantipara land measuring about 30 bighas :—

East—A place belonging to us called Bajaldanga.

West—Jatadhari [illegible]s land.

North—Biswambhar Saha's tank.

South—A place called Barabagan.

Maliks of 10 annas share are the Raja of Dighapatia and Bibi Jarao Kumari; the annual rent of Rs. 35 is payable to both the Sarkars : and the malik zaminder of 6 annas share is Gurudas Kundu Chaudhury to whom Rs 40 is payable as annual rent."

It has now transpired that, by mistake, the north and south boundaries were interchanged : what is stated as the south boundary was in fact the north boundary. The scribe evidently made a mistake and wrote "north" for "south" and "south" for "north." This erroneous description of the boundaries was in due course reproduced from the mortgage deed into the plaint, from the plaint into the decree, and from the decree into the sale certificate. The error appears to have been subsequently discovered, and in the conveyance by Rooya to Banerjee, dated the 3rd June 1910, the correct boundary is given in one portion of the deed though the incorrect boundary is also set out in the schedule. In the conveyance by Samalka to Banerjee, however, dated 8th July 1910, the incorrect boundary alone is reproduced. On these facts, the first Defendant urges that the Plaintiff has not purchased the disputed land at all, and must content himself with such land as may be found to lie within the incorrect boundaries set out in the mortgage deed. It is plain that if this contention prevails, the Plaintiff takes nothing. As the result of the further enquiry, which was directed by this Court on the 9th February 1921, it has transpired that there is no land which corresponds to the incorrect boundaries. There is no tract of 30 bighas which lies in Tantipara and is bounded on the east by Bajaldanga, on the west by Jatadhari Haldar's land, on the north by Bishambhar Saha's tank, and on the south by Barabagan. The fact that there has been a misdescription becomes manifest on a local inspection of the place, and this is confirmed, when the map is examined. There is, further, no plot of 30 bighas except the disputed land which, as stated in the mortgage bond, was held by the Sahas as tenants, 10 annas under Dighapatia and Jarao Kumari and 6 annas under the Chaudhuries. There is thus not the remotest doubt as to the facts. The only question is, whether the first Defendant is entitled in law to take advantage of the error in the mortgage deed and thereby to defeat the title of the Plaintiff.

It is plain that as the result of the execution sale, which was held on the 12th May 1908, by the co-sharer landlords on the basis of the money-decree held by them, nothing could vest in the purchaser Sarkar beyond the right, title and interest of the Saha judgment-debtors. The purchaser would thus be bound by the same rule of estoppel as the judgment-debtors.

We then proceeded to point out that tested in the light of this principle, the claim of the contesting Defendant could not be sustained, because the first Defendant was in no better position than the Sahas would have been if they had endeavoured to defeat the Plaintiff by reliance on the clerical error in the mortgage bond. In support of the view that the first Defendant was in the same position as the Sahas, we referred to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishore Mohun Roy (25), where it had been ruled that the purchaser at the execution sale acquires the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and does not consequently occupy a position of greater advantage than the judgment-debtor does in the application of the doctrine of estoppel. In support of the view that the mortgagor is bound by the rule of estoppel not to dispute the validity of the mortgage, we referred to the decision in Debendra Nath v. Mirza Abdul Samed (26), where reference is made to Good Title v. Bailay (27), Doe v. Pegge (28) and Doe v. Vickers (29). To these may be added Right v. Bucknell (30), Doe v. Stone (31) and Madell v. Thomas (32). The two principles just mentioned cannot be and have not been disputed. They form the foundation of another decision whereon we also placed reliance, namely, Bepin Krishna Roy v. Joyeswar Roy (33), where a mistake was traced from the decree backwards, through successive stages of the judicial proceedings, to the mortgage instrument itself. It has now been argued that we overlooked that the decision last mentioned has no application, because in that case the rights of the parties were governed by Or. 34, rr. 4 and 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and not by secs. 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which were in force when the transactions in this case took place and must consequently regulate the rights of the parties.

It is not disputed that there is a substantial divergence between sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and Or. 34, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. Sec. 89 provided that in a suit for sale, upon the failure of the Defendant to pay the dues within the prescribed period, an order absolute for sale shall be made, "and thereupon the Defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished." There was much divergence of judicial opinion as to the precise effect of the concluding clause of sec. 89, and it was ruled by a Full Bench of this Court in Bibijan Bibi v. Sachi Bewa (34) that "thereupon" means "after sale" and not "after the order absolute for sale." This view, however, was overruled by the Judicial Committee in Hetram v. Shadilal (35) and the clause itself was left out by the legislature when sec. 89 was replaced by Or. 34, r. 5. But this cannot affect the rights of litigants which accrued when sec. 89 was in force. The effect of that section has been considered by the Judicial Committee in Hetram v. Shadilal (35), Mathu Mal v.

Durga Kunwar (36) and Sukhi v. Ghulam (37).

In Hetram v. Shadilal (35), a property had been twice mortgaged by way of simple mortgage, once in 1880 and again in 1881. Hetram purchased the property from the mortgagee in 1883. In 1885 the mortgagee of 1880 obtained against the mortgagor and Hetram a decree absolute for sale under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. He did not implead the mortgagee under the mortgage of 1881. He took no further steps under the decree and the property was not brought to sale. He died, and was succeeded by Hetram as his heir. In 1910 the mortgagee under the mortgage of 1881 instituted the suit. It was held that Hetram could not set the mortgage of 1880 as a shield, because the decree of 1885 was (1) barred by limitation, (2) inoperative as against the Plaintiff who had not been made a party to the suit and because the mortgage itself was gone, because of the terms of sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

In Mathu Mal v. Durga Kunwar (36), a property had also been the subject of two mortgages of 1872 and 1879 respectively. The mortgagee of 1872 obtained in 1881 a decree for sale under the same sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, but omitted to implead the second mortgagee. A lady who was an assignee of the second mortgage raised suit in 1909. The owner resisted the decree unless he was paid the whole amount due under the first mortgage with interest calculated at the rate stipulated therein. The Plaintiff offered to pay the amount under the decree of 1884, but refused to pay the amount of the mortgage so calculated. The Subordinate Judge gave effect to the contention of the owner. The High Court altered the decree and gave effect to the offer of the Plaintiff. The owner then appealed. The Board adhered to the judgment of the High Court. The Judicial Committee, pressed with the decision in Umesh Chandra v. Zahoor (38), pointed out that at the time when the High Court delivered judgment, the case of Hetram v. Shadilal (35) had not been before the Board. That case decided that an order made under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (Act IV of 1882), for the sale of mortgaged property has the effect of substituting the right of sale thereby conferred upon the mortgagee for his rights under the mortgage, and the latter rights are extinguished. When the decree or order for sale in the case of Umesh Chandra Sirkar v. Zahoor Fatima (38) was made, the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, had not been passed and the procedure prescribed by that Act for suits for sales under that Act did not exist: that case was decided on the law as it then stood. The view thus adopted by the Judicial Committee fits in with the pronouncement in Sundar Koer v. Shamkissen (39), where Lord Davey observed that, after the expiration of the period of grace, if the property should not be redeemed, the matter would pass from the domain of contract to that of judgment and the rights of the mortgagee would thenceforth depend, not on the contents of his bond but on the directions in the decree.

Lord Dunedin pointed out that Or. 34, rr. 3 and 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which now govern final decrees for foreclosure and sale, do not provide that after a decree thereunder the mortgage security is extinguished, as was prescribed by sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act in the case of a sale decree made under that section. On this ground, the decisions in Hetram v. Shadilal (35) and Mathu Mal v. Durga Kunwar (36) were distinguished. The inference follows that the law now under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, remains as it certainly was before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, as expounded and applied in Sunder Koer v. Shamkissen (39).

In the case before us, the mortgage decree was made on the 27th September 1902 and the execution sale thereunder took place on the 14th May 1907. Sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act was in force till the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, came into operation on the first day of January 1909. The rights of the parties must consequently be determined with reference to sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and not Or. 34, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. The decision in Bepin Krishna v. Jogeswar (33) is consequently distinguishable. There the mortgage decree was made on the 16th December 1909 and the sale in execution was held on the 18th September 1911. The rights of the parties thus fell to be determined only with reference to Or. 34, r. 5, C P. C. In addition to this circumstance the error in the mortgage instrument was discovered before the sale was completed; and a suit was instituted for rectification of the mortgage, before the sale could be held again. We must accordingly consider whether in view of sec 89 of the Transfer of Property Act as explained by the Judicial Committee in Hetram v. Shadilal (35) and Mathu Mal v. Durga Kunwar (36), the Plaintiff can establish, as against the Defendant, that there was an error in the description of the property and is entitled to succeed on that footing.

The Defendant has strenuously contended that under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, as soon as the order absolute for sale was made the security was extinguished, and the relative rights of the mortgagor and mortgagee were thenceforth regulated by the decree. This may be conceded. But it does not follow that the mortgagee became thereby debarred from proving that the description of the property mentioned in the schedule to the decree itself was erroneous. The Petitioner has contended in substance that the effect of sec. 89 is to place, at the stage of the decree, an impassable barrier across the path of enquiry from the sale certificate backwards to the mortgage instrument. The question we have to solve is, what is the property, covered by the sale certificate, which has passed into the hands of the Plaintiff. Enquiry has elicited two facts, namely, first, that there is no property in existence which corresponds to the property described in the schedule to the sale certificate and the decree, and secondly, that if the northern and southern boundaries be interchanged, there is a property of the judgment-debtor which fits in with that description, in every other respect to the minutest detail. No legal principle has been brought to our notice which, on these facts, prevents the Courts from granting relief as among the decree-holder, the auction-purchaser and the judgment-debtor. What is essentially requisite is the rectification of the boundaries in the schedule to the sale certificate. For this purpose, it is not material that we should go back, behind the decree to the mortgage instrument itself. The clerical error becomes apparent on the result of the local enquiry held on the basis of the boundaries in the sale certificate. The investigation of the proceedings in the suit itself, antecedent to the decree, only furnishes a historical explanation, as it were, how the error arose. But there can be no question that there is an error in the sale certificate, and in our opinion, the Court has ample authority as a Court of justice, equity and good conscience to mould the relief accordingly as between the original parties or their representatives in interest. In this view, it is needless to consider the scope of the questions which may be properly raised on an application for review of judgment as explained by the Judicial Committee in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (40).

The result is that the Rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

CHARU CHANDRA GHOSE and ors., Appellants,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 120B read with sec. 420, charge under, for deceiving Judges by habitually instituting false cases in Civil Courts and obtaining decrees in pursuance of conspiracy, how far tenable—Omission to put before the jury as to whether the evidence satisfied the ingredients of sec. 415, if a misdirection—Court, passing a decree in a suit, if can be said "to make a valuable security" or "to deliver property"—Evidence of Judges deceived, if necessary for proving the charge.

A sanction, given by the Munsif for prosecution of certain persons under secs. 193, 209, 467/114 and 471, I. P. C., for habitually bringing false cases in Civil Courts against innocent persons in pursuance of a criminal conspiracy, was revoked by the District Judge. While the proceedings were pending, the police submitted a charge-sheet alleging that the accused had conspired to cheat people by habitually bringing fraudulent civil suits. The accused were eventually tried on a charge under secs. 120B/420, I. P. C. of conspiring to deceive unsuspecting Judges of Civil Courts by bringing false cases against innocent persons and inducing them to pass decrees and thereby to make valuable securities and to cause delivery of properties and so on:

Held—That in order to bring a case within the four corners of sec. 420, I. P. C., it would have to be seen whether the ingredients required by sec. 415, I. P. C., are present. A "decree," as defined in the Civil Procedure Code, does not come within the definition of a "valuable security" and even if a "decree" did satisfy the definition of a "valuable security," within the meaning of sec. 415, I. P. C., there is no delivery of any property when the Court passes a decree, because the original decree remains in Court, and the term "valuable security" can only apply to the original document and not to any copy of a decree which may be supplied on application to the parties. The same arguments would apply to orders in execution. The Judge misdirected the jury in that he did not draw the attention of the jury to the question as to whether the ingredients required by sec. 415, I. P. C. were present on the facts alleged by the prosecution.

Further, no evidence had been adduced by calling the "unsuspecting Judges" of Civil Courts to speak to the fact that they were deceived, whereas the language of sec. 415, I. P. C. requires that the persons deceived must have delivered properties, etc., and in the circumstances of this case the fact that these Judges were deceived could only have been spoken to by the Judges themselves.

Therefore the case of the prosecution could not be brought within the four corners of sec. 415, I. P. C., and therefore also of sec. 420, I. P. C. and the accused must be acquitted.

These were appeals under sec. 410 of the Criminal Procedure Code against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Burdwan (Mr. Paroda Kinker Mukherjee), dated the 19th July 1923.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows :—An application to the District Magistrate of Burdwan asking him to take action against a number of persons who were in the habit of instituting false cases in the Civil Courts against innocent persons, was forwarded by the District Magistrate to the Superintendent of Police in Burdwan for necessary action. The latter thereupon passed an order for arresting the persons mentioned in the petition and for starting a case under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., against them. A Police enquiry followed, but no report having been submitted for eight months, the Magistrate before whom the proceedings under sec. 110 were pending, directed the discharge of the said persons. Shortly after that a first information was lodged against the said persons, charging them with having committed offences punishable under sec. 420 read with sec. 120B, I. P. C. and the District Magistrate applied before the Munsif for sanction to prosecute five persons for offences under secs. 193, 209, 467/114 and 471 and also under some of these sections read with sec. 109 and also under some of these sections read with sec. 114, I. P. C., for being members of a criminal conspiracy for the purpose of fraudulently obtaining moneys and properties from innocent persons or depriving them of their lawful rights by instituting false and fraudulent suits. On the 25th September 1920, the Munsif granted the necessary sanction. On revision, however, the District Judge of Burdwan on 31st April 1921 revoked the sanction granted by the Munsif. While these proceedings were pending, the Police submitted a charge-sheet against certain persons on the 19th May 1920, alleging that the present accused, along with others, had conspired to cheat people by bringing fraudulent civil suits in Burdwan and in Shahabad and that they were professional swindlers and habitual conspirators.

The accused were eventually put on their trial on a charge under sec. 420 read with sec. 120B, I. P. C., charging them with being members of a criminal conspiracy to cheat, and as members thereof conspiring with one another to commit offences punishable under sec. 420, I. P. C., to wit, to deceive unsuspecting Judges of Civil Courts who tried the suits and also Judges who had ordered execution of the decrees therein and inducing or attempting to induce the said Judges, so deceived, to make valuable securities, to wit decrees, declaring that the accused persons were entitled to get properties or moneys from the victims of the said conspiracy and thereby deceiving such Judges to order execution of the decrees, to attach or seize properties of the victims of the conspiracy and to sell or cause to be sold properties so attached and thereby dishonestly inducing them to deliver or cause to be delivered possession of the properties so sold and so on. The accused were eventually convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Burdwan, and against the said convictions the present appeals were preferred to the High Court.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mookerjee and Punchanan Chaudhury for the Appellants.

Babu Surendranath Guha for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Appellants in appeal No. 408 were four persons named Charu Chandra Ghose, Akhoy Kumar Rooj, Akhay Kumar Pal and Jiban Chandra Roy alias Jiban Krishna Ray; the latter died after the appeal had been filed and at the present moment the Appellants are the three first named persons. In appeal No. 409 the Appellants are three in number, namely, Ganpat Pandey, Rajani Kant Samui and Charitar Muchi alias Ram Charitar Muchi. The above-named seven persons, along with six others, were tried under sec. 120B, read with sec. 420, read with sec. 109 of the Indian Penal Code, before the Additional Sessions Judge of Burdwan and a jury. The jury convicted the said seven persons and the learned Judge agreeing with the verdict of the jury, sentenced the said seven persons to various terms of imprisonment as under, viz., the accused Charu Chandra Ghose to three years' rigorous imprisonment; the accused Akhoy Kumar Rooj and Jiban Chandra Roy to two years' rigorous imprisonment; the accused Akhay Kumar Pal to one year's rigorous imprisonment; and each of the accused, Ganpat Pandey, Rajani Kant Samui and Charitar Muchi, to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

The facts connected with these two appeals, shortly stated, are as follows :— On the 17th July 1919, one Jiten Das (P. W. 67) made an application before the District Magistrate of Burdwan, asking the latter to take action against a number of persons who were in the habit of instituting false cases in the Civil Courts against innocent persons. Ten persons were named in Jiten Das's petition, which has been tendered as an exhibit in this case and which is exhibit 190. The District Magistrate forwarded the petition to the Superintendent of Police in Burdwan for necessary action. The latter on receipt of the petition passed an order on the 16th August 1919, for arresting the ten persons mentioned in Jiten Das's petition and for starting a case against them under sec. 110, Cr. P. C. A Police enquiry followed, but although the case under sec. 110, Cr. P. C. was started on the 18th of August 1919, the Police did not submit a final report even up to March 1920. On the 3rd March 1920, the Magistrate, before whom the proceedings under sec. 110, Cr. P. C. were pending, being of opinion that inasmuch as the Police report had not been submitted for a period of nearly eight months, directed the discharge of the said ten persons. On the 17th of March 1920, a first information was lodged against the said persons, charging them with having committed offences punishable under sec. 420 read with sec. 120B of the Indian Penal Code. On the 21st June 1920, the District Magistrate of Burdwan applied before the Munsif, first Court, at Burdwan, for sanction to prosecute five persons named, Prabhu Ram Pandey, Charu Chandra Ghose, Akhay Kumar Pal, Amrita Lal Samui and Upendra Nath Naik, for offences under secs. 193, 209, 467/114 and 471 and also under some of these sections read with sec. 109 and also under some of these sections read with sec. 114 of the Indian Penal Code. In his petition the District Magistrate stated that Prabhu Ram Pandey was a veteran litigant and a proclaimed "tout" in the District of Burdwan, and the said other four persons were his creatures and associates, and that all of them with other person or persons unknown, were members of a criminal conspiracy for the purpose of, amongst others, fraudulently obtaining moneys or properties from innocent persons or depriving them of their lawful rights by instituting false and fraudulent suits against such persons on the basis of forged documents and by committing other offences punishable in law or by doing illegal acts with illegal means in connection with those false claims. Particulars were given by the District Magistrate in his said petition of the false and fraudulent suits alleged to have been brought by the persons, against whom sanction was applied for. On the 25th September 1920, the Munsif granted the necessary sanction. There was an application for revision of the order made by the Munsif before the District Judge of Burdwan and the latter, by his order dated the 31st of April 1921, revoked the sanction granted by the Munsif. While these proceedings were pending, the Police submitted a charge-sheet against certain persons on the 18th of May 1920. It was alleged that the present accused, along with others, had conspired to cheat people by bringing fraudulent civil suits in Burdwan and in Shahabad and that they were professional swindlers and habitual conspirators.

In order to understand the case against the accused persons, it is necessary to mention some of the details of the conspiracies in which they were, according to the Police, engaged. It appears that Prabhu Ram Pandey, whose name has already been mentioned, claimed to be the reversionary heir of one Sheo Balak, who died some time in 1903, leaving a widow called Jhalo Koer. After Sheo Balak's death, it is alleged that Prabhu Ram determined to get hold of Sheo Balak's properties and with that view instituted various suits. One Amar Dayal claimed to be the adopted son of Sheo Balak, having been adopted by Jhalo Koer, and it is said that he used to look after Jhalo Koer's properties. Prabhu Ram Pandey instituted certain suits against Amar Dayal in 1910 and 1911. It was alleged that these suits were false and fraudulent. It appears further that Jhalo Koer became involved in debt and mortgaged her lands on the 14th of Agrahayan 1318 F. S., corresponding with the 30th of November 1910, and executed and registered a deed in favour of Progar Ram, Raghubir Shaha and Badhu for a consideration of Rs. 500. Ram Dhyan Panday was a witness who identified Jhalo at the time of the registration of this deed. A few days after this, viz., on the 8th of December 1910, the accused Jiban Krishna brought a criminal case at Burdwan against Ram Dhyan. Summons was never served on Ram Dhyan in this case and it is alleged that Ram Dhyan became aware of this for the first time when he was arrested in execution of a warrant at Sasaram. He came to Burdwan and met Prabhu Ram Pandey and invoked his assistance. Prabhu Ram demanded Rs. 10. Ram Dhyan paid Re. 1 and promised to pay the balance on return home, which he did. Later on, it is said that Prabhu Ram took Ram Dhyan to a temple and made him promise that he would not go against Prabhu Ram and in that case he would not be put to any trouble. Prabhu Ram, it is further alleged, said that it was at his instance that the case had been instituted. On the 27th of January 1911, the accused Charu Chandra Ghose, instituted a Small Cause Court Suit No. 45 of 1911, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan against Ram Dhyan on an alleged note of hand dated the 28th October, 1908. The suit was decreed and compromised for Rs. 214 on the 20th of February 1911. It is alleged that Ram Dhyan never came and compromised the suit, nor had he borrowed any money from Charu Chandra Ghose and that Ram Dhyan came to know of this matter for the first time when his lands were sold some three years later in execution of the decree. Raghubir's name has already been mentioned. He was one of the mortgagees of Jhalo Koer and it is alleged that between 1912 to 1917 certain proceedings were taken by some of the accused against Raghubir. In other words, suits were instituted against Jhalo, Amar Dayal, Ram Dhyan and Raghubir. The above suits may be classed under one group, being false suits brought by the conspirators in respect of matters in connection with Jhalo Koer's properties.

Evidence as regards two other conspiracies was also adduced. It appears that there was a man called Jaherilal Sadhukhan, who happened to be a friend of Prabhu Ram Pandey. He died leaving a son named Kali Pado Sadhukhan and a widow named Manoda Sundari. One Nibaran Chandra Roy was a tenant of Jaherilal and there was a person named Gosto Behari Bose, who used to look after the properties and conduct litigation on behalf of Manoda Sundari. One Nityanand Shaha had a joint karbar with Manoda Sundari and Kali Pado. It appears that after Jaherilal's death, Manoda Sundari and Kali Pado were helped in the joint karbar and in looking after the properties of Jaherilal by these three persons, named Nibaran Chandra Roy, Gosto Behari Bose and Nityanand Shaha. It is alleged that on Jaherilal's death Prabhu Ram Pandey wanted to get hold of Jaherilal's properties and of the karbar and with that object a conspiracy was formed some time in 1910 and various suits and proceedings were brought between 1910 to 1916 and the victims of the said conspiracy were Manoda Sundari, Kali Pado, Nibaran Chandra Roy, Gosto Behari Bose and Nityanand Shaha. Nityanand, it may be mentioned in passing, was a witness to a kobala alleged to have been executed by Jhalo Koer in favour of Prabhu Ram Pandey.

The third conspiracy, in respect of which evidence was given, arose in this way. There was a man called Narain Shaha, who died leaving a widow called Jatika Moyee. Narain had a sister named Probhat Kumari, whose husband was one Rajani Kant Samui. On Narain's death, Rajani Kant Samui, it is alleged, wanted to get the house which Narain had left. It is alleged, however, that Narain had left a daughter and, therefore, Rajani Kant Samui could on no account get the house of Narain. Rajani Kant Samui's case, however, was that Narain had died childless and that the house was the stridhan property of Narain's mother, and therefore, in the usual course of things Narain's sister, Probhat Kumari, would be entitled to get the house. Litigation ensued in respect of this between 1918 to 1920, and it is alleged that the accused were members of a conspiracy formed to get hold of the property of Narain.

The charge framed against the accused, who are now before us, ran in these terms :—" That you between the 27th day of March 1913, and April 1920, at Natun-ganj and Khojnerbar in the town of Burdwan, District Burdwan, and at Konpa, Arrah and Sasaram in the District of Shahabad and at other places in British India, were, along with others, members of a criminal conspiracy to cheat (which conspiracy had continued to exist since about 1903) and as members thereof did conspire with one another and Prabhu Ram Pandey, since deceased, Nader Ali Khan, since deceased, and other person or persons unknown, to commit offences punishable under sec. 420, I. P. C. (each of which is a part of the same scheme and transaction), to wit, to deceive unsuspecting Judges of Civil Courts who had tried the suits mentioned in Sch. A, attached hereto, and also Judges of Civil Courts who had ordered execution of such decrees in execution cases mentioned in Sch. B, attached hereto, by a process of your own, namely, firstly, you deceived the first above-mentioned trial Judges to entertain unsuspectingly false claims (on the false allegations that the predecessors in title of the Defendant or the Defendants respectively concerned in the said Civil suits had borrowed money or purchased goods on credit or assigned right to receive money from the Plaintiffs who were either one or more of your party or a relation or connection of one of your party therein respectively, at places within the local limits of jurisdiction of such above-named trial Judges, but which places were at great distance from the places of residence of the Defendants concerned, and that the debts so alleged to be due to the said respective Plaintiffs remained unpaid wholly or in part) and then by causing false evidence to be given before the first above-mentioned trial Judges, by one or more of your party, to prove due service of summonses (where summonses and copies of plaints were not served according to law) and claims (which were known by you to be false) deceived the first above-mentioned trial Judges respectively to believe that the claims in the suits aforesaid were true and proved as against the Defendants concerned therein, and thereby dishonestly induced or attempted to induce the first above-mentioned trial Judges, so deceived, to make valuable securities (to wit, decrees in Small Cause Court suits declaring that the Plaintiffs therein were entitled to get properties or moneys from the victims of the said conspiracy, viz., the Defendants concerned in such suits or that the legal rights of some Defendants were extinguished) and you thereby obtained or attempted to obtain properties by deceitful means: and nextly, you deceived the said first above-mentioned trial Judges to transmit the decrees, which were passed in the suits aforesaid, for execution to last above-mentioned executing Judges (who had ordered execution of such decrees in the execution cases aforesaid and within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the Defendants respectively concerned in the said suits resided or had properties) and then deceived such executing Judges to order execution of the decrees, so transmitted, (on the representation of one or more of your party that the decree-holder was entitled to enforce his decrees with the assistance of the Court) in the execution cases aforesaid, to attach or seize or cause to be attached or seized the bodies or properties of the victims of the said conspiracy, viz., the judgment-debtors concerned in the said execution cases respectively or to sell or cause to be sold properties so attached or seized by Court sale to one or more of your party, and thereby dishonestly induced them respectively to deliver or to cause to be delivered possession of the properties so sold to one or more of your party as auction-purchasers at such sales or to deliver or cause to be delivered moneys realised in such execution cases to one or more of your party as decree-holders, or to consent to the retention of properties so sold or moneys so delivered by one or more of your party as decree-holders and you also deceived the Judges of Civil Courts who had decided the suits mentioned in Sch. C attached hereto and thereby dishonestly induced them or attempted to induce them respectively to give effect to the false defence set up knowingly by one of your party, and to make valuable securities (to wit decrees in such suits declaring that the Plaintiffs in such suits were not entitled to their respective lawful claims or part thereof) and thereby committed an offence punishable under secs. 120B/420 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Sessions. And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge."

There are three schedules to the said charge, Sch. A, containing a list of the false and fraudulent suits alleged to have been brought by the members of the conspiracy, Sch. B, being a list of the execution cases which followed the decrees in the suits mentioned in Sch. A, and Sch. C, being the list of suits in which false and fraudulent defences were set up by the members of the said conspiracies.

The matters referred to in the said charge clearly came within the purview of secs. 209 and 210 of the Indian Penal Code and might properly have been made the subject-matters of proceedings against the accused under the provisions of the said two sections. The difficulty, however, in the way of the prosecution lay in the fact that under the provisions of sec. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cognizance of any offence punishable under secs. 209 and 210, among others, could not be taken except with the previous sanction of or on the complaint of a Court in which such an offence has been committed, or of some other Court to which such Court was subordinate, and in this case the sanction which had been granted by the Munsif had been revoked by the District Judge, Mr. Cammiade, in April 1921. The prosecution, therefore, attempted to bring their case against the accused within the four corners of sec. 420 of the Indian Penal Code. Sec. 420 of the Indian Penal Code runs as follows:—

"Whoever cheats and thereby dishonestly induces the person deceived to deliver any property to any person or to make, alter or destroy the whole or any part of a valuable security or anything which is signed or sealed and which is capable of being converted into a valuable security shall be punishable with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to a fine." Now, in order to bring a case within the four corners of sec. 420, I. P. C., it would have to be seen in the first instance whether the ingredients required by sec. 415, I. P. C., are present in the facts alleged against the accused. We must, therefore, turn to sec. 415, I. P. C., in the first instance and see what the ingredients required by that section are. Sec. 415 runs as follows:— "Whoever by deceiving any person fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person or to consent that any person shall retain any property or intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit, if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property, is said to cheat." The ingredients required by this section, therefore, are :—

(1) Deception of any person.

(2) (a) Fraudulently or dishonestly inducing that person

(i) to deliver any property to any person; or

(ii) to consent that any person shall retain any property; or

(b) intentionally inducing that person to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.

Mr. Manmatha Nath Mookerjee, who has appeared on behalf of the Appellants, in support of these two appeals, has assailed the learned Additional Sessions Judge's charge to the jury on various grounds. It is unnecessary for us, in the view we have taken, to refer to all the grounds urged by Mr. Mookerjee, but we shall content ourselves with noticing the more important of Mr. Mookerjee's grounds. In the first place, it is argued that the charge was bad, inasmuch as there was not one conspiracy, which was referred to therein, but evidence was allowed to be given of three conspiracies in which the conspirators were different, the objects of the conspiracies were different, and the conspiracies were held at different times. It is complained that in the charge to the jury the above point was not mentioned and the attention of the jury was not drawn to it. In the second place, it is argued that the learned Judge's charge to the jury was defective inasmuch as the attention of the jury had not been drawn to the following points arising on a charge under sec. 420 or 415, I. P. C. In other words, it is argued that it bought to have been put to the jury that in order to make out the offence of cheating, not only should there have been delivery of property, but it had to be proved that it was property to which the accused was not entitled. Nextly it is argued that it ought to have been put to the jury that passing a decree is not tantamount to delivering property and there was no evidence whatsoever that anybody was deceived and that the person so deceived had delivered any property. It is also argued that there was no evidence as to the ingredients required in the second part of sec. 415 of the Indian Penal Code. It is further argued that it should have been put to the jury that there were specific sections in the Indian Penal Code covering the real offences alluded to in the charge and alleged to have been committed by the accused and that the prosecution were not entitled to institute the present case complaining of other offences alleged to have been committed by the accused when sanction, as a matter of fact, had been refused in respect of a prosecution for the real offences committed by the accused.

It has been represented to us on behalf of the Appellants that the case put before the Sessions Judge was wholly different from the one indicated in the first information. In the first information it was alleged that the accused persons conspired to cheat numerous persons by bringing fraudulent civil suits in the Courts at Burdwan and Shahabad. In the Sessions Court the prosecution changed their case and it was alleged that the real offence had been committed against Courts of justice. No sanction for the prosecution of offences against Courts of justice was available after the 30th of April 1921, when the District Judge revoked the sanction which had been previously granted by the Munsif and in consequence thereof, the prosecution, it is alleged, had to fall back upon sec. 420, I. P. C., because it was realised that if the case could be brought under the provisions of sec. 420, I. P. C., it would not be necessary to rely on any sanction for the institution of the present proceedings.

The charge delivered by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Burdwan to the jury is a very lengthy document. This has been scrutinised on behalf of the Appellants for the purpose of showing that the learned Judge misdirected the jury, in that he did not draw the attention of the jury to the question as to whether the ingredients required by sec. 415, I. P. C. were present in the facts alleged by the prosecution. The Appellants urge that there are various other misdirections in the charge bearing on the other grounds taken on behalf of the Appellants. In the view we take as regards the learned Additional Sessions Judge's charge on the question as to whether the ingredients required by sec. 415, I. P. C. are or are not present in the case on behalf of the prosecution, it will not be necessary for us to go into the other questions of misdirection argued on behalf of the Appellants. We, therefore, propose to confine ourselves to this ground, viz., whether the learned Additional Sessions Judge's charge to the jury can or cannot be assailed on the ground that he had not put before the jury whether on the evidence adduced by the prosecution the ingredients required by sec. 415, I. P. C. were satisfied. On behalf of the prosecution it has been made clear to us that they did not seek to bring their case within the latter or the second part of sec. 415, I. P. C. The case for the prosecution is that unsuspecting Judges of Civil Courts were deceived by the Appellants, that the persons so deceived were induced by the Appellants to pass decrees in certain civil suits and thereby induced to deliver properties, and it is alleged that by reason of these steps having been taken by the Appellants, they committed the offence of cheating as defined in sec. 415, I. P. C.

It is argued on behalf of the prosecution that when Judges of Civil Courts passed decrees in suits brought by the Appellants or some of them, or when they passed orders in execution proceedings instituted by the Appellants or some of them, they made valuable securities within the meaning of the definition contained in sec. 30, I. P. C. and that they thereby delivered properties, and, further, they would not have delivered properties if they had not been fraudulently deceived by the Appellants or some of them, and that if that is so, the case is brought within the four corners of sec. 415, I. P. C. For the moment we will leave aside orders made in execution proceedings and confine ourselves to decrees. Now, "valuable security" as defined in sec. 30, I. P. C. denotes a document which is, or purports to be, a document whereby any legal right is created, extended, transferred, restricted, extinguished or released, or whereby any person acknowledges that he lies under a legal liability or has not a certain legal right. The word "decree" has been defined in the Civil Procedure Code and it means the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Courts expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit. Let us see therefore whether a decree satisfies the definition of a valuable security. In our opinion a "decree" does not come within the definition of a "valuable security"; a decree merely declares the existence of legal rights or the extinguishment, extension, transfer or restriction of legal rights, etc.; the rights are there, etc., and all that the decree does is that it formally expresses the adjudication by the Court on the rights of the parties. Therefore a "decree" is not a "valuable security," but even if a "decree" did satisfy the definition of a "valuable security," there was no delivery of property within the meaning of sec. 415, I. P. C. When the Court passes a decree, it does not deliver any property, because the original decree remains in Court and the term "valuable security," assuming that the term is wide enough to include a decree, can only apply to the original document and not to any copy of a decree which may be supplied on application to the parties. The same arguments would apply to orders in execution. In the next place, who are the persons deceived according to the prosecution. They must be "unsuspecting Judges" of Civil Courts, according to the prosecution. No evidence has been adduced by calling the "unsuspecting Judges" of Civil Courts to speak to the fact that they were deceived, because the language of sec. 415, I. P. C. requires that the persons deceived must have delivered properties, etc., and in the circumstances of this case the fact that those Judges were deceived could only have been spoken to by the Judges themselves.

As has been stated above, the prosecution made it clear before us that they did not rely upon the second part of sec. 415, I. P. C.; it is therefore not necessary for us to enquire as to whether on any conceivable view of the matter, this case could have been brought within the second part of sec. 415, I. P. C. If it were necessary to do so, we might point out that the charge as framed does not cover a case coming within the second part of sec. 415, I. P. C. and that the evidence adduced does not satisfy the ingredients of the second part of sec. 415, I. P. C.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge's charge to the jury is defective in that it omitted to point out to the jury the matters to which we have drawn attention; there was, therefore, misdirection of a very grave character, and in the circumstances we are constrained to set aside the verdict of the jury. We are satisfied that on no conceivable view of the matter could the case of the prosecution be brought within the four corners of sec. 415, I. P. C. and, therefore, also of sec. 420 of the Indian Penal Code. In the view, therefore, which we have taken, it is not necessary for us to go into any details in respect of the other grounds taken by Mr. Mookerjee on behalf of the Appellants. It is not to be understood, however, that the other grounds of Mr. Mookerjee are not substantial. The materials on the record and especially the learned Additional Sessions Judge's charge to the jury, leave no other alternative to us but to come to the conclusion to which we have come. The prosecution was conducted during a very lengthy period and at great public expense; that it should have been conducted in the manner in which it has been done, is regrettable; but these appeals must stand or fall on the question of misdirection in the learned Additional Sessions Judge's charge to the jury. As has been stated above, we are satisfied that there has been misdirection and we are, therefore, bound to set aside the verdict of the jury and to direct the acquittal of the Appellants, which we do. The bail bonds will be cancelled.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 145 OF 1922.

MOOKERJEE, J.
RANKIN, J.
1923,
Heard, 10 and 11, May.
Judgment, 19, July.

RAMPRATAP CHAMRIA, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
DURGAPRASAD CHAMRIA and ors, Defendants, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 12, 14, 15—Award, validity of—Pending suit, reference made to arbitration to settle all matters in dispute between parties to suit—Award going beyond matters in dispute in suit and adjudging rights of a stranger to suit, if valid—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, and Indian Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), jurisdictions created under, in respect of awards

During the pendency of a suit, all the parties to the suit except an infant Defendant, as also another, not a party to the suit, entered into an agreement whereby they appointed certain persons as arbitrators for the purpose of settling disputes among themselves. The Court, on an application made by the Plaintiff in the said suit, passed a consent order directing that all matters in difference in the suit between the parties should be referred to the final decision of the persons appointed arbitrators as aforesaid. The arbitrators made an award which dealt with matters not included within the scope of the suit and was in excess of their authority in respect of matters included within its scope. The award was filed under the Indian Arbitration Act and the Civil Procedure Code, Sch. II:

Held per CURIAM.—That the award was invalid and could not be enforced either under the Civil Procedure Code, Sch. II, or the Indian Arbitration Act, and at any rate, it was not a case in which the Court should exercise its discretionary powers under para. 12 or para. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held per MOOKERJEE, J.—An examination of the provisions of the second schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure and of the Indian Arbitration Act leaves no room for controversy that the legislature has made clear and distinct provisions to regulate the procedure in respect of each of four types of arbitration which have special characteristic features. The jurisdiction thus created in respect of each type of arbitration must be exercised through the machinery provided and in conformity with the procedure prescribed. The legislature never contemplated a confusion of these jurisdictions. No provision can be traced for simultaneous arbitration, by private agreement and on reference by Court, in respect of subject-matters within and beyond the scope of a suit and amongst persons, some parties and some strangers to a litigation.

Held per RANKIN, J.—It is quite impossible that one and the same arbitration should be held as to matters within the jurisdiction of the Court and matters without the jurisdiction of the Court: between the parties to the suit and between them and other persons: under the Code provided by the Indian Arbitration Act and under the Code provided by the second schedule: under the superintendence and control of the Judge who has seizin of the suit and of the Judge disposing of business under the Indian Arbitration Act: partly upon an order of reference and partly under an agreement. When under para. 12 of the second schedule the Court proceeds to correct an award in a case where a severable matter not referred has been dealt with it does so by cancelling that part of the award and the part so cancelled is set aside for all purposes. Neither para. 12 nor para. 14 is directed to such a confusion of jurisdiction as the present case discloses.

No Court acting under the Civil Procedure Code has in India a general authority to act on the consent of parties and thus to make an Order of Reference in a form which might apply to any dispute whatever independently of any relation to the jurisdiction of the Court.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd November 1922 against an order of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 24th July 1922.

The plaint in the suit was as follows :—

1. One Nandaram Chamria died leaving two sons Gorakhram Chamria and Hardatrai Chamria. The said Nandaram Chamria died in involved circumstances in his native village at Fatehpur.

2. The said Gorakhram Chamria died in 1914 leaving a son Rampratap Chamria and the Defendant Mussamat Surji, the widow of his predeceased son Amlokchand Chamria who died in the year 1911.

3. The said Hardatrai Chamria adopted a son the Defendant Durgaprasad Chamria. Later on three sons were born to him one of whom died an infant.

4. The said Hardatrai Chamria died leaving a widow Mussamat Annardeyi Sethani and two sons the Defendants Radhakissen Chamria and Motilal Chamria.

5. The said Hardatrai Chamria during his life-time by his own unaided exertions started a business in Calcutta and elsewhere under the name of Hardatrai Chamria of which he was the sole proprietor.

6. The said Rampratap Chamria joined the said business as an assistant and later on was admitted by the said Hardatrai Chamria as a partner. In the beginning the said Rampratap Chamria was given a two annas share which was subsequently increased to five annas.

7. Subsequent thereto Amlokchand Chamria during his life-time was also admitted as a partner in certain portion of the said business and was given a two annas share.

8. Thereafter the said Hardatrai Chamria and Rampratap Chamria carried on the said business in partnership between themselves. The said Hardatrai Chamria had an eleven annas share in the said firm and the said Rampratap Chamria had the remaining five annas.

9. By an indenture dated the 1st October 1916 the said Hardatrai Chamria and Rampratap Chamria agreed to carry on the said business in Calcutta and elsewhere on certain terms therein mentioned. A copy of the said indenture is annexed hereto and marked "A." Portion of the assets of the said business is in Calcutta as will appear from the schedule to the annexure "A."

10. On Mussamat Surji expressing a desire to take the Defendant Motilal Chamria in adoption as a son unto her husband the said Hardatrai Chamria with the consent of Rampratap Chamria agreed that two annas share out of his eleven annas share should be set apart for the benefit of the proposed adopted son Motilal Chamria.

11. On the 16th November 1916 the members of the firm of Hardatrai Chamria & Co., Rampratap Chamria, Mussamat Surji, Durgaprasad Chamria, Radhakissen Chamria and Motilal Chamria entered into an agreement in writing whereby they agreed to carry on the said business in Calcutta and elsewhere. A copy of the said agreement is hereto annexed and marked "B." Part of immoveable property forming the assets of the said partnership is situate in Calcutta.

12. Since then the said business has been carried on, on the basis of the said agreement by all the parties.

13. On the same day, namely, the 16th November 1916, an agreement by way of family settlement was come to by and between Hardatrai Chamria, Durgaprasad Chamria, Radhakissen Chamria, Motilal Chamria and Mussamat Annardeyi Sethani by which the rights and interests of the parties hereto were declared and regulated. A copy of the said agreement is hereunto annexed and marked "C" to which as well as to the annexures "A" and "B" the Plaintiff craves reference as part of this his plaint.

14. The said Mussamat Surji did not adopt the Defendant Motilal Chamria. She, however, alleges that she had adopted Durgaprasad's son Keshabdeo. The Plaintiff denies the factum and the validity of the said alleged adoption but has been advised to make the said Keshabdeo a Defendant in this suit.

15. The said Durgaprasad Chamria has drawn out of the firm a sum of about rupees twenty-one lacs without the knowledge or consent of any of the parties.

16. The said Durgaprasad Chamria has taken forcible possession and removed the books of account of the said firm and is refusing inspection thereof.

17. The said Durgaprasad Chamria is making unauthorised entries therein to suit his own purpose.

18. The said Durgaprasad Chamria has been guilty of gross misconduct in the affairs of the said partnership and wards the partners.

*Sc*By reason of the wrongful acts of and Durgaprasad Chamria the parties which ll confidence in him and such a state of feeling has arisen between the partners as to render it impossible that the partnership can continue with advantage.

20. The Plaintiff's cause of action arose in Calcutta on 10th January 1921; and inasmuch as some portion of the business and its assets are situate outside the jurisdiction of this Honourable Court, the Plaintiff for greater safety asks for leave under cl. 12 of the Charter to institute this suit.

The award was in these terms :—

Whereas by a Nagree agreement, dated the 11th May 1922, the parties to the suit hereinafter mentioned as also Sethani Annardeyi referred all disputes between themselves to our arbitration and whereas by an order of the Calcutta High Court made on the 23rd May 1922 in suit No. 120 of 1922 (wherein Rai Bahadur Rampratap Chamria is the Plaintiff and Durgaprasad Chamria and others are the Defendants) all matters in dispute between the parties were referred to our arbitration provided that the arbitration is to be in terms of the said agreement, dated 11th of May 1922 and that the attorney for the guardian ad litem of the infant Defendant be allowed to represent her and whereas we have been attended by all the parties (including the said Sethani Annardeyi) as also Mr. S. K. Ghosh, the attorney for the said guardian ad litem and whereas we have fully considered all the materials placed before us and evidence adduced by the parties and have arrived at the decisions hereinafter mentioned on the basic points of dispute and whereas we desire to make an award embodying the decisions we have arrived at to enable the parties to adjust accounts and effect divisions of properties on the basis of our said decisions and if necessary separate awards may be made by us in regard to adjustments of accounts and divisions of properties and other matters incidental to our decisions

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This appeal is directed against an order made by Mr. Justice Greaves for cancellation of an award made by arbitrators.

The subject-matter of the litigation is alleged to be the estate left by one Hardatrai Chamria whose name appears in the following genealogical table:—

On the 12th January 1922, Rampratap instituted a suit against his cousins Durgaprasad, Radhakissen and Motilal, as also against his sister-in-law Surji and his nephew Keshabdeo. The allegations in the plaint may be briefly summarised. Nandaram left two sons Gorakhram and Hardatrai. The former died in 1914 leaving the Plaintiff as his surviving son, and Surji, his daughter-in-law, the widow of Amlokchand who had predeceased him in 1911. Hardatrai, the brother of Gorakhram, took Durgaprasad in adoption, and thereafter two sons were born to him, namely, Radhakissen and Motilal. Though Hardatrai started a business by his own exertions, Rampratap and Amlokchand were taken as partners therein: their shares varied from time to time, and after the death of Amlokchand, Hardatrai had 11 annas share and Rampratap 5 annas share. An indenture was executed on the 1st October 1916, between Hardatrai and Rampratap in respect of the business; but as Surji expressed a desire to take Motilal in adoption, Hardatrai, with the consent of Rampratap. set apart 2 annas out of his 11 annas share for the benefit of Motilal. On the 16 November 1916, two documents appear to have been executed, one an agreement for management of the firm of Hardatrai Chamria & Co., the other an agreement by way of family settlement to regulate the rights of the parties. It is stated that Surji adopted not Motilal but Keshabdeo. In these circumstances, the suit was instituted on the 12th January 1922 by Rampratap against the other members of the family. On the 11th May 1922 a document was executed by Annardeyi (the widow of Hardatrai), Rampratap, Durgaprasad, Radhakissen, Motilal and Keshabdeo (through Surji). Arbitrators were appointed for the settlement of all matters in dispute amongst the parties; it was agreed that in respect of the suit the necessary parties should apply to the Court in accordance with the directions of the arbitrators whose decisions would be binding on them. On the 23rd May 1922, an order was made on the petition of the parties to the suit, and the matters in difference in the litigation between the parties thereto were referred to the arbitrators named in the agreement in terms thereof: the Court certified that the order made was for the benefit of the infant Keshabdeo. The arbitrators held their sittings on the 24th, 26th and 27th May 1922 and made their award on the last-named day. The award was sent to the Registrar on the 31st May; but it was not till the 4th July that the award was filed both in the suit and under the Indian Arbitration Act. Mr. Justice Greaves has analysed the provisions of the award which need not be set out except in bare outline for our present purpose. But it must be stated at the outset that the award deals with matters outside the suit and concerns one person at least who was not a party to the suit. The award recites that the arbitrators had arrived at decisions on the basic points of dispute and desired to make an award so as to enable the parties to adjust accounts and effect divisions of their properties.

Cl. 1 provides that each party will bear his or her costs of the suit. Cl. 2 provides that the two agreements of the 16th November 1916 are valid. Cl. 3 provides that Rampratap and Amlokchand were not joint but separate in estate and entitled to 5 annas and 2 annas respectively as entered in the books of Hardatrai Chamria, and that Rampratap and Amlokchand's branch was respectively entitled thereto up to the 31st December 1916 and that with effect from the 1st January 1917 the shares were as stated in the memorandum of the terms of arrangement between the members of the firm of Hardatrai Chamria & Co., dated the 16th November 1916. Cl. 4 provides that the adoption of Keshabdeo by Mussamat Surji was valid and that she, as stated in the deed of adoption, would be entitled to spend Rs.2,00,000 in charity. Cl. 5 deals with land at Fatehpur and does not concern the partnership with which the suit deals. Cl. 6 deals with shares in joint stock companies and does not concern the partnership. Cl. 7 directs that Keshabdeo's estate will be placed under the control and management of Durgaprasad, Rampratap and Badridas Goenka and applies to his interest in the partnership and to his other property outside the suit. Cl. 8 does not concern the rest, but contains a provision for Surji during her life which is ultimately to belong to Keshabdeo. Cl. 9 specifically deals with the firm of Rai Hardatrai Chamria Bahadur & Co. and concerns the partnership and the suit. The clause provides for the dissolution of the partnership with effect from the 30th June 1922 which is said to be beyond the powers of the arbitrators, as the dissolution must date from the institution of the suit, namely, the 12th January 1922: the clause also provides that as from the 1st July the firm is to be conducted on certain lines, the partners depositing with the firm all cash withdrawn by them from the old firm, and their shares are defined. This is said to be beyond the powers of the arbitrators as constituting a new partnership for the partners. Cl. 10 does not concern the partnership. Cl. 11 calls for no comment. Cls. 12, 13 and 14 do not concern the partnership. Cl. 15 provides for the accounts of the partnership being made up by three persons therein named. Cl. 16 refers to matters outside the partnership and therefore outside the suit.

It is thus abundantly clear that the award not only deals with matters outside the suit but is also in excess of the authority of the arbitrators in respect of matters included within the scope of the suit, such as, fixing the date of dissolution and making a new partnership between the parties. In these circumstances, Mr. Justice Greaves has set aside the award in so far as it purports to deal with the matters covered by the suit. We have been pressed to hold that this order cannot be supported.

The statutory law of arbitration in this country is embodied in the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, and in the second schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which reproduces with modifications the contents of previous Codes. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure were analysed by Lord Macnaghten in Ghulam Jelani v. Md. Hassan (1). The schedule is divided into three sections, (a) arbitration in suits, (b) reference on agreement to refer, and (c) arbitration without the intervention of a Court; as Lord Macnaghten puts it, the Code deals with arbitrations under three heads:—

1. Where the parties to a litigation desire to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in the suit. In that case all proceedings from first to last are under the supervision of the Court.

2. Where parties without having recourse to litigation agree to refer their differences to arbitration, and it is desired that the agreement of reference should have the sanction of the Court. In that case all further proceedings are under the supervision of the Court.

3. Where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court, and the assistance of the Court is only sought in order to give effect to the award.

Full directions are to be found in the Code as to the course of procedure in cases falling under head No. 1, and large powers are given to the Court with the view of making the award in such cases complete, operative and final. The Court makes an Order of Reference on the agreement (which must be the agreement of all parties to the suit), being brought before and fixes a time for the delivery of the award with power to enlarge the time, if necessary. When the award is submitted to the Court, the Court may in certain specified cases correct or modify it, subject to a right of appeal. In certain specified cases, it may remit the matter to the arbitrators or to the umpire, as the case may be. No award is to be set aside except in one of three cases specified and defined.

In cases falling under heads 2 and 3, the provisions relating to cases under head 1 are to be observed, so far as applicable.

(1) L. R. 29 I. A. 51; s. c. I. L. R. 29 Cal. 167; 6 C. W. N. 226 (1901).

RAMPRATAP CHAMRIA v. DURGAPRASAD CHAMRIA.

But there is this difference, which does not seem to have been always kept in view in judicial decisions. In cases falling under head 1, the agreement to refer and the application to the Court founded upon it. must have the concurrence of all parties concerned, and the actual reference is the order of the Court, so that no question can arise as to the regularity of the proceedings up to that point. In cases falling under heads 2 and 3, proceedings described as a suit and registered as such must be taken in order to bring the matter—the agreement to refer or the award, as the case may be—under the cognisance of the Court. That is or may be a litigious proceeding—cause may be shown against the application—and it would seem that the order made thereon is a decree within the meaning of that expression as defined in the Civil Procedure Code.

The Indian Arbitration Act, on the other hand, relates exclusively to arbitration by agreement without the intervention of a Court of Justice, and, subject to the provisions of sec. 23, applies only in cases where, if the subject-matter submitted to arbitration were the subject of a suit, the suit could, whether with leave or otherwise, be instituted in a Presidency Town. We need not analyse here the detailed provisions of the statute, defining the duties and functions of the arbitrator, as also the powers of the Court to remove the arbitrator, to stay proceedings, to remit or set aside the award and to enforce the award as a decree. The High Court is further empowered to frame rules to regulate all proceedings in Court in accordance with the provision of the statute.

An examination of the provisions of the second schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure and of the Indian Arbitration Act thus leaves no room for controversy that the legislature has made clear and distinct provisions to regulate the procedure in respect of each of the four types of arbitration which have special characteristic features. The jurisdiction thus created in respect of each type of arbitration must be exercised through the machinery provided and in conformity with the procedure prescribed. The legislature never contemplated a confusion of these jurisdictions. No provision can be traced for simultaneous arbitration, by private agreement and on reference by Court, in respect of subject-matters within and beyond the scope of a suit and amongst persons, some parties and some strangers to a litigation. What has happened in the case before us is, in essence, an arbitration in a manner neither known to nor contemplated by the law, and the Court must consequently decline to affix the stamp of its authority on the product of the labour of the arbitrators. From this standpoint, the award must be treated as invalid, and we are not called upon to consider the applicability of the principle indicated in Darlington Wagon Co. v. Harding Steam Boat Co. (2) and Muhammad Newaz Khan v. Alam Khan (3) explained in Bhajahari v. Beharylal (4), which recognise latent vitality in an arbitration award made with jurisdiction, even though it has not been enforced by a regular suit or by summary procedure. If we test the award from the point of view of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, the arbitrators have plainly dealt with matters not covered by the submission and beyond the scope of the suit. The effect of a reference by the suit may be accurately described in the words of Lord Brougham in Baillie v. Edinburgh Oil Gas Light Co. (5): "The judicial reference is an act of the Court and does not take the cause out of the Court : the Court still retains control over it, but the mode of enquiry and the manner of trial alone is changed by the reference, and the forum of the arbitrator is, in this restricted sense and subject to the control of the Court, substituted for enquiry by the Court itself." The arbitrators on such a reference are consequently limited to questions in dispute between the parties in the cause referred, and they are not competent to mix up, in their investigation and determination, other controversies wherein strangers to the suit are interested. When an award has resulted from proceedings so carried on in a manner not contemplated by the law, the Court cannot be called upon to invoke the aid of the doctrine of separability which was recognised by the House of Lords in Johnston v. Cheape (6) and Caledonian Ry. Co. v. Lockhart (7) and by the Judicial Committee in Boota v. Municipal Committee of Lahore (8) and Amir Begum v. Badar-ud-din (9). Nor can any useful analogy be drawn from the principle recognised by the Judicial Committee in Hemanta Kumari v. Midnapur Zemindary Co. (10), namely, that a compromise may be recorded by the Court, even though the compromise includes matters not in controversy in the suit and the decree is limited to the subject of the litigation. In my opinion what has happened in the case before us has so radically affected the proceedings and vitiated its legality that the Court will not exercise the discretion vested in it either to modify the award under cl. 12 or remit the award under cl. 14 of the second schedule of the Code; Hari Singh Nehal Chand v. Kankinarah Co. (11). This is not a case where the arbitrators have failed to act with regularity from lack of care or knowledge : the proceedings have been deliberately organised and carried on by the parties in a manner not contemplated by law and they have thus contrived to defeat the object they had at heart, namely, to settle their differences in a tribunal of their choice. In this view, the appeal cannot succeed and must be dismissed with costs.

RANKIN, J.—The order under appeal is dated 24th July 1922 and was made upon notice or motion given on the 5th July 1922 on behalf of the minor Defendant Keshabdeo by his guardian ad litem Mussamat Surji.

The order is one made under para. 15 of the second schedule to the Code setting aside an award made in the suit and dated 27th May 1922. The award is not set aside upon any ground of misconduct of the arbitrators : though certain charges of irregularity were made, no decision upon them has been given. The main ground of decision is that the award is invalid as an award in a suit for dissolution of partnership in that it purports to direct the party to enter into a new partnership with effect from 1st July 1922. Another ground is taken in addition—viz., that the award purports to declare a dissolution of partnership as at 30th June 1922, the suit having been brought on 12th January 1922.

In my opinion the award is invalid for the reason that the arbitration proceedings have been from first to last contrary to and unauthorised by the provisions of sec. 89 and the second schedule of the Code.

To set forth in detail the history of the firm, the relationship of the parties and the terms of the various family arrangements is not necessary. But it is necessary to examine the scope and frame of the suit, to ascertain the parties interested, to consider what matters have been referred to arbitration and what matters have been dealt with.

The suit is brought for dissolution and winding up of a partnership business carried on under the name and style of "Hardatrai Chamria Co."

Hardatrai Chamria—the man who made the business—had three sons and a grandson. His widow Mussamat Annardeyi survived him. He had two nephews—sons of a brother; one is called Rampratap, the other died in 1911 leaving a widow Mussamat Surji. At one time it was proposed that Mussamat Surji should adopt the youngest son of Hardatrai but in the end she adopted or purported to adopt Hardatrai's grandson instead. The position therefore is:—

Gorakhram	Hardatrai = Musst. Annardeyi
Rampratap	Durgaprasad
Amlokchand = Musst. Surji	? Keshabdeo
? Keshabdeo	Radhakissen
	Motilal.

The nephew Rampratap is the Plaintiff. He impleads three sons of Hardatrai, Mussamat Surji, his brother's widow and Keshabdeo, the minor Defendant. Hardatrai's widow Mussamat Annardeyi is not a party to the suit.

The plaint alleges that the business at first belonged to Hardatrai alone: that the Plaintiff was at first made a partner with a share of two annas afterwards increased to five: that the Plaintiff's brother Amlokchand, deceased, had at one time a two annas share: that from Amlokchand's death (1911), Hardatrai and the Plaintiff had been the partners: and that on 1st October 1916 these two entered into a partnership agreement for 20 years. The plaint then recites two agreements dated 16th November 1916 which mean in effect (1) that the Plaintiff's partnership with Hardatrai was to come to an end with the year 1916, (2) that Hardatrai's interest therein together with all his other property should be divided into four equal shares—one for his wife and one for each of his three sons, (3) that a sum of about 4 lacs, certain landed properties, jewellery and life policies were to be treated as his wife's absolute stridhan, and everything else as belonging to his estate whether it stood in her name or not, (4) that after 1916 a new firm should carry on business in the old firm's name: in this Hardatrai would not be a partner: but (a) the Plaintiff, (b) Mussamat Surji, (c) Hardatrai's three sons were to have certain shares according as Motilal should or should not be adopted by Mussamat Surji.

The narrative of the plaint continues to the effect that since 1916 the business had been carried on under this new arrangement: that instead of Motilal, Mussamat Surji had purported to adopt Keshabdeo; and that the Plaintiff challenges this adoption. Finally, the plaint charges that Durgaprasad had been guilty of misconduct in the firm's affairs and that the Plaintiff is entitled by reason thereof to have a decree for dissolution made by the Court with ancillary relief.

Taking the plaint as it stands and without stopping to criticise it as a pleading, I would observe first that at least three successive partnerships are referred to, that all three are treated as contractual partnerships, and that the relief claimed appears to have direct reference to the last—the firm which came into existence under the scanty document of 16th November 1916 which is annexure B to the plaint. It seems quite probable that to take the accounts of this last partnership would involve accounts to determine the net shares in the previous partnerships. This depends, however, upon facts not disclosed. But in no view of the suit is it a suit to ascertain what belonged to Hardatrai as distinct from the property of his widow, or a suit to ascertain his general estate as at 16th November 1916 and to distribute it under the terms of the instrument of that date (annexure C to the plaint): nor is it otherwise a suit to administer the estate of Hardatrai, deceased. Still less is it a suit for partition of joint property of a family of which Hardatrai was head and in which the Plaintiff ex concessis had no interest.

The limits of the suit, however, set no bounds to the disputes among the family, and on 11th May 1922 an agreement for arbitration was entered into by all the parties to the suit and also by Annardeyi who was no party to the suit. That this was intended to embrace matters in difference outside the suit is not denied. It was to decide the issues of the suit and all other matters in dispute—many of which related to the general estate of Hardatrai and the rights and interests of Annardeyi.

What was done was this:—The parties to the suit presented a petition referring to their agreement of the 11th May 1922 in general language as an agreement "to refer all matters in dispute between them." On the 23rd May 1922 the Court thinking it to be for the benefit of the infant pronounced an order of reference purporting to act under para. 3 of the second schedule to the Code. This order was not drawn up until the middle of June, by which time the arbitrators had acted on it and their proceedings were under challenge: accordingly the exact wording of the order was disputed. Meanwhile the arbitration had been held on 24th, 26th and 27th May and the award made on the 27th. It appears that all the parties to the agreement of the 11th May were heard and no party seems to have limited himself or herself to the matters in issue in the suit. On the second day, however, Rampratap sought a finding from the arbitrators that he and his brother Amlokchand had been separate in estate. This was disputed on behalf of Keshabdeo whose guardian Mussamat Surji had adopted him as a son to Amlokchand. Accordingly the attorney who represented the infant took objection to the arbitrators going into this matter or into anything outside the scope of the suit. This objection conflicted sadly with his previous submissions, it came late and it was contrary to the intention of the agreement of 11th May. The arbitrators held that the agreement entitled them to settle all disputes and their award reflects their opinion.

The award has been analysed by the learned Judge and I will mention only certain features. It purports to decide only "basic points of dispute" to enable the parties to adjust accounts and effect divisions of properties and it looks forward to "separate awards" to be made by the arbitrators, if necessary for working out their decisions. It decides that the Plaintiff and Amlokchand, his brother, were not joint but separate. It decides hypothetically as to how the property, if any, left by Gorakhram should be divided (Gorakhram never had any interest in any of the firms according to the plaint). It directs that the estate of Keshabdeo shall be placed under the control and management of certain relations during his minority. It distributes the immoveable property of Hardatrai. It directs that Annardeyi is to get a certain house in Howrah costing over eight lacs. The actual question of partnership is dealt with by declaring a dissolution as at the end of the succeeding month, directing a new partnership in certain shares with an option to any partner to decline and to get back his capital, and appointing certain people to make up the partnership accounts.

This award was filed in the suit under the second schedule and it was also filed in this Court as an award under the Indian Arbitration Act. In the former character it has been set aside by the learned Judge, whose order in effect supersedes the arbitration and involves the continuance of the suit. In my opinion the award is void for all purposes.

The law of this country recognises four types of procedure in respect of arbitrations. The Indian Arbitration Act applies only to matters that are not before a Court of law. Secs. 20 and 21 of the second schedule provide a procedure for enforcing in a Court of law an award which has been made in an arbitration held without the intervention of a Court. Secs. 17 to 19 provide machinery for enforcing an agreement to refer. Secs. 1-16 deal with arbitration in suits.

The basis of an arbitration under the Arbitration Act is a written submission by the parties. The Act contains a statement of the provisions that will primâ facie be implied in such a submission. It contains a Code by which arbitrations are to be controlled or interfered with. It provides machinery by which awards may be set aside, remitted or enforced in execution.

Under the first part of the second schedule the actual reference is the order of the Court. The jurisdiction of the Court exists only over parties to the suit and over them only with reference to matters involved in the suit. When an Order of Reference is made the Court exercises a certain strictly limited measure of control and has certain other duties in reference thereto. When an award is made the award has no force whatever of itself. The Court may in certain circumstances modify or correct it. It may supplement the award by an order as to costs of the arbitration. If the award deals with any matter not referred, the Court is required to modify or correct it if the matter is severable. If the matter is not severable the Court may remit the award. In any case if the award stands it is effective not as an award but as leading up to a decree passed by the Court.

In my judgment, it is quite impossible that one and the same arbitration should be held as to matters within the jurisdiction of the Court and matters without the jurisdiction of the Court: between the parties to the suit and between them and other persons: under the Code provided by the Indian Arbitration Act and under the Code provided by the second schedule: under the superintendence and control of the Judge who has seizin of the suit and of the Judge disposing of business under the Indian Arbitration Act: partly upon an order of reference and partly under an agreement. When under para. 12 of the second schedule the Court proceeds to correct an award in a case where a severable matter not referred has been dealt with it does so by cancelling that part of the award and the part so cancelled is set aside for all purposes. Neither para. 12 nor para. 14 is directed to such a confusion of jurisdiction as the present case discloses.

Primâ facie the introduction of extraneous matters and parties should be viewed as legal misconduct on the part of arbitrators acting under an Order of Reference made in a suit. If, however, there is anything in the Order of Reference which authorises this it is an order not warranted by the Code. The Court before which a suit is brought is required to decide the suit (if it be not withdrawn): primâ facie it is itself required to decide the suit and has no jurisdiction to refuse: but on certain rigid terms the decree of the Court may be founded upon the decisions of an arbitrator: on those terms the Court may part with its jurisdiction to decide, retaining always a jurisdiction to control—not an abstract right of supervision but a particular jurisdiction limited and defined by the rules of the second schedule, a particular period of limitation being applicable and particular provisions as to appeal. In principle the arbitration is a proceeding in the suit—a mere method of investigation leading up to the decree or else ending in nothing.

On behalf of the Appellant the case of Darlington Wagon Co. v. Harding (2) was cited to us. So far as sec. 57 of the Judicature Act, 1873 or sec. 14 of the Arbitration Act of 1889 is concerned the decision shows that a reference of "all matters in difference" is a much larger order than any which a judge has authority to make and that if it purported to be made under these statutes it could be an excess of jurisdiction. In that case the order was held valid as having been made under the general authority of a Judge to act on the consent of the parties and appoint an arbitrator. In the present case the order referred only the matters in difference in the suit. One of the parties was an infant, whose guardian through his adoptive mother had been appointed only upon an investigation of her fitness to represent his interests in the suit. The order was undoubtedly intended as one under the second schedule. Moreover I am by no means prepared to hold that any Court acting under the Civil Procedure Code has in India a general authority to act on the consent of parties and thus to make an Order of Reference in a form which might apply to any dispute whatever independently of any relation to the jurisdiction of the Court.

I fear I have had rather small success in appreciating the grievance of the Appellant. It seems to be that the award should have been remitted under para. 14 of the second schedule in order that out of the same arbitration two awards might be produced—one in the suit and one under the Indian Arbitration Act. The law in the present case goes much deeper than anything contemplated by para. 14, but in any case to remit is a matter of discretion and to do so in this case would as an exercise of discretion be very remarkable indeed. The proceedings have been out of all relation to the second schedule save doubtless for the word "invalid" in para. 15.

It appears that on 8th June 1922 before the award had been filed, a motion to set it aside was prematurely launched and to this Mussamat Annardeyi was made a party. On the 5th July 1922 she appeared by Counsel and objected that she was not a party to the suit. That motion having been dismissed, the present proceedings were commenced on the same day. It was none the less contended upon this appeal that the learned Judge could not in the presence of all parties to the suit deal with this award made and filed in the suit under his Order of Reference of 23rd May 1922. As an argument to point the invalidity of the arbitration proceedings considered under the second schedule this may deserve attention but I see no reason in it otherwise.

I think the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

A parcel of medicine was entrusted to a Steamer Company for carriage to a station on the Assam Bengal Railway. The parcel was, however, not delivered at the destination by the Railway Company and the consignor after giving timely notice to the Traffic Manager of the Railway Company, sued for recovery of compensation for non-delivery:

Held—That the notice required by sec. 77 of the Railways Act, should be given to the Agent of the Company in India. Service of notice on the Traffic Manager is not sufficient compliance with the Act, unless it is shown that the notice had in fact reached the Agent within 6 months from the date of the delivery of the goods.

THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY CO., LTD. v. RADHICA MOHAN NATH.

This was a Rule granted against a decree made by the Judge of the Court of Small Causes in the matter of a Small Cause Court suit, allowing compensation to the Plaintiff, Opposite Party.

The facts were briefly as follows:—One Radhica Mohan Nath entrusted a parcel of medicines to a Steamer Company for carriage to a station on the Assam Bengal Railway. The Railway Company having failed to deliver the parcel to the consignee, a Small Cause Court suit was brought at Munshigunj against the Assam Bengal Railway Company by the consignor for compensation for non-delivery of the goods after timely notice to the Traffic Manager and decree was accordingly passed. The present Rule was obtained by the Railway Company against the said consignor to show cause why the decree should not be set aside.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy for the Petitioners.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

RICHARDSON, J.—The Opposite Party obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court at Munshigunj against the Petitioner, the Assam Bengal Railway Company, for compensation for non-delivery of a parcel of medicines. The goods were entrusted by the Opposite Party as consignor to a Steamer Company for carriage to a station on the Assam Bengal Railway. It was thus the Steamer Company which delivered the goods to the Railway Company. This Rule, obtained by the Railway Company, calls upon the Opposite Party to show cause why the decree should not be set aside on several grounds of which the following are material:—

"1. For that the Court below has erred in law in holding that notice to the Traffic Manager was notice to the Agent of the Defendant Company within the meaning of secs. 77 and 140 of the Indian Railways Act, IX of 1890, and the said Court ought to have held that the Plaintiff's suit was fit to be dismissed for want of notice.

"2. For that in the absence of any finding that the Traffic Manager had any authority to accept notice on behalf of the Agent or that the Agent in this particular case had any knowledge directly or indirectly of the Plaintiff's claim within the statutory period of six months the Court below is wrong in decreeing the suit.

"3. For that the Court below has misconceived the legal effect of the Traffic Manager's communication made without prejudice to the rights of the Company and this has materially affected the decision of the case on the merits."

As to these pleas the question is whether the learned Subordinate Judge correctly applied the law to the facts found by him. What he says in his judgment is this:—

"Upon the evidence I find that the Plaintiff gave notice of his claim to the Traffic Manager who offered to pay Rs. 18 to him in satisfaction of the claim. Under the rules, the Traffic Manager settles all claims and the Agent refers some claims to him for settlement. Under the circumstances I hold that notice to the Traffic Manager is notice to the Agent as held in Woods v. Meher Ali (1) and the notice was given within 6 months' time as laid down in the law."

It has frequently been held in this Court under sec. 140 of the Act, that in the case of a Railway Company the head-quarters of which are in England, the notice required by sec. 77 should be given to the

THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY CO., LTD. v. RADHICA MOHAN NATH.

Agent of the Company in India. The case of Woods v. Meher Ali (1) on which the learned Judge relies has been distinguished more than once in language appropriate to the present case. See The East Indian Railway Company v. Babu Madho Lal (2), Radha Kishun Lal v. The East Indian Railway Company (3) and The East Indian Railway Company v. Ram Autar (4). Here also there is no evidence that claims of this kind are usually referred by the Agent to the Traffic Manager and there is no finding, as there was in the case of Woods v. Meher Ali (1), that the notice had in fact reached the Agent. In Babu Madho Lal's case (2), it was pointed out that the learned Judges who decided Woods v. Meher Ali (1) did not lay down as matter of law that service on the Traffic Manager was a sufficient compliance with the Act and that the decision was based on the particular facts of the case. Reference may also be made to Kala Chand Shaha v. Secretary of State (5). In my opinion the view of the learned Judge that notice to the Traffic Manager was notice to the Agent is erroneous in law.

The case of Radha Sham Basak v. The Secretary of State (6) cited for the Opposite Party is distinguishable. The question which arose there is not the question which we have to determine.

As to the offer made by the Traffic Manager to the Opposite Party, the learned Judge does not refer to the fact that the offer was made without prejudice. In any case the offer in itself cannot show that the Traffic Manager had authority to receive the notice on behalf of the Agent.

So far the Petitioner is entitled to succeed but for the Opposite Party an attempt was made to support the decision of the learned Judge on the ground that in the present case no notice under sec. 77 was necessary.

It was contended in the first place that the case was not within sec. 77 by reason of the fact that the goods were handed to the Railway Company for carriage not by the Opposite Party but by the Steamer Company. It is not easy, however, to see how the claim made by the Opposite Party against the Railway Company can be maintained at all unless it be on the footing that in handing the goods to the Railway Company, the Steamer Company acted as his agent. It was said that the Steamer Company referred the Opposite Party to the Railway Company. If that be so, the explanation no doubt is that the Steamer Company took up this position, that as regards the Railway Company the Steamer Company was merely an Agent acting on behalf of the Opposite Party as principal.

In the second place, it was argued that in the present case there was no "loss" of any goods within the meaning of sec. 77 of the Act and that for that reason there was no necessity to give any notice of the claim to the Railway Company. It does not appear to have been contended in any previous case in this Court that no notice is required of a claim for compensation in respect of the non-delivery or short delivery of goods entrusted to a Railway Administration for carriage. But that is not of itself a sufficient answer.

Sec. 77 of the Act so far as it is material provides :—"A person shall not be entitled . . . . to compensation for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to be so carried," that is carried by railway, "unless his claim to the . . . compensation has been preferred in writing by him or on his behalf to the Railway Administration within six months from the date of the delivery of the animals or goods for carriage by railway."

I will assume that the word "loss" in this section means loss by the Railway Administration. The argument is that goods not delivered or short-delivered are not "lost" and reliance was placed on the judgment of Jwala Prasad, J., in The East Indian Railway Company v. Kali Charan Ram Prosad (7). The learned Judge referred to the distinction which appears in Arts. 30 and 31 of the schedule of the Limitation Act between claims against a carrier on the one hand for compensation for losing or injuring goods and on the other for compensation for non-delivery of or delay in delivering goods. In the first case limitation runs from the time when the loss or injury occurs and in the second case from the time when the goods ought to be delivered. In my opinion, with respect, these two articles of the Limitation Act throw little, if any, light on the construction of sec. 77 of the Railways Act. There may be reasons for the presence of both articles in the Limitation Act but they may still be overlapping. Where there is an agreement by a carrier to deliver goods at a fixed time or within a reasonable time, a claim for goods lost may be drawn as a claim for their non-delivery.

The reasoning of the learned Judge then proceeds on the assumption, mistaken as I venture to think, that a claim for non-delivery necessarily imports that the Railway Company are consciously and deliberately withholding goods in their possession, which they might deliver if they chose to do so.

As it seems to me, a claim for non-delivery, without more, merely asserts that the goods were not delivered at the agreed time or within a reasonable time. Such a claim asserts nothing as to the cause of the non-delivery.

In Ghelabai Parsi v. East Indian Railway Company (8) there was no question as to the construction of sec. 77 of the Railways Act. The question was as to the right of the Railway Company to exemption from liability under a risk-note in Form B. The decision is based on the judgment of Palles, C. B., in the Irish case of Curran v. M. G. W. Railway Company (9) which also turned on a special contract between the consignor and the Railway Company. Curran's case (9) has recently been the subject of comment in the House of Lords in Smith v. Great Western Railway Company (10). But for the present purpose it is unnecessary to examine these cases. The question discussed was a question of the burden of proof turning on the state of the evidence at the conclusion of the trial upon an issue raised between the parties which it was necessary to decide one way or the other.

In the present case there is no finding that the goods were detained by the Railway Company. It is true also that there is no finding that the goods had, as the Company alleged, been stolen from the godown. As the case seems to have been framed and placed before the Court, it was not necessary to deal with these matters. Damages were awarded merely for the non-delivery of the goods.

I have indicated that in my view, a claim for compensation for non-delivery includes the case of the loss of the goods just as much as the case of the detention of the goods. If that be so, it seems to follow that the statutory notice is a condition precedent to a verdict being taken on that alternative footing, because on that footing the goods may have been lost.

If it be conceded, though I do not decide, that where goods are wrongfully detained by a Railway Company, no notice is necessary under sec. 77, a plea by the Company of want of notice must at least be met on that ground and the Court must be asked to find that the goods were being detained and were not lost when they ought to have been delivered.

Where detention is not pleaded or put in issue a claim simpliciter for compensation for non-delivery must be understood as including or involving a claim for the loss of the goods within the meaning of sec. 77.

The result is that in my opinion the Rule should be made absolute and the suit against the Company dismissed with costs of the Court below and of this Rule (hearing-fee four gold mohurs).

B. B. GHOSE, J.—I agree. The current of decisions in this Court is that notice under sec. 77 of the Railways Act should be served on the Agent. In the case of Woods v. Meher Ali (1), the learned Judges expressly say that they did not desire to differ from those decisions. It was apparently found as a fact in that case that the Agent was aware of the notice, and it was held under the circumstances of the case that the Agent had the required notice. If that is so, the decision was in accordance with The Secretary of State v. Dipchand (11), where it was held that the plea of want of notice would be sufficiently met if it were shewn that the notice served on the Traffic Superintendent reached the Manager within six months of the delivery of the goods. There is no such allegation or finding in this case. The notice served on the Traffic Manager was not therefore sufficient in law.

I do not think that there is much substance in the argument advanced by the learned Vakil for the Opposite Party in support of the decision of the lower Court that no notice under sec. 77 of the Railways Act was necessary in the present case as the goods were not delivered by the Plaintiff to the Railway Company for being carried by the Railway. If this contention is accepted I think it would cut the ground on which the claim against the Railway Company rests, and the Railway Company would not at all be liable for the value of the goods. The learned Vakil urged that the Steamer Company was really liable to the Plaintiff and the Railway Company is only liable because they took upon themselves the liability of the Steamer Company to pay damages for the breach of their contract. The Plaintiff, however, did not bring his suit on that basis and if he had done so there might have been various grounds for defence on behalf of the Railway Company. The liability of the Railway Company must therefore depend on the fact that there was delivery of the goods to the Railway Company, either by the Steamer Company acting as agents of the Plaintiff, or by the Plaintiff to the Steamer Company who received delivery of the goods as Agents of the Railway Company. The Plaintiff therefore cannot get rid of the obligation to give notice of his claim on this ground.

THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY CO., LTD.

It is next urged by the learned Vakil for the Opposite Party th[illegible]t no notice under sec. 77 was necessary as the Plaintiff sued for non-delivery of the goods and not for loss. For this distinction reliance is placed on the case of East Indian Railway Company v. Kali Charan (7). I find some difficulty in understanding the facts of the case as reported. It is stated at page 147 of the report : "The Court below has found th[illegible]t the goods in question were lost not on account of a running train robbery, nor on account of theft but on account of the wilful negl[illegible]ct on the part of Defendant's servants." Thus there was finding that the goods were lost, and in such a case it cannot be questioned that notice is necessary. But there is another passage at p. 148 which runs thus :—"The lower Court has disbelieved the plea set up by the Defendant of the loss of the goods in the manner alleged by the Company and has expressly held that it was a case of non-delivery o[illegible] goo[illegible] the I[illegible]intiff." The learned Judge, how[illegible] held that although no notice was n[illegible]ces[illegible] a[illegible] the Plaintiff had actually given notice which according to him was good notice under sec. 77 of the Act. He cited a number of cases in support of his opinion that the notice served was sufficient. It may, however, be pointed out, in passing, that the cases of the Calcutta High Court cited do not seem to support his proposition. The observations, therefore, in the judgment that notice under sec. 77 was not necessary in the case of non-delivery of goods, are mere obiter. In conclusion the learned Judge declined to exercise his discretionary power of revision in favour of the Company as in his opinion justice had been done Reference has been made to Arts. 30 and 31 of the Limitation Act in support of the contention that there is a distinction [illegible] present case there was a definite bet[illegible]s to the rate of interest. tinction [illegible]decree in the earlier suit of fixing the [illegible] recognition of the of limitation for su[illegible]ortgage as reason- cumstances. Art. 30 ap[illegible]tion in this for compensation against [illegible] the losing or injuring goods, and difficu[illegible] actually experienced in applying the appropriate article to suits for damages for non-delivery before the amendment of the Limitation Act, I shall refer to later on. It can therefore be hardly argued by reference to those articles that the word "loss" in sec. 77 of the Railways Act excludes "non-delivery" of the goods. The words "non-delivery of" in Art. 31 of the Limitation Act was first introduced by way of amendment in the Limitation Act of 1877, by sec. 3 of Act X of 1899. By sec. 2 of the same Act addition of a new sec. 10 to the Carriers Act of 1865 was made. Sec. 9 of the Carriers Act provides that : "In any suit brought against a common carrier for the loss, damage or non-delivery of goods it shall not be necessary for the Plaintiff to prove.' . . . Under the new sec. 10 notice was required to be given as is provided in sec. 77 of the Railways Act. The word "non-delivery" does not appear in sec. 10, but it seems to me that it was not intended to exclude the necessity of giving notice in the case of non-delivery, although a different article was found necessary for the purpose of limitation of suits. The case might have been different if the suit was for damages for wrongful detention of the Plaintiff's goods. But in such a case as that, the Plaintiff must prove that the goods are with the Railway Company which have been wrongfully detained by them, otherwise his suit must fail. The word "loss" used in sec. 77 is in my opinion wide enough to include all cases where the goods are not forthcoming and therefore includes a case of non-delivery. It may also be observed that under sec. 72 of the Railways Act, subject to the other provisions of the Act, the liability of the Railway Company is that of a bailee under secs. 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act. Sec. 161 of the Contract Act runs as follows: "If by the fault of the bailee the goods are not returned, delivered or tendered at the proper time he is responsible to the bailor for any loss or destruction or any deterioration of the goods from that time." It seems to me that if any person asks for damages for any loss on account of goods not being delivered against a Railway Company, he is under the provisions of sec. 72 bound to give notice under sec. 77.

(7) [1922] Pat. 145.

In order to see whether the contention of the Opposite Party can find any support in the case of Curran v. Midland G. W. Ry. Co. (9) and the case of Ghelabai v. E. I. Ry. Co. (8) which followed the Irish case, we have examined those cases as also the case of Smith v. G. W. Ry. Co. (10) in which Curran's case (9) was distinguished and commented on. Curran's case (9) turned upon the question of burden of proof with reference to the special contract entered into between the parties and cannot therefore be of any assistance in deciding the question whether the word "loss" in sec. 77 of the Railways Act excludes the case of "non-delivery."

I am therefore of opinion that it was incumbent on the Plaintiff, who sues the Railway Company for damages for non-delivery of goods to give notice as provided in sec. 77 of the Railways Act. I desire, however, to make it clear that I do not intend to express any opinion as to the meaning of the word "loss" where it is contained in a risk-note or any other document, which should be construed with reference to the context. I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

No. 2288 OF 1920.

SITA SUNDARI BARMANI and anr., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
BARADA PROSAD ROY CHOWDHURY and ors., Respondents.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 90—Lease executed by administratrix, without permission of the Court, effect of—Void or voidable—Equities, when lease sought to be set aside—Refunding of benefits received—Defendant, setting up equitable defence, bound to do equity

Sec. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act makes it obligatory upon the administratrix to obtain the sanction of the Court if a lease for more than five years is granted, but non-compliance with this provision does not invalidate the transaction, which becomes merely voidable and not void. If the party prejudicially affected thereby seeks relief, the Court will assist him only on equitable terms of reimbursement. No person can be allowed to avoid a transaction in such a manner as to enable him to recover property which would otherwise be lost to him and at the same time keep the money or other advantages which he has obtained thereunder.

A party seeking to avail himself of an equitable defence is as much bound to do equity as a Plaintiff.

Where in a previous suit all the disputes between the parties were settled by a consent decree and by the execution of

THE EASTERN MORTGAGE AND AGENCY CO., LTD. v. REBATI KUMAR ROY (1) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 27th of August 1920 against a decree of Babu B. B. Mukerji, Additional Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 15th of June 1920, affirming the decree of Babu Nagendra Nath Bhattacharjee, Munsif, 2nd Court at Khulna, dated the 6th of November 1918.

The facts material to this report sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal and Babu Jnan Chandra Roy for the Appellants.

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur and Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the Defendants in a suit for arrears of rent. The claim is based on a kabuliyat which, the Defendants contend, was obtained by undue influence. This defence has been negatived. As regards one of the two Defendants, the additional defence has been urged that the kabuliyat does not bind him, as it was executed by his mother, when she was the administratrix of the estate of his father, without the permission of the District Judge under sec. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act. In our opinion that provision is of no assistance to the Appellants. Sec. 90, no doubt, makes it obligatory upon the administratrix to obtain the sanction of the Court if a lease for more than five years is granted, but non-compliance with this provision does not invalidate the transaction, which becomes merely voidable and not void. If the party prejudicially affected thereby seeks relief, the Court will assist him only on equitable terms of reimbursement. The principle applicable to cases of this character was explained in the case of The Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., Ltd. v. Rebati Kumar Roy (1), which shows that an alienation by an executor or administrator without leave of the Court where such leave is necessary under sec. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act, is not void but voidable. This attracts the operation of the elementary rule that no person can be allowed to avoid a transaction in such a manner as to enable him to recover property which would otherwise be lost to him and at the same time keep the money or other advantages which he has obtained thereunder. The maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity" is applicable to a Defendant as well as to a Plaintiff and a party who seeks to avail himself of an equitable defence must stand the test as well as one who appears as Plaintiff in such a case as the present. Here the Courts below have found that the transaction was beneficial to the estate. At that time, as a suit had already been instituted for the cancellation of a prior kabuliyat and the main questions in dispute between the parties related to the extent of the lands comprised in the tenancy, the status of the tenant, the rate of rent payable and the fixity of the rent. These disputes were settled by a consent decree in the suit and by the execution of the kabuliyat. The Defendant has never repudiated the kabuliyat. He has not, even in the course of this suit, offered to restore the land to the landlord. He cannot now be permitted to turn round and contend that the kabuliyat is not operative as against him. It is plain that the justice of the case is against the Appellant, and sec. 90 cannot be successfully invoked by him even on the assumption that sec. 90 governs a case where a new kabuliyat is granted, as here, in respect of an existing tenancy.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

RAM BUJHAWAN PROSAD SINGH and anr., Appellants,
v.
NATHU RAM and ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Mitakshara—Mortgage by manager—Plea in defence in mortgagee's suit denying legal necessity—Legal necessity for loan proved—Interest in excess of commercial rate—Onus on Plaintiff to prove necessity for high rate of interest—Plea that interest is penal, nature of.

In a suit to enforce a mortgage of coparcenary property by the manager of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family, it is open to the Defendant who has denied the necessity of the loan to say that the rate of interest was excessive and to that extent outside the authority of the manager. The Defendant in such a case does not lose his right to raise the additional plea that apart from the conditions which attach when a karta mortgages joint family property, the stipulation for payment of interest and compound interest was in itself penal and unconscionable.

The onus is on the Plaintiff to establish that there was necessity to pay a rate of interest in excess of the ordinary commercial terms.

NAZIR BEGAM v. RAO RAGHUNATH SINGH (1) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court, Patna, dated the 8th August 1919, which modified a decree of the 1st Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 30th August 1916.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiffs-Respondents to enforce a mortgage bond executed by one Harihar Charan Mahto who is now dead and was represented in the suit by Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The other Defendants were joined as being prior mortgagees of the properties in suit.

The Plaintiffs' case was that Harihar Charan was the karta of a Hindu joint family and as such karta, he borrowed from the Plaintiffs, on the 16th July 1903, for the necessary expenses of the joint family a sum of Rs. 1,000 on the security of certain specific properties. The loan was to bear interest at 3 per cent. per mensem with quarterly rests and at the time of suit over Rs. 50,000 was alleged to be due. The claim, however, was confined to a sum of Rs. 32,000.

(1) L. R. 46 I. A. 145: s. c. I. L. R. 41 All. 571; 23 C. W. N. 700 (1919).

RAM BUJHAWAN PROSAD SINGH v. NATHU RAM.

The defence contended that the loan was not justified by the necessities of the joint family, that the property was "not at all liable for the payment of the amount claimed," and that the rate of interest was "invalid and by way of penalty."

The Subordinate Judge found in favour of the Plaintiffs but reduced the rate of interest to 1 per cent. per mensem on the ground that the stipulated rate was penal.

The High Court on appeal (Das and Coutts, JJ.) agreed with the trial Court that there was legal necessity for the loan, but they were of opinion that the pleadings did not raise the question of necessity with reference to the rate of interest, and further that the principal Defendant had admitted his liability in respect of both principal and interest and compound interest in a compromise entered into by him in 1911 and such admission was presumptive proof of a justifying family necessity to raise the loan on such an onerous terms.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellants.—The onus is on the person relying on the mortgage to show that there was a necessity to borrow at the high rate of interest stipulated and he has failed to discharge this onus. The legality of the rate of interest may be challenged in a pleading which denies necessity generally.

Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (1).

The same principle was applied in Manna Lal v. *Karu Singh where the karta was a Defendant.

(1) L. R. 46 I. A. 145: s. c. I. L. R. 41 All. 571; 23 C. W. N. 700 (1919).

* Judgment delivered by P. C. 29th July 1919. Apparently unreported.

In the present case there was a definite issue raised as to the rate of interest.

The consent decree in the earlier suit did not amount to a recognition of the rate of interest in this mortgage as reasonable, it merely left the position in this mortgage as it was before.

[Per CURIAM.—Was it not part of the compromise that this mortgage was not to be impeached?]

It was no part of the consideration for the compromise. The compromise did not endorse the terms of this mortgage, it was merely entered into without prejudice to the terms of the mortgage.

Further the karta could not bind the joint family by assenting to the rate of interest.

Mr. T. K. Roy for the Respondents.—The pleadings only raise the question whether or not there was legal necessity for the loan, they do not specifically raise the question whether or not the rate of interest is excessive, and that defence cannot therefore be taken.

Aindhu Gope v. Khakhar Sahu (4).

The issues do not specifically raise the point. In any event the compromise was entered into by the karta who at the time was sole owner and for valuable consideration he agreed that the terms of this mortgage should stand.

Therefore it is not open to the present Defendant to contest those terms.

Mr. Dunne, K. C. replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PARMOOR.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna which varied a decree of the Judge of the Subordinate Court. Hari Charan Mahto, the father of the first of the Defendants (Appellants), was head and karta of a Hindu joint family, governed by Mitakshara law. He borrowed a sum of Rs. 1,000, secured with interest at 36 per cent. per annum with quarterly rests, by hypothecation of certain immoveable properties of the joint family, and executed a deed of mortgage on the 16th July 1903, the rights in which are now vested in the Plaintiffs (Respondents). Hari Charan Mahto died on the 18th January 1911, without redeeming the deed of mortgage. At the time of the institution of the present suit to enforce the mortgage bond, it was claimed that there was a sum due on the mortgage for principal and interest of more than 50,000, after making an allowance for payments which had been made during the life-time of the mortgagor. The actual claim in the suit was for Rs. 32,000, the Plaintiff stating that they had reduced the amount of their claim on the ground that the mortgaged property was not worth the whole sum due for principal and interest.

(4) 3 P. L. T. 367 (1912).

In their plaint the Plaintiffs (Respondents) pleaded that Hari Charan Mahto had borrowed the sum of Rs. 1,000, at the above rate of interest, in order to defray some necessary household expenses of the joint family, and that as security for the bond money, principal, with interest and compound interest, he had mortgaged, hypothecated and made liable his milkiat right in certain scheduled properties, which it is not necessary especially to designate. In answer to this claim the first of the Defendants (Appellants) pleaded, among other things :—

"That the necessities mentioned in the bond in suit are wrong and baseless. This Defendant's father never took a shell from the Plaintiffs for the requirements and the benefit of the family, nor was there any necessity for the same.

"That the mortgaged property is the ancestral property of the joint family, and is not at all liable for the payment of the amount claimed. Nor can the property be sold for the payment of the same.

"That the rate of interest and compound interest and the period for payment of compound interest are altogether invalid and are by way of penalty. Such an invalid contract and such severe terms, which are by way of unconscionable bargain, cannot be given effect to or put into operation. The account of compound interest and the manner it has been calculated are also wrong. The Plaintiffs are not, in any case, entitled to compound interest on the interest."

It has been necessary to set out these pleas at length, since the judgment of the High Court has largely turned on a point of pleading. In the written statements, filed on behalf of the other Defendants (Appellants) the same defences are raised, and in the issues filed before trial, in accordance with Indian practice, 3 and 5 are relevant to the questions argued on the appeal before their Lordships. The third issue raises the question whether the Defendants (Appellants) are bound to pay the debt. Were they benefited by the loan? Can the Defendant raise his objection? The fifth issue raises the question whether the stipulation in the bond for payment of compound interest is penal and unconscionable.

The Judge of the Subordinate Court found that the bond in suit was genuine and for consideration, and that the amount of Rs. 1,000 had been borrowed for family necessity to enable Hari Charan Mahto to defend himself against a criminal charge of rioting. On a cross appeal filed on behalf of the Defendants (Appellants) to the High Court, it was argued that a karta was not entitled to defend himself against a criminal charge, at the cost of a joint family, and that there was no proof that the joint family property had been hypothecated for any legal necessity of the joint family. The High Court, however, confirmed in this respect the judgment of the Subordinate Court, and the counsel for the Defendants (Appellants) did not ask their Lordships to review the concurrent findings of the two Courts, or to reverse this portion of the decree of the Subordinate Court.

The Judge of the Subordinate Court further found that the stipulation in the bond for payment of interest at 3 per cent. per month, and to pay compound interest with three monthly rests, was penal, and he allowed simple interest at 1 per cent. per month. This finding appears to have been based, not on the conditions which attach when a security is given which purports to hypothecate joint family property, but on the provisions of sec. 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. It was set aside by the High Court, which held that sec. 16 of the Contract Act did not relieve the debtor by reducing the rate of interest, except when the Court had been satisfied that the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower, and that the bargain was unconscionable within the meaning of the section. It is not necessary on the present appeal that their Lordships should express any opinion on the respective judgments of the Subordinate Court and of the High Court on this issue. The case of the Defendants (Appellants) was not argued before their Lordships on the terms of sec. 16 of the Contract Act, but on the nature of the obligations created where money has been borrowed by a karta on the security of the joint family property. If, however, it is permissible to accept the finding of the Judge of the Subordinate Court that simple interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem is a fair commercial rate in the absence of special circumstances justifying a higher rate, and to calculate the interest on the loan of Rs. 1,000 at this rate, then, after allowing for payments made, a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs (Respondents) would, as ascertained on this basis, amount to the sum of Rs. 236-5-6, the decretal amount inserted in the decree of the Subordinate Court.

It will be convenient, in the first instance, to consider the nature of the right which a mortgagee of an ancestral joint family property is entitled to enforce against such property where he has proved that there was legal necessity for borrowing the principal sum, but it is not proved that there was necessity to borrow at the rate of interest contained in the mortgage deed. The question whether the Defendants (Appellants) are entitled to raise this question in the present instance will be considered at a later stage. This Board in the recent case of Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (1) determined the principles applicable in a case of this character, and it is not permissible for any Court to restrict or curtail the principles affirmed in that case. After referring to the earlier cases of Rajah Hurronath Roy Bahadoor v. Rundhir Singh (2) and Nand Ram v. Bhupal Singh (3) the judgment proceeds :—

"It is incumbent on those who support a mortgage made by the manager of a joint Hindu family to show not only that there was necessity to borrow, but that it was not unreasonable to borrow at some such high rate and upon some such terms, and if it is not shown that there was necessity to borrow at the rate and upon the terms contained in the mortgage that rate and those terms cannot stand.

"This principle being established, the High Court was justified in finding that a mortgage upon such terms as those contained in the document sued upon, the lands charged being of such value as to make the security ample, was an unnecessary extravagance. No evidence, it is true, was given on either side, but the thing spoke for itself. It remains therefore, that there was necessity and, in virtue of that necessity, authority to borrow upon reasonable commercial terms, and that the mortgage stands as good security to that extent, but that all terms of the mortgage in excess of this necessity are outside the scope of the authority."

In this case the Defendants pleaded that the condition relating to interest was very hard, unconscionable and inequitable, but it is stated in the judgment that this allegation did not seem to have been intended as a substantive plea in itself, but rather as introducing a plea of undue influence which failed, and then the judgment proceeds :—

"However this may be, their Lordships do not think it safe to rest their decision upon a supposed discretion in the Court, or on inference by the Judges as to the sum which would be sufficient to compensate the mortgagee. In their view, as already stated, the question is one of the authority of a manager of a joint Hindu family, and it is because their Lordships agree with the High Court that this authority was exceeded to the extent already stated that they concur in the conclusion at which that Court arrived."

This decision was applied by the Board in the later case of Manna Lal v. *Karu Singh in which judgment was delivered on the 29th July 1919.

Applying this principle to the present case, the consideration arises whether the authority of Hari Charan Mahto, being an authority to borrow on reasonable commercial terms, was exceeded in the promise to pay interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per month with three monthly rests. Assuming that this question is raised in the pleadings, a matter considered later, the onus of establishing that there was a necessity to pay a rate of interest in excess of the ordinary commercial terms is on the Plaintiff, and no proof of this necessity appears to have been given at the trial. The first Defendant (Appellant) does state in his evidence that there was no necessity to borrow money at such interest. There is some evidence that the property mortgaged provided ample security for a loan of Rs. 1,000, but, in their Lordships' opinion, if there was absence of evidence on either side, the case speaks for itself, and it has not been proved that it was within the scope of the authority of the karta to borrow on the terms fixed in the mortgage deed. Their Lordships have the assistance of the Judge of the Subordinate Court in determining the reduction which should be made in the rate of interest, and are of opinion that the rate of interest adopted by him may be safely followed. Indeed it was not argued before their Lordships that this rate should not be applied if it was held that the rate fixed in the mortgage deed cannot be allowed to stand.

The High Court of Patna decided in favour of the Plaintiffs (Respondents) that they were entitled to recover the amount of interest fixed in the mortgage bond, on the security of the joint family property, on two grounds :—

(1) That the question of excessive interest had not been sufficiently raised in the defence of the Defendants (Appellants).

(2) That, even assuming this question was sufficiently raised in the defence, the

RAM BUJHAWAN PROSAD SINGH v. NATHU RAM.

Plaintiffs (Respondents) were entitled to succeed owing to an admission made in the terms of a compromise of the 10th February 1911, referred to in the decree of the 12th February 1911.

The defence that there was no legal necessity for the loan on the security of the joint family property was raised and determined in favour of the Plaintiffs (Respondents), but the High Court held that this defence did not sufficiently raise the further question, that the rate of interest was excessive and to this extent was outside the authority of the karta. The High Court based their decision partly on the terms in which the plea of the Defendants (Appellants), that there was no legal necessity for the loan at all, was raised and stated in the written statement of the Defendants (Appellants), and partly on the ground that the written statement contains a special plea as to interest, contained in para. 10 of the defence and in para. 5 of the written statement. It is not possible to say, after the decision of the Board in the case of Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (1) already referred to, that a plea of no legal necessity for a loan, and that the property is not at all liable for the payment of the amount claimed, does not open the door for a Defendant to say that the rate of interest is excessive, and place on the Plaintiff the onus of proving that the rate of interest is not excessive, having regard to all the circumstances which prevailed when the loan was made. The Defendant in such a case does not lose his right to raise this defence by adding the additional plea that, apart from the conditions which attach when a karta mortgages the joint property, the stipulation in the bond for payment of interest and compound interest, is in itself penal and unconscionable. In view, however, of the recent decision of this Board the matter is concluded and no longer open to question.

It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider the second question on which the judgment of the High Court was founded, namely, whether the Plaintiffs (Respondents) were entitled to succeed, owing to the admissions made in the terms of the compromise of the 10th February 1911. It is necessary to state shortly the relevant factors. On the 19th December 1903, Hari Charan Mahto executed a further mortgage bond in favour of the Plaintiffs (Respondents), who instituted a suit against him and his son, Defendant No. 1, to enforce this mortgage bond. Hari Charan Mahto died after the institution of this suit, and his son, Defendant No. 1 in the present suit, settled the matter. The arrangement was embodied in a consent decree of the 12th February 1911, and was in part carried out by the execution of a sale deed of the 10th February 1911, in which sale deed there is a passage: "Be it known that the bond, dated 16th July 1903, stands good as before, after payment of Rs. 1,000 as principal, besides interest and compound interest." The consent decree provides as follows: "Besides the amount claimed, Rs. 1,000, as principal and interest and compound interest due under the mortgage bond, dated the 16th July 1903, executed by Hari Charan Mahto, is due from me under the bond. Only Rs. 1,487 out of interest and compound interest entered on the back of the bond has been realised. The bond is allowed to stand good as before—i.e., the principal interest and compound interest will remain due from me." The High Court of Patna held that this was a clear admission of liability on the part of Defendant No. 1 in respect of both principal and interest and compound interest, and that though it was not in any sense a ratification of what was done by Hari Charan Mahto, it was presumptive proof of a justifying family necessity, and that hence, if it is necessary to come to a conclusion on the question whether there was any necessity to raise the loan on such onerous terms, it would be sufficient to say that the subsequent consent of Defendant No. 1 to the transaction was evidence of such necessity which had not been rebutted, and that so far as Defendant No. 2 is concerned the question did not arise as he was not in existence either at the date of the original transaction or at the date when the compromise was made.

On the construction of the words "the bond is allowed to stand good as before, i.e., the principal interest and compound interest will remain due from me," their Lordships are of opinion that they constitute no more than a reservation of the rights, whatever they may be, under the mortgage bond of the 16th July 1903, and that they do not constitute an admission of a legal necessity either to the principal amount or of the rate of interest or compound interest. The mortgage bond which it was sought to enforce in the suit was executed subsequently to the mortgage bond on which the present action is founded, and it would be a reasonable precaution to insert words of reservation in order to ensure that there was no interference with the security of the prior bond. In the present suit the question of legal necessity for the principal of the loan was considered in both Courts, quite apart from the terms of the compromise, although if the terms of the compromise are proof as to the necessity of the rate of interest they would be proof to the same extent of the necessity of the principal of the loan. This is sufficient to determine the matter in favour of the Defendants (Appellants). Assuming, however, that the construction adopted by the High Court is correct, and accepting the view expressed in the judgment of the High Court that there was not in any sense a ratification of what was done by the father of Defendant No. 1, their Lordships are unable to accept the conclusion that the compromise terms would constitute such proof of a justifying family necessity as would be sufficient to discharge the Plaintiffs (Respondents) from the onus of proving that there were special circumstances which entitled Hari Charan Mahto to pledge the family joint property on excessive terms of interest or compound interest. The passage is, in any case, nothing more than an admission, for what it is worth, made by Defendant No. 1, and if it were necessary to draw a conclusion of fact their Lordships could not agree in the conclusion of the High Court.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal succeeds on the question of interest or compound interest, that the decree of the High Court be set aside and the case be remitted with a direction that the rate of interest be reduced to simple interest at 1 per cent. per mensem and that the Plaintiffs (Respondents) pay the costs of this appeal and in the High Court.

Judgment,
23, January.

KUMAR NARESH NARAYAN ROY, Appellant,
v.
THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL and anr., Respondents.

Navigable river, shifting of—Rights of Government and riparian proprietors in churs and reformations in situ—Rennell's map, value of—Suit for recovery by co-sharer, decreed in absence of Plaintiff—Decree, if admissible in evidence and conclusive in Plaintiff's suit against same Defendant, after partition of property between co-sharer Plaintiff and Defendants in pursuance of decree

The bed of a public navigable river is the property of the Government though the banks may be the subject of private ownership. If there be slow accretion to the land on either side, due, for instance, to the gradual accumulation of silt, this forms part of the estate of the riparian owner to whose bank the accretion has been made. If private property be submerged and subsequently again left bare by the water, it belongs to the original owner.

HARADAS ACHARJYA CHOWDHURI v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (1) followed.

The value of Rennell's map adverted to.

In a previous suit by H, a co-sharer of the Plaintiff against the Defendant to which the Plaintiff was no party, H had recovered a decree for possession of H's share. Subsequently a partition of the property was made by deed between H, Defendant and Plaintiff to work out the decree but without expressly referring to it.

Held—That the decree was not conclusive in Plaintiff's suit to recover his share from the Defendant and might, had it stood alone, be rejected as evidence, but followed by the partition became material.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 14th March 1919, of the High Court of Bengal, which reversed a decree, dated the 19th June 1917, of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia.

The suit was brought by the Appellant for a declaration that certain chur lands in Parganah Laskarpur were a reformation in situ of the Appellant's zemindari and for a refund of revenue and cesses which had been paid twice over in respect of that land.

The Subordinate Judge before whom the case came for trial appointed a Commissioner to hold a local enquiry and to report "whether the disputed lands are reformations in situ of Taraf Jotashai included in Parganah Laskarpur," and in accordance with the Commissioner's finding he passed a decree in favour of the Appellant. In the course of his judgment he stated as follows :—

"The report (of the Commissioner) is in Plaintiff's favour, and by the elaborately considered judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Rani Hemanta Kumari it has been found that the lands in suit are the lands of Block Jotashai. The Plaintiff's title and that of Rani Hemanta Kumari stand on the same footing, and it does not, therefore, lie in the mouth of Government against whom that finding was made, to deny his (Plaintiff's) title. He has not only proved that the lands in suit is a reformation of Parganah Laskarpur, but that it is the self same land as Block Jotashai of Amin Mukanda Narayan's map. The D Register (Ex. 26) proves that the Plaintiff is the malik of Parganah Laskarpur to the extent of 4 annas 13 gundahs 1 kara and 1 krant share, and he has stated that he has been paying the same revenue unaltered as fixed at the time of the Permanent Settlement irrespective of the diluvion and this fact has not been denied by the Government. His predecessor successfully litigated up to the Privy Council in suit No. 9 of 1863, and his title was established in respect of these lands. It is held accordingly that the land in suit is a reformation in situ of the Plaintiff's estate as alleged in the plaint."

On appeal the High Court (Beachcroft and Greaves, JJ.) reversed the findings of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and W. Wallach for the Appellant.—The Subordinate Judge referred the matter to a Commissioner to report whether the land was a reformation in situ. That reference was made under sec. 75 and Or. 26, rr. 9 and 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge decided according to the Commissioner's report, and that decision should not have reversed except upon clear and undisputed evidence.

Surut Soondree Debea v. Prosunno Coomar Tagore (3).

The High Court have come to their conclusion on their own hypotheses which are not based on evidence. They were not justified in excluding the decision of the Privy Council in 1906.

That decision was relevant and material evidence in support of the Appellant's contention and in conjunction with the deed of partition of the 13th December 1909 to which the Secretary of State was a party, it acts as an estoppel against the Respondent. The Appellant has produced sufficient evidence to establish his contentions.

Reference was also made to Secretary of State v. Maharaja of Burdwan (4) and Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State (1).

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.—It was for the Appellant to establish his case affirmatively. This he has failed to do.

The statements in the revenue maps which have been accepted by the Commissioner are not admissible under sec. 36 of the Indian Evidence Act. The decision of the Board in 1906 was based upon different evidence and is irrelevant to the present issue. The High Court were right in excluding it and no question of estoppel arises. The Appellant has failed to show the exact locality in Taraf Jotashai in which the lands in dispute were situated at the time of the settlement and has failed to discharge the onus of proof that they are a reformation in situ.

Referred to Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (5).

Mr. Dunne, K. C. in reply.—In the former case it was held that the land in dispute belonged to the Appellant and partition was made by Government on the strength of that decision. The Respondents cannot now go back on that finding.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

brought in the year 1912 by the Plaintiff, who is a zemindar for a declaration of his proprietary right to certain land in the District of Nadia, and for a declaration that he had been twice assessed for revenue in respect of it, and for a return of the overpaid revenue in past years. He succeeded in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, but that judgment was reversed on appeal, and now he has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The case made by the Plaintiff was that the tract of land in question was within the collection or block or taraf of villages known after the name of its principal village as the Taraf Jotashai in the Parganah of Laskarpur; his case being that this parganah consists of seven mouzahs or villages described as Jotashai, Ramkristopur, Nowsera Ramkrishnapur, Kadirpur, Sadasibpur, Biharajpur (also known as Bahirmadi), and Mallikpur. He did not profess in his pleadings to say in which village the tract was situate, but generally averred that it was within this block or taraf, and that the whole had been settled with his ancestor at the Permanent Settlement in the year 1793. He said that the tract some time afterwards had become diluviated and now was re-formed in situ.

The written statement of the Secretary of State traverses the allegations that the lands were re-formed in situ, or that they were in the Block Jotashai, or had been settled with the Plaintiff's ancestor, and raised certain other defences which will be dealt with later.

Upon this contention being raised, a local investigation was ordered to ascertain whether the disputed lands are re-formations in situ of Taraf Jotashai in Parganah Laskarpur of the Rajshahi Collectorate, and the Commissioner was directed to make a map of the disputed land and to show therein the lines of Block Jotashai, as depicted in the maps of Mukanda Narayan Chowdhuri and Purna Chandra Chatterji. He was directed also to ascertain, with the help of Major Rennell's map of the Ganges prepared in 1780, the Revenue Survey map, the Diara Survey map and the Thak Survey map of Jotashai, whether the disputed land formed part and parcel of Parganah Laskarpur at the time of the decennial settlement; to plot those maps in his map; to plot the lines of the khas mahal map of chur Marichar Diar as prepared by Babu Bijoy Krishna Bose, Deputy Collector in 1883-84, to which, according to the defence, the disputed land appertained.

The Commissioner found that the land in question was in Block Jotashai and was a re-formation in situ of land formerly belonging to that block or taraf. He arrived at this finding after a very careful enquiry, making a personal visit to the site and taking much evidence. He also produced a map on which he had plotted the lines of the other maps according to the directions given him. His report having been filed, it was at one time intimated on behalf of the Secretary of State that objections would be raised to it, but no objections were raised and no application was made to have the report referred back to the Commissioner.

The case then came on for hearing upon this report, some oral evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff which did not carry the matter any further and a good deal of documentary evidence, including the proceedings and decrees in former litigation, the relevancy and probative force of which latter have undergone much discussion at their Lordships' bar.

The general nature and character of the Plaintiff's case was as follows:—The River Ganges, called in this part of its course the Padma, has changed its channels frequently and considerably since the date of the decennial settlement in 1783, which was made permanent ten years later, in 1793.

In these circumstances the principles upon which a tribunal should act in a claim of this kind are to be found in a judgment delivered in 1917 in the unreported case of Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1), where it was said by their Lordships :—

" The River Ganges rests so uneasily in its bed that its boundaries can never at any moment be defined with the certainty that their limitation will be long observed. Frequently the river leaves its course, flows over large tracts of land, leaving other areas bare, and then again its waters recede, giving back the lands submerged in whole or in part to use and cultivation. It is obvious that difficulties as to ownership must arise in these circumstances, and of the extent and complication of these difficulties the present case affords an excellent illustration. The general law that is applicable is free from doubt The bed of a public navigable river is the property of the Government though the banks may be the subject of private ownership. If there be slow accretion to the land on either side, due, for instance to the gradual accumulation of silt, this forms part of the estate of the riparian owner to whose bank the accretion has been made. (See Regulation 11 of 1825.) If private property be submerged and subsequently again left bare by the water, it belongs to the original owner. Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2)."

This being so, the Plaintiff's case was developed as follows :—

The Ganges in this part of its course divides two districts known as Rajashahi on the north and Nadia on the south. Laskarpur was a Parganah in Rajashahi; and therefore, to the north of the river: and anything in Laskarpur must be taken to have been north of the river at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The river, flowing in a general direction from west to east, but with many deviations and curves to the north and south, has now altered its course some miles to the northward, leaving a bed which can still be traced, where it probably flowed about 1850. In the course of its shift from south to north it diluviated and again set free large portions of the Parganah of Laskarpur. The tract in dispute, which was in the southern portion of the parganah, was, as the Plaintiff contended, in existence as dry land at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and was included in it. If so, it must have been diluviated shortly after, first re-appeared as an island, and now has become, as indeed land further north of it has also become, a permanent portion of the land on the southern side of the river.

The case for the Secretary of State was that the burden of proof of this averment lay upon the Plaintiff, and that he had not made it out, and that for all that could be now traced this land may well have been part of the bed of the river at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and therefore not part of Laskarpur and never settled for.

The land in dispute, which is roughly of a hatchet shape, and is coloured violet on the Commissioner's map, formed part of an irregular area of considerably larger size coloured yellow, and came to the Plaintiff for some estate or interest, the exact nature of which must be hereafter considered, by virtue of a deed of partition on the 13th December 1909, between the Secretary of State, the widow of a co-sharer, and the Court of Wards acting for the Plaintiff who was then an infant.

(1) 26 C. L. J. 590 P. C. (1917).
(2) 13 M. I. A. 467 (1870).

The oldest map known to be in existence is Major Rennell's survey, prepared in 1780, which the Commissioner or Amin was directed to plot upon the map which he prepared. With regard to this map, in the case already cited, Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1), their Lordships made the following observations :—

"Rennell's map is undoubtedly, both owing to its difference in scale, to the different purpose of its preparation, and the difficulty of assigning fixed points from which the survey was made, a map which it is hard to incorporate into the survey of 1859. And, again, the variability of the river renders reliance upon it difficult As has been already said, their Lordships are not, however, prepared to dispossess the Appellants because of this difficulty. It may be that any assumption that can now be made cannot be exact, but some assumption is necessary."

The Commissioner, as directed, plotted Rennell's map upon the one which he prepared. There was one fixed point which could be relied upon. A factory called Harishankara on the south bank was in existence in Rennell's map, and has remained ever since. Taking this point, and reducing the scale as best he could, the Amin plotted the river with a curve sweeping over two-fifths of the south-eastern part of the land in dispute. leaving the rest dry land to the north. which would be so far according to the Plaintiff's contention, but putting the two-fifths in the bed of the river. In so doing, however, he put the site of two of the seven villages which constituted the Block Jotashai, Sadashibpur and Mallikpur under the bed of the river, and, inasmuch as they must have been at the time of the settlement to the northward of the river, it followed that at some portion of its course over the map, the river must have been more to the southward than it was shown by this plotting, and if the curve retained its outline but was shifted bodily to the southward all except, perhaps, a very small part of the land in dispute would have been dry land on the north bank. It would have been just possible to shift the river bodily to the southward for this purpose, and yet leave the factory standing. If for some reason the course of the river was a little narrower, it could have been done more easily. But there was apparently no physical reason why the curve should have retained the same outline, and if the north turn began a little more to the westward and nearer the factory the land in dispute would have been under the bed of the river.

The next map which the Commissioner had to deal with was what was called the Diara map, prepared about the year 1850, at which time the Mahalwar register of Laskarpur showed the Plaintiff's ancestor and predecessor-in-title as a proprietor of a great number of mouzahs still in existence, with a number of others noted as missing villages. Some of the seven villages to which the Plaintiff referred in his plaint appear in one column, some in the other, and some as to part in both.

The river bed, according to its course at that time, is still traceable, and flowed apparently through the middle of the land in dispute. About this time appeared a chur called Marichar Diar—Diar meaning land emerging from water—which is said on behalf of the Secretary of State to comprehend the land in dispute. At the time when the Commissioner made his survey the river was two miles to the north and the factory a mile to the south of the land in dispute. He reckoned the area of the tract marked yellow as 20,004 bighas. The tract coloured violet is roughly about one-quarter of the tract coloured yellow.

There has been much previous litigation with regard to the tract coloured yellow and the lands adjacent to it. Their Lordships deem it unnecessary to refer to the earlier cases as they were summarised in a judgment delivered by this Board on the 21st March 1906,* in a case to which reference will now be made.

This was a suit brought by Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi in 1895 against the Secretary of State and Maharaja Jagadindra Nath Bahadur, the Rani claiming to be the proprietor of a zemindari right in a 2 annas 15 gundhas share of a permanently settled estate in Laskarpur, and alleging that the lands claimed by her within the area of Block Jotashai had been permanently settled by the Government with her predecessor-in-title. The lands in which she was claiming her right were the larger block marked yellow in the plan annexed to the present suit, of which the part coloured violet is that for which the present Appellant is suing. The Rani succeeded in the Court of first instance; that decision was reversed by the High Court, but restored by the judgment of this Board. The result was to decide that the lands in which she claimed a fractional share being comprised in Block Jotashai lying between the village Jotashai on the north and the southern boundary of the chur are a re-formation in situ of lands which before diluviation were comprised in Parganah Laskarpur.

This was a recovery by a co-sharer as against the Secretary of State of her right in the lands for which the Plaintiff is suing in the present suit. It is not in itself conclusive, because the Plaintiff was not a party to that suit. Objection, indeed, was made in that suit by the Secretary of State that the Rani could not sue without making other co-sharers parties; and the answer made by the Court was that it was unnecessary as the judgment would only decide her right, and would not be binding either in favour of or against other co-sharers. It was rejected by the High Court even as evidence; and this rejection might have been right, if it stood alone. But it was followed by a deed of partition, dated the 13th December 1909, between the Rani, an officer of the Court of Wards acting for the present Plaintiff, then an infant, and a representative of the Secretary of State, whereby the tract marked yellow was divided between the three parties according to their several shares or supposed shares. The Rani took a portion, the Secretary of State two other portions, and the Plaintiff the portion coloured violet. There is no reference in the deed to the Rani's successful suit, but it is clear that the partition was made in consequence of the decree in that suit and with the view to work it out, and in their Lordships' opinion this introduces the decree in the Rani's suit. Moreover, the deed describes the lands as being "in Block Jotashai," which is in itself an important admission.

Mr. Justice Beachcroft, in his judgment in the High Court, after commenting upon the error into which the Subordinate Judge had fallen in treating the judgment in the Rani's case as conclusive proceeded as follows: "The error would not be of much significance if we had in this case the evidence which was given in Rani Hemanta Kumari's case, for it would then be sufficient to adopt the reasoning used in that case. But we have not." And he proceeded to refer to certain additional materials mentioned in the judgment in that case. It is satisfactory to their Lordships to think that were was that additional evidence; for in the present case the evidence, apart from the inference to be drawn from this decision, and from a statement to be hereafter referred to on the map of Ramkristopur, is not very conclusive.

Careful and detailed as is the report of the Commissioner, and careful and detailed as is the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, very little positive evidence to support the case of the Plaintiff can be extracted from the report or the judgment, if the Rani's case and the conclusion arrived at in it be excluded. The comment of the Judges in the High Court that the Commissioner's conclusion appears to depend upon the curve of the river in this part having retained the same outline is a forcible one, as is the argument submitted by counsel for the Respondents at their Lordships' bar to the effect that Plaintiff cannot show in which one of the seven villages, which formed the Taraf of Jotashai, the lands in question were situate at the time of the settlement, accompanied by his analysis of the facts which are known with regard to the boundaries of many of these villages, leaving only a residuum of uncertain area in which this tract could be put if it was dry land at the time of the settlement.

Their Lordships, however, cannot accept his contention that there is a distinction between the taraf and the block. Certainly there was no such distinction in the minds of those who gave judgment in the Rani's case. A perusal of that judgment would show that the words "taraf" and 'block" are used interchangeably.

At the same time, their Lordships feel that it is possible to be over-critical of the Commissioner's report, and that among the many physical features which he saw and upon which he reported, there may have been some which pointed to traces of old channels of the river which would have supported his conclusion in a manner not directly apparent upon the face of his report; and they are much impressed by the fact that he was not cross-examined or given any opportunity to meet criticisms upon it.

There is one passage in the report of the Commissioner to which their Lordships' attention was specially directed. He has dealt with the boundaries of four of the seven villages in the block, and pointed out that, in his view, the remaining three could not be traced, and he proceeds to say that it would be not impossible that the sites of these three missing villages had been encroached upon by the river at the time of the Revenue Survey— that is, about 1850-51, and consequently could not be then surveyed and mapped. His report then proceeds as follows :—

"There is no clear and positive evidence before me to show that the river site at the time of the Revenue Survey was previously the site of those three villages. But the fact that the site belonged to Parganah Laskarpur is amply proved by the statement contained in the Revenue Survey map of Ramkristopur."

For some unexplained reason this map does not form part of the record. It is, therefore, impossible to say with certainty that this statement was of such a kind as to be receivable in the present suit under sec. 36 of the Indian Evidence Act. But no objections having been taken to the report and the Commissioner not having been examined or cross-examined, their Lordships think that they ought to treat it as admissible evidence, and if so, it adds considerable weight to the material upon which the Commissioner formed his conclusion.

Upon the whole, their Lordships think that the Commissioner's report, coupled with the decree in the Rani's case, was sufficient to turn the scale in favour of the Plaintiff. Their Lordships are glad in dealing with a case in which the public interest is involved to be able to reach this conclusion. It would be unfortunate if, with regard to the same land, a decree could be made in favour of one co-sharer and another decree made against another co-sharer upon the same title.

There remain one or two points to be dealt with. In the partition deed which has been much relied upon, and which is indeed the only link by which it is possible to connect the Rani's judgment with the present case, and in which this land is described as being in Block Jotashai, it is stated when the Plaintiff's share comes to be set out in the schedule that it was "settled for periods." This, it is contended, is an admission that there was no permanent settlement, and an admission upon which the Secretary of State can rely as against the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff, it is true, repudiated this partition deed, which was effected on his behalf by the Court of Wards during his minority, but only a few days before he attained his majority, and contended that the partition proceedings were not binding upon him; but the Subordinate Judge held the contrary, and gave him a declaratory decree on the footing of the partition proceedings, and in the High Court his counsel accepted this position. But the words in the schedule "settled for periods" may be accepted as a correct description, but not as an admission that the settlement was de jure. This question leads their Lordships to consider the points raised in India and by the Respondents' case before their Lordships, but not so much insisted upon at the bar, that the Plaintiff was bound by a compromise entered into by his mother who was his predecessor-in-title, and a decree passed in pursuance of that compromise in 1881, or by a settlement which he took with the Government in 1910. The first of these contentions was not accepted by the Subordinate Judge or by the High Court. The Government were not parties to the compromise, or to the decree and as Mr. Justice Greaves in the High Court observed, there is on the record a letter from the Collector of Rajshahi expressly stating that the Government was not a party to that suit.

As regards the second, the Subordinate Judge held that the Plaintiff need not bring a suit for the purpose of having the settlement, which was said to have been forced upon him in 1910, set aside, as his purpose would be equally served by his obtaining a declaration that he was not liable to double assessment for the disputed land.

This objection does not seem to have been deemed by the High Court worthy of further notice. It reappears, however, in the case for the Respondents before the Board, but was not much insisted upon in argument, and being rather a point of procedure than of substance is therefore not one on which the Government would be desirous of relying, and their Lordships do not think it should prevail.

The defence of the Limitation Act was dealt with by the High Court, and their Lordships see no reason to differ from the view there taken.

The ground upon which the High Court differed from the Subordinate Judge was not that the evidence showed that this disputed tract had been under the bed of the river, but that the burden of proof lay upon the Plaintiff, and that he had not proved with sufficient conclusiveness that it was dry land to the north of the river at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and the High Court put aside the judgment of this Board in the Rani's suit, as not being evidence.

The grounds upon which their Lordships differ from the High Court are that the decree in the Rani's suit, followed by the partition deed, must, in their Lordships' view, be regarded as material, and that the High Court have not attached sufficient weight to the conclusions of the Commissioner, derived from examination on the spot, and his reference to the map of Ramkristopur, unchallenged as his conclusions were by examination and cross-examination.

Upon the whole, their Lordships will humbly recommend His Majesty that the decree of the High Court be set aside, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge be restored, and that the Plaintiff do have his costs in the Court below and of this appeal, these costs to be paid by the Secretary of State.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 159 OF 1921.

MOOKERJEE, J. RANKIN, J. 1923, 15, November.	MANMATHA NATH MULLICK, Claimant No. 1, Appellant, v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, Opposite Party, Respondent.

The Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act (XVIII of 1911), sec. 3, appeal, if lies against decision determining the principle upon which prospects and possibilities of future development should be taken into account in determining compensation for compulsory acquirement Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sec. 24 (5), higher value, if allowable by reason of advantage accruing from action taken by the Trust in respect of a neighbouring parcel acquired previously—"Market value of land," meaning of—Other sales, admissibility in evidence, to prove value.

In certain land acquisition proceedings, the claimant contended that in the determination of the value of the land he is entitled to have a higher value put upon his land in consequence of the intention of the Improvement Trust to keep a previously acquired piece of land to the immediate west as an open space:

Held per MOOKERJEE, J.—That an appeal to High Court lay as the judgment of the President of the Tribunal should plainly that the case involves a question of principle; the matter in dispute related to the determination of the exact principle upon which prospects and possibilities of future development should be taken into account in determining the compensation to be paid for property compulsorily acquired.

That in the present case as the Improvement Trust authorities intended to keep the previously acquired plot as an open space in order that it might be annexed to the land now under consideration, and both amalgamated with an existing open square, the benefit which might accrue to the purchaser from the expression of intention of the Improvement Trust authorities, if carried into effect, would immediately result in the destruction of his rights as purchaser. Besides no evidence had been adduced to show that a purchaser could be had who would have paid anything like the price claimed.

The claimant was therefore not entitled to any enhanced value by reason of the intention of the Trust to keep the adjoining land as an open space.

Per RANKIN, J.—The claimant claimed to add a value by reason of a certain declaration of intention on the part of the Trust. But that intention was not unconditional, and was one quite inconsistent with the claimant's premises ever having a chance to be used, occupied or enjoyed with the benefit of an open space to the west. In assessing the value of land acquired for the purpose of a scheme, sales of other similar lands between the date of the promulgation of the scheme and the date of the declaration are admissible in evidence. If there had been evidence that the minds of prospective purchasers were being influenced by the chance that the plot of land to the west would be left as an open space and that the later scheme for acquiring the land now under consideration would not be carried out, it would not have been right to exclude that evidence from consideration. But no evidence of this sort was present.

This was an appeal preferred from the decision of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal.

The facts were briefly as follows :—In respect of certain land acquired in connection with the Central Avenue Scheme of the Calcutta Improvement Trust, an award was made at Rs. 5,500 a cottah. The claimant claimed at Rs. 8,000 per cottah inasmuch as towards the west of the land lay another parcel which was acquired previously and was declared to be intended to be kept as an open space. The claimant preferred an appeal to the Improvement Tribunal from the Collector's award. The Tribunal made an award at Rs. 6,000 a cottah but overruled the above contention of the claimant. The claimant thereupon preferred the present appeal to the High Court under sec. 3 of the Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal against an award made under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, in respect of land acquired in connection with what is known as the Central Avenue Scheme of the Calcutta Improvement Trust. The declaration under sec. 6 was published on the 20th May 1919. The claimant thereupon contended that the land should be valued at Rs. 8,000 a cottah. The Collector made an award at the rate of Rs. 5,500 a cottah. As the land had been acquired for the purposes of the Calcutta Improvement Trust, an appeal was preferred to the Tribunal. The result was that the Tribunal made an award at the rate of Rs. 6,000 a cottah. The claimant has appealed to this Court under sec. 3 of the Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act, 1911, and has valued the relief at Rs. 20,000. It is consequently clear that the claimant does not adhere to his original estimate of Rs. 8,000 a cottah; he now claims in substance a little over Rs. 1,000 a cottah in excess of the rate allowed by the Tribunal. Under sec. 3 the appeal can be maintained only on the grounds specified therein, namely, that—(i) the decision is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law;

(ii) the decision has failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law;

(iii) there has been a substantial error of defect in the procedure which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits.

The judgment of the President of the Tribunal shows plainly that the case does involve a question of principle; for, it is stated that the matter in dispute relates to the determination of the exact principle upon which prospects and possibilities of future development should be taken into account in determining the compensation to be paid for property compulsorily acquired. The circumstances which render the decision of this question necessary may be briefly stated.

Towards the west of the land now acquired under what is known as Scheme XIII lies another parcel which is marked green on the map previously prepared in connection with Scheme VII. The precise date when the declaration in respect of the other plot was published under sec. 6 cannot be ascertained from the record. But as that scheme was sanctioned by the Government on the 30th March 1916, it has been assumed that the declaration was published shortly afterwards. The contention of the claimant is that in the determination of the value of the land now under consideration he is entitled to have the land acquired in 1916 treated as an open space towards the west, with the consequence that the value of his land would thereby be considerably increased. The Tribunal has overruled this contention and has held that cl. (5) of sec. 24 of the Land Acquisition Act militates against the argument put forward on behalf of the claimant. That section provides that in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, the Court shall not take into consideration any increase to the value of the land acquired likely to accrue from the use to which it will be put when acquired. The Tribunal has come to the conclusion that Scheme VII and Scheme XIII, though nominally distinct, are so essentially interrelated that they may be treated in substance as one scheme and that under sec. 24, cl. (5) the claimant is not entitled to have a higher value put upon his land by reason of the advantage which might have accrued owing to the action taken in respect of a neighbouring parcel acquired previously. In support of this view, reference is made in the judgment of the Tribunal to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs v. Charlesworth, Pilling & Co. (1) and Fraser v. City of Fraserville (2). In my opinion, the question which has been discussed in the judgment of the President of the Tribunal does not really require examination in view of the circumstances of this case.

Sec. 24, cl. (5) provides that the Court shall not take into consideration any increase to the value of the land acquired likely to accrue from the use to which it will be put when acquired. The terms of this section cannot be made applicable to the precise events which have happened. The effect of the decisions of the Judicial Committee in the cases mentioned may be concisely summarised. The basis on which compensation for lands taken is to be assessed is the value of the lands to the owner as it existed at the date of the notice to treat and not their value, when taken, to the promoters. Corrie v. MacDermott (3), Cedard Rapiss Manufacturing and Power Co. v. Lacoste (4), In re Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board (5), Fraser v. City of Fraserville (2), Pastoral Finance Association, Ltd. v. The Minister (6) and South Eastern Rail Co. v. London, C. C. (7). All advantages which the land possesses present or future, in the hands of the owner may be taken into consideration, Cedard Rapiss Manufacturing and Power Co. v. Lacoste (4), In re Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board (5) and Fraser v. City of Fraserville (2), and the owner is entitled to have the price assessed in reference to those advantages which will give the land the greatest value. The value of an owner's interest is not properly compensated by assessing the amount of pecuniary benefits obtained by past user in disregard of possible benefits in the future. Trent-Stoughton v. Barbados Water Supply Co. (8) but cf. Eldon (Earl) v. North Eastern Rail Co. (9). The probability of a more profitable future use is one such advantage which may be taken into consideration. Thus land which may probably be used for building purposes must not be valued on the same basis as purely agricultural land. R. v. Brown (10). But although prospective value is a necessary element in the assessment of compensation, such value must be entirely excluded where it would arise from the construction of the particular works authorised by the Act which gives compulsory powers. In re Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board (5), Cedard Rapiss Manufacturing and Power Co. v. Lacoste (4) and Fraser v. City of Fraserville (2). It is a recognised principle to exclude from the assessment of compensation any enhancement or diminution in value consequent on the construction of works authorised by the special Act under which the assessment is made. The phraseology used in the decisions mentioned, specially in Fraser v. City of Fraserville (2) is "enhancement or diminution in value," whereas the language used in cls. 4 and 5 of sec. 24 is "any damage which is likely to be caused to the land acquired in consequence of the use to which it will be put and any increase to the value of the land acquired likely to accrue from the use to which it will be put when acquired." Whether these two points of view are identical in all circumstances may be a matter for argument. This much is plain that in the case before us, what has to be ascertained is, as required by cl. (1), sub-sec. (1) of sec. 23, the market value of the land at the date of the publication relating thereto under sec. 6.

The meaning of the expression "market value of land" was considered in Bombay Improvement Trust v. Jalbhoy (11) and Kailash Chandra Mitra v. Secretary of State for India in Council (12). In the first case, the "market value of land" was stated to mean the price which would be obtainable in the market for a concrete parcel of land with its particular advantages and its particular drawbacks, both advantages and drawbacks being estimated rather with reference to commercial value than with reference to any abstract legal right. In the second case, the market value of land was described as the price that an owner willing, and not obliged, to sell might reasonably expect to obtain from a willing purchaser with whom he was bargaining for the sale and purchase of the land; in other words, the price which a piece of land fetches when it is offered for sale, the seller being not obliged to sell it and the buyer being under no necessity of buying it. This is identical with the view adopted in Wernicks v. Secretary of State for India (13) and Sadhu Churn v. Secretary of State for India (14). Consequently, what has to be ascertained in the present case is the market value of the land on the 28th May 1919 in view of the circumstances as they existed at that date.

Now, it may be conceded that on the materials on the record it is fairly clear that the Improvement Trust authorities intended, when the land to the west of the site now under consideration, was acquired in 1916 that it should be kept as an open space. It is this expression of opinion on the part of the Improvement Trust authorities which is emphasised on behalf of the claimant and his argument in substance is that any intending purchaser at the time when the declaration was published on the 28th May 1919 would have paid a higher price for his land in view of the fact that the land towards the west was intended to be kept as an open space. This, however, is not a fair statement of the true facts. The record leaves no room for doubt that the Improvement Trust authorities intended to keep the land towards the west as open space in order that it might be annexed to the land now under consideration and the two parcels might be amalgamated with the Marcus Square for the purposes of extension. Consequently, an intending purchaser would be expected to have regard not merely to the fact that the land towards the west would be kept open but also that the land now under consideration would be acquired by the Improvement Trust authorities. In such circumstances, it is impossible to believe that any purchaser, other than a speculator, would purchase the land now under consideration in order that he might possibly profit by the transaction; in other words, the benefit which might accrue to the purchaser from the expression of intention of the Improvement Trust authorities, if carried into effect, would immediately result in the destruction of his rights as purchaser. No evidence has been adduced to show that a purchaser could be had on the 28th May 1919 who would have paid anything like Rs 8,000 for the land now in dispute. It seems to me to be manifest that there is no substance in the contention of the Appellant. It has finally been suggested that the case should be remanded for further investigation, but we cannot possibly accede to this request. No attempt was made in the Court below to lay the foundation for any alternative case and the Petitioner is not now entitled to a remand.

The result is that the decree made by the Tribunal is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

RANKIN, J.—I entirely agree. It seems to me that the principles of law discussed in the judgment of the learned President of the Tribunal cover more ground than it is necessary to discuss for the disposal of the present case. At the time of the declaration under Scheme XIII, namely, the 28th May 1919, the land occupied by the premises known as No. 38, Munshi Sadaruddin Lane had not been cleared and was not an open space but was covered with buildings as it had always been. Nevertheless if the claimant can show that there was an intention on the part of the Improvement Trust authorities to the effect that this plot of land would be acquired and would be rendered capable of use and enjoyment to the advantage of premises

(13) 13 C. W. N. 1046 (1909).
(14) 31 C. L. J. 68 (1919).

Nos. 5, 6 and 6/1, Mitra Lane, he is entitled as a matter of abstract law to prove that circumstance as an element in the valuation taken into account. The question is whether on the facts of this case he has shown that an intending purchaser just before the 28th May 1919 can be supposed to have been willing to give more for the claimant's premises by reason of such an intention on the part of the Improvement Trust. It is quite clear and it is so found by the learned President, that apart from user of the site of No. 38, Munshi Sadaruddin Lane in connection with a clearing scheme which would sweep away the claimant's premises there never was any intention on the part of the Improvement Trust to keep premises No. 38, Munshi Sadaruddin Lane as an ornamental garden or an open space. The intention of the Calcutta Improvement Trust in this matter was entirely conditional upon the pushing forward to completion of Scheme No. 13. The claimant says that he is entitled to add an element of value in respect of that intention. If in the circumstances it is not such an intention as can be supposed to affect the mind of a bonâ fide purchaser of house property in Mitra Lane, then it is of no service to the claimant. It has been contended that there is a principle to the effect that the value of the premises is to be taken independently altogether of the scheme, that is to say, on the footing that Scheme No. 13 had never been sanctioned. In its true meaning this principle has more than one fact. On the one hand, it means that you do not depreciate a man's property by saying that as it was going to be acquired for public purposes no one would readily have bought it or by treating the owner as a man obliged at any sacrifice to sell. On the other hand, it means that improvements to be made by the scheme itself are not a ground for giving to the owner an added value. Neither of these propositions touches or decides the question raised by the special facts of this case. The claimant claims to add a value by reason of a certain declaration on the part of the Calcutta Improvement Trust. That intention is not unconditional. When examined, it turns out to be one quite inconsistent with the claimant's premises ever having a chance to be used, occupied or enjoyed with the benefit of an open space to the west thereof. In these circumstances it seems to me that the President of the Tribunal has come to a correct conclusion. He has allowed for the general rise of value in this neighbourhood by the Central Avenue Scheme. He has allowed for the principle very correctly stated by him that in assessing the value of land acquired for the purpose of a scheme, sales of other similar lands between the date of the promulgation of the scheme and the date of the declaration are admissible in evidence. In this case no such evidence was put forward. If there had been evidence that the minds of prospective purchasers were being influenced by the chance that the plot of land to the west would be left as an open space and that Scheme No. 13 would not be carried out, I think, it would not have been right to exclude that evidence from consideration. No evidence of this sort was present and the surrounding circumstances make it improbable that such a case could have successfully established. For these reasons it seems to me that it is not necessary that this case should be sent back and that the decision of the Tribunal should be affirmed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No 1183 OF 1923.

RANKIN, J.
PAGE, J.
1923,
10, December.

BASANTI CHARAN SINHA Petitioner,
v.
RAJANI MOHON CHATTERJEE, Opposite Party.

Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920, B. C), sec. 2 (f), sec. 5, sec. 15, cl. (d), proviso (i)—Premises let at low rent on 1st November 1918, owing to neglect of repairs—Rent, if "unduly low"—"Standard rent, whether actual rent or rent payable if premises were repaired—Rent not increased since 1st November 1913, if necessarily unduly low.

The rent of 1st November 1918 which in the absence of a finding within one or other of the sub-divisions in cl. (3) of sec. 15 is to be certified as the standard rent under that section is the rent at which the premises were let in fact on the 1st day of November 1918 and not the "fair rent which the house would have fetched at the time, if it was in a normal state of repairs."

The Controller of Rents or the President of the Improvement Tribunal in revision cannot treat the rent at which the premises were let on the 1st of November 1918 as "unduly low" within the meaning of cl. (d) to sub-sec. (3) of sec. 15 merely on the ground that the premises would have been let at a higher rent on that date if the repairs of the premises had not been previously neglected.

In order that it may be a question at large how much the standard rent should be, there must first be a finding within one or other of the sub-divisions of cl. (3), sec. 15.

The second part of the first proviso to cl. (3) of sec. 15 does not enact a presumption which binds the Controller to hold that the rent of 1st November 1918 is too low if the rent has not been increased since 1st November 1913. This part of the proviso does not come into play until there is a valid finding under sec. 15, sub-sec. 3, cl. (d), that the rent is unduly low and where there is such a finding, it operates to remove the restriction on the amount of rent imposed by the first part with the result that the amount is left entirely at large. The question what the standard rent should be is after that purely one of fact.

This was a Rule against an order of the President of the Tribunal, dated the 17th September 1923, affirming that of the Controller of Rents, Calcutta, dated the 15th January 1923.

The facts of the case were as follows :—

On the 2nd January 1920, the Petitioner tenant entered into an agreement with the landlords, Opposite Party, for a lease of premises No. 10, Creek Lane for a period of three years certain from 16th January 1920, with option in the Petitioner to renew his tenancy for a further period of three years.

In pursuance of this agreement the Petitioner entered into possession on the 16th January 1920, but no lease was executed. Thereafter on the passing of the Calcutta Rent Act of 1920, the Petitioner, on the 1st October 1920, applied to the Controller of Rents, Calcutta, for standardisation of the rent at Rs. 165 per month, being 10 per cent. above the rent of November 1918. On 25th April 1921, the Controller of Rents rejected the petition, holding that the lease in question was outside the operation of the Act, but on the petition of the tenant the said order was set aside by the High Court on the 20th February 1922 [vide Basanti Charan Sinha v. Rajani Mohon Chatterjee (1)].

Thereafter the petition was heard on the merits by the Rent Controller who in view of objections taken by the Opposite Party framed the following issues, viz. :—

(1) 26 C. W. N. 711 (1922).

BASANTI CHARAN SINHA v. RAJANI MOHON CHATTERJEE.

(1) Whether the applicant rented the premises for the purpose of a factory.

(2) Whether in December 1919, the premises underwent such extensive repairs and structural additions and alterations that in January 1920, it might be called a "new premises."

(3) Whether the rent paid in respect of the premises in November 1918 was unduly low.

The Rent Controller decided the first two issues against the Opposite Party, and in the course of his judgment on issue No. 2 found that some of the repairs were perfunctorily done or left half-finished and further stated that during his inspection although made three years after the repairs he noticed signs of incompleteness of the said repairs. But upon the third issue he recorded his finding as follows :—

"There is no independent evidence to show that the rent paid in November 1918 was 'unduly low.' From the counterfoil rent receipt which has not been duly proved it appears that the rent paid in November 1918 was the same as that in November 1913. However, in my opinion the rent of Rs. 150 paid in November 1918 was unduly low. The fair rent of the premises in November 1918 would have been Rs. 200 plus occupier's share of taxes."

Against the decision of the Rent Controller which was passed on 15th January 1923, both parties applied for revision to the President, Improvement Tribunal, who upheld the order of the Rent Controller by his judgment, dated the 17th September 1923.

The Petitioner tenant thereupon obtained the present Rule from the High Court. On the day on which the Rule came on for hearing, the landlords filed a petition for revision and the two matters were with the consent of the Vakils for the parties heard together.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosh for the Tenant, Petitioner.

Babus Brajalal Chakrabartty and Hiralal Chakrabartty for the Landlord, Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RANKIN, J.—In this case, there is, first of all, a Rule obtained by the tenant claiming a revision of the decision of the learned President under the Calcutta Rent Act and, secondly, an application by the landlords for the issue of a Rule revising the same decision in certain respects. The learned Vakils concerned have very properly and conveniently agreed to put the whole matter before us upon the judgment of the learned President. So far as regards the landlords' application, that depends upon three points. It is said first of all, that the premises were let to the present tenant for the purposes of a factory and that, therefore, they are outside the definition of the word premises as given by sec. 2, cl. (c) of the Calcutta Rent Act, III, (B. C.), of 1920. In my opinion, the ned President has dealt with this matter quite correctly. He has enquired into the question whether the building here was let for residential purposes or for the purposes of a shop or an office, and he has come to the conclusion on ample evidence that the letting was not for the purposes of a factory. The state of mind of the tenant at the time as to what he intended to try to do in future is by no means conclusive on this point. The landlords appear to have been sending after all negotiations a draft lease which would have put the tenant under a firm obligation to use the premises only for residential purposes. That being so, the learned President's judgment is unexceptionable on this point.

It is then said that the learned President has failed to appreciate the true force of the evidence of the landlords' expert Mr. Shrosbee. That one way of putting the matter which he has criticised was only one of the aspects dealt with by the witness. It is not for us to say whether or not the evidence of that witness was fully and effectively appreciated by the learned President. We are not entitled to revise his decision even if on going through the evidence we should think that he has devoted an insufficient amount of attention or attributed an insufficient importance to one element of a question of fact.

Lastly, it is said that the learned President has misdirected himself in fixing the amount of the fair rent in this case. That contention is based upon the proviso to sec. 15 of the Rent Act. It seems to me that the position is fairly plain. In order that it may be a question at large how much the standard rent should be, there has, first of all, to be a finding within one or other of the subdivisions of cl. (3) of sec. 15. In the present case, there has to be a finding that the rent paid on the 1st of November 1918 was, in the opinion of the Controller, unduly low. If that finding is come to, then by the proviso the hands of the Controller are tied as to the amount to which he may raise the rent. He is forbidden to fix the rent at a higher amount than the highest rent actually paid for the premises since November 1913. But, by the second part of the proviso, if one or other of the things therein mentioned is found, that particular restriction on the question of amount is taken away and the result is that the amount is entirely at large. It is certainly suggested by the language of the second part of the proviso that where rent has not been increased since the first day of November 1913, as in the present case, the rent must be unduly low. That, however, is not an enactment but only a suggestion arising out of the provision dealing with the details of the subject and whether that suggestion is well-founded in any particular case is purely a question of fact. The legislature has not therein enacted a presumption which binds the hands of the Controller when considering whether the rent on the 1st November 1918 was or was not unduly low. In my judgment, if the finding of fact under cl. (d) of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 15 is good, there is no ground for complaint by the landlords under the terms of the proviso. That brings me to the question upon which the Rule was granted to the tenant.

The tenant complains that the learned President has found that the rent of 1918 was unduly low by misdirecting him in law. The finding was that before 1913 the premises were let out for more than they afterwards fetched. He says: "This fall in the rent was, in my opinion, due to a change for the worse in the condition of the building brought about by a neglect of necessary and timely repairs. The rent of November 1918 which under the Act is the basis of the standard rent of a house must, I think, be taken as the fair rent which the house would have fetched at that time, if it was in a normal state of repairs. If at that time, the house happened to be out of repairs, the fair rent of the house in its actual condition at that time would be low and the result of taking that rent as the basis for fixing its standard rent would be that, so long as the Act remains in force, the owner would be precluded from getting any higher rent in future even after putting the premises in a proper state of repairs; for sec. 5 of the

BASANTI CHARAN SINHA v. RAJANI MOHON CHATTERJEE.

Act provides that the standard rent of a house cannot be increased by reason merely of expenditure incurred by the landlord in making necessary repairs. I do not think that that could have been the intention of the legislature." In my opinion, this construction of the provisions of cl. (d) of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 15 is incorrect. The test throughout the Act is intended to be the actual rent, that is to say, the rent at which the premises were let in fact on the 1st day of November 1918. Under cl. (d), the Controller has to ask himself whether that rent at that date was unduly low and, in my opinion, the reference there is not to a hypothetical or notional state of normal repairs but to the actual condition of the premises as compared with the actual rent paid or agreed to be paid. It is perhaps open to some argument, but I will take it for the present purpose that the view of the learned President is right and that, in a case where in November 1918 the premises were let at a rent which was low by reason only of bad condition, the landlord having put the premises in repairs will be unable under the Rent Act to get an increase of rent. I say nothing to prejudice the question if it arises hereafter under cl. (a) of sub-sec. (3) or otherwise. It is not, however, plain to me that the legislature may not have contemplated with equanimity some of the troubles of a landlord whose property was in disrepair even although afterwards he has put it into repairs. In order that the rent of a house may be unduly low, all things must be considered. The premises may be out of repairs and still the rent may be unduly low. But in the present case, the learned President has held, as I understand, that the fall in the rent was entirely due to the change for the worse in the condition of the building. He has not found that notwithstanding the bad condition of the building, the rent of 1918 was unduly low, nor, in my judgment, did he mean to find anything of the sort. I think, therefore, we must exercise our power in revision and send this matter back to the learned President in order that the question whether the rent paid on the 1st day of November 1918 was or was not unduly low may be reconsidered and a proper finding come to upon that and the consequential points. It must be distinctly understood that no fresh evidence is to be taken and the remand is solely for a finding under cl. (d) of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act in the light of the observations made in the judgment and for the disposal of the case accordingly: the Rule of the tenant is made absolute on these terms and to this extent. The landlords must pay to the tenant his costs in the Rule and the application, the hearing-fee for the two together being assessed at two gold mohurs.

[APPEAL FROM THE CHIEF COURT OF LOWER BURMA.]

VISCOUNT FINLAY. LORD DUNEDIN. LORD ATKINSON. SIR JOHN EDGE. MR. AMEER ALI. 1923, Heard, 5, 6, 8, 12, 13 & 15, March. Judgment, 10, July.	THE IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA (substituted for the Bank of Bengal, Akyab), Appellants, v. U. RAI GYAW THU AND COMPANY, LIMITED, Respondents.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 8, 48, 58 (a), 59, 78, 79, 80—Mortgage by deposit of title-deeds to secure future advances but no maximum amount expressed—Mortgage, if legal and if affects property outside enumerated towns—Subsequent registered mortgage—Mortgagee not asking for title-deeds—Subsequent advances by prior mortgagee—Priority, claim of, in respect of subsequent advances, if valid—Not asking for title-deeds, if abstention or negligence amounting to constructive notice—Notice, if material.

Where a mortgage has been made to secure future advances, the mortgagee does not as against a subsequent mortgagee secure priority in respect of subsequent advances unless a maximum amount is, as required by sec. 79 of the Transfer of Property Act, expressed in his mortgage. The exception to sec. 80 also cannot apply where no such maximum amount is expressed in the prior mortgage, and it is immaterial in such a case, in view of the language of sec. 80, whether the second mortgagee took his mortgage with or without notice, actual or constructive, of the prior mortgage.

There is no distinction in secs. 58 and 59 of the Transfer of Property Act between legal and equitable mortgages as in English law, where the legal mortgage will always prevail against the equitable unless the holder of the legal mortgage has done or omitted to do something which prevents him in equity from asserting his paramount rights.

Equitable mortgage effected by the deposit of title-deeds made in the towns specified in sec. 59 of the Act is a mortgage in the sense of the Act. Such a mortgage may involve lands outside the towns mentioned.

Where the earlier mortgage was by deposit of title-deeds and the later by a registered document, the fact that the second mortgagee did not ask for the title-deeds would not entitle the first mortgagee to claim priority in respect of subsequent advances made in terms of the earlier mortgage under sec. 78, for nothing done by the second mortgagee can be said to have caused the earlier mortgagee to make such further advances.

Semble :—Where the earlier mortgage was made by deposit of title-deeds and sec. 79 of the Act applies by reason of a maximum amount being expressed as secured by the transaction, there is on the part of a person taking a second mortgage by a registered instrument, in a place where he knew that mortgages by deposit of title-deeds were legal and usual, without asking for the title-deeds and without ascertaining whether the title-deeds were already pledged, such an abstention from an enquiry which he ought to have made or such negligence as to infer notice in terms of sec. 3 of the Act. But in parts of India remote from the towns enumerated in sec. 59, it would be out of question to hold that there was a necessary duty in taking a mortgage to insist on the production of the title-deeds and registration is sufficient protection.

These were two consolidated appeals (Nos. 148 and 149 of 1920) from seven judgments and decrees of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, dated the 6th May 1918, modifying and affirming decrees of the District Court of Akyab.

The question for determination in each of the appeals was whether certain advances made by the Bank of Bengal, Akyab, (now represented by the Appellant Bank), on the footing of equitable mortgages by deposit of title-deeds were entitled to priority over subsequent registered mortgages executed in favour of the Respondents.

The relevant facts in each appeal are set out in the judgment of their Lordships.

In appeal No. 148 of 1920 the registered mortgage was effected by the mortgagor at a time when his liability to the Bank was Rs. 24,500.

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA v. U. RAI GYAW THU AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

In appeal No. 149 of 1920 the mortgagor was temporarily free from liability to the Bank when he executed the registered mortgage.

On the 8th March 1917, the District Judge gave judgment in the suits comprised in appeal No. 148 of 1920; he held that the registration by the Respondents of their mortgage was not notice to the Appellant Bank, that it was not negligent on the part of the Bank to have omitted to search the register before making advances, and that there was no right in the Respondents to have the Bank's securities marshalled. In the event he made a declaration that the mortgage in favour of the Bank was entitled to priority over the Respondents' mortgage.

The Chief Court in appeal modified the judgment of the District Court and declared that the Bank was entitled to priority only to the extent of Rs. 15,000, being the minimum amount due to the Bank after 1st June 1914, the date of the Respondents' mortgage—together with interest thereon.

They held that the Bank was guilty of negligence for failing to search the registers prior to making advances, and they ordered each party to marshal its securities in favour of the other.

In appeal No. 149 of 1920 the District Judge held that the Respondents had priority in respect of their registered mortgage of 1st May 1914 over advances made by the Bank after that date and his decision was upheld by the Chief Court on appeal.

From these decisions the Bank appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. N. Micklem, K. C., L. DeGruyther, K. C. and W. Dragher for the Appellants.—The Bank's mortgages were prior in time and will therefore prevail against the subsequent mortgages, although the latter are registered.

Sec. 48, Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

Registration is not compulsory in Akyab.

See sec. 57 of Transfer of Property Act, 1882, as amended by sec. 4 of Act VI of 1904.

It is immaterial that the land is situate outside Akyab, the material question under the section is where did the contract and deposit take place.

Srinath Roy v. Gadadhur Das (2).

In each case the deeds were deposited with the Bank and the properties comprised therein purported to be unencumbered.

The Respondents were guilty of "gross negligence" in failing to get the title-deeds or have them accounted for.

Colyer v. Finch (3), Northern Counties Fire Insurance Co. v. Whipp (4), Oliver v. Hinton (5), Walker v. Lincoln (6) and Hudston v. Viney (7).

Sec. 79 of the Transfer of Property Act contemplates that mortgages will be made to secure future advances and provides that the English rule shall apply except where a maximum is expressed. The Indian law in that event overrides the rule in Hopkinson v. Rolt (1).

The exception in sec. 80—("Except in the case provided for in sec. 79")—is as to the classes of securities mentioned in sec. 79 whether with a maximum expressed or not. Otherwise the security, which a Bank in England gets by deposit of deeds or for future advances generally, does not exist in India.

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA v. U. RAI GYAW THU AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

An alternative construction of sec. 80 is that it applies to further mortgages not to advances on existing mortgages. The fact that sec. 80 deals wholly with "Tacking" in its true sense is an interpretation which is borne out by the marginal reference. See Coote on Mortgages (1912 Edn.), pp. 1248-1250.

In any event the Respondents are deprived by their own negligence of any priority which they might have had. Madras Hindu Union Bank v. Venkatarangiah (8), Madras Building Co. v. Rowlandson (9), Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Co. (10) and Nanda Lal Roy v. Abdul Aziz (11).

Mere registration does not constitute notice, Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (12).

Registration need not be effected for four or even eight months after a mortgage so that an inspection of the register for the purpose of a fresh advance would be valueless. The Irish case of In re Bourke (13), which was approved of in Fullerton v. Provincial Bank of Ireland (14) shows the error of the contention that in the absence of fraud any registered mortgage takes priority over one that is unregistered.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., Webster and Pennell for the Respondents.—The failure to register their mortgage is conclusive against the Bank, Subramanian v. Lutchman (15).

This point has not been taken earlier but it is a point of law and the Appellant is in no way prejudiced by having it raised now.

The Transfer of Property Act is a Code of English law and it is unnecessary to consider the English law outside that Code.

The English doctrine of legal and equitable estates is not known to the Indian law of mortgages and the whole question of priority is dealt with under sec. 48 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section does away with all the differences between legal and equitable interests except so far as it is modified by sec. 78, which says that a prior mortgagee may be postponed provided there is evidence of fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect.

The rule is laid down by sec. 80 that a further advance shall not be given priority. The exception is provided by sec. 79. viz., "where the maximum to be secured is expressed." In neither of the present cases was the maximum expressed; therefore the rule applies and the Respondents' charge should receive priority over the further advances made by the Bank

The mere fact of a marginal note making a reference to Tacking cannot alter the plain meaning of sec. 80.

Balraj Kunwar v. Jagatpal Singh (16) and Punardeo Narain Singh v. Ram Sarup Roy (17).

The Respondents were not guilty of "gross neglect" within the meaning of sec. 78.

They had registered, which was all that they were bound to do, the neglect if any lay in the failure by the Appellants to have the register searched.

Until 1882 "gross neglect" meant that there were facts from which an inference could be drawn that the mortgagee was inducing the mortgagor to commit a fraud.

The meaning of gross neglect in the Transfer of Property Act was the meaning which had been assigned to the words in 1882, as interpreted by Northern Counties Fire Insurance Co. v. Whipp (4), Hewitt v. Loosemore (18) and Ratcliffe v. Barnard (19).

The interpretation given to the words in Oliver v. Hinton (5) was admittedly different and being later than 1882 could not have been the interpretation intended by the Act.

In India there is no rule that the person getting the legal mortgage should first get in the deeds; that is the difference between India and Ireland, "registered" countries, and England where registration is not compulsory. Agra Bank v. Barry (20) is directly in point. In the circumstances what might be gross neglect in England would not necessarily be gross neglect in India.

The Transfer of Property Act should be construed according to the rules in existence at the time of passing of the Act.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—These are two consolidated appeals. The facts in appeal No. 148 of 1920 are as follows:—

One Abdul Hakim, on the 28th December 1911, handed to the Bank of Bengal (now represented by the Appellants the Imperial Bank of India who took over their business) the following document:—

"AKYAB,
"28th December 1911.

"To The Agent, Bank of Bengal,
Akyab.

"DEAR SIR,

"I beg to hand you the title-deeds as at foot to be held as Collateral Security for the advances made by you or to be made by you to me hereafter.

"I further beg to submit you that all those title-deeds as at foot deposited with you are free from encumbrances.

"Yours faithfully,
"ABDUL HAKIM II."
(In Burmese).

"DETAILS OF PROPERTIES REFERRED TO ABOVE."

The schedule was not filled up. The Bank thereafter made advances on current account from time to time. On 1st June 1914, Abdul Hakim was indebted to the Bank to the extent of Rs. 21,500. His liabilities to the Bank subsequently rose and fell; the minimum amount due at any one time being Rs. 15,000 on the 8th July 1914. The liabilities rose by further advances.

On the 1st June 1914, Abdul Hakim, without the knowledge of the Bank, executed a deed of mortgage of seven parcels of land, of which the titles had been handed to the Bank, in favour of a firm who were the immediate predecessors-in-title of the Respondents. This mortgage was registered. The mortgage was to secure Rs. 10,000. The Respondents' manager did not ask for any title-deeds and believed the statement of Abdul Hakim that the properties were free from encumbrances.

The facts in appeal No. 149 of 1920 are as follows :—

One Maung Tha Baw deposited the title-deeds of certain agricultural lands with the Bank at Akyab, as security for advances made to him by the Bank from time to time. His indebtedness to the Bank fluctuated from month to month. On the 29th April 1914, he cleared his account with the Bank, but allowed his title-deeds to remain in possession of the Bank, and on the 23rd May 1914, took a fresh advance of Rs. 10,000. From that time onwards his indebtedness to the Bank continued up to the date of the suit. On the 21st May 1914, without notice to the Bank during the time when he was temporarily free from debt, Maung Tha Baw executed a mortgage of certain of the lands in favour of the Respondents in this appeal, and this mortgage was duly registered at the Sub-Registration Office at Myohaung where Tha Baw lives. The mortgage was for Rs. 30,000.

The point of contest in both cases is the question of priority of the Appellants, the Bank, and the respective Respondents in respect of their registered mortgages.

Before discussing the question or examining the judgments below, it is advisable to set out the sections of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, on which the questions turn. By sec. 58 (a) it is declared that :—

" A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability."

The section goes on to set forth and distinguish in turn simple mortgages (b), mortgages by conditional sale (c), usufructuary mortgages (d) and English mortgages (e).

Sec. 59 provides that :—

" Where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses " and then continues—

" Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid mortgages made in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi, Rangoon, Moulmein, Bassein and Akyab, by delivery to a creditor or his agent of documents of title to immoveable property with intent to create a security thereon."

It is to be observed that there is here no distinction between legal and equitable mortgages as in English law, where the legal mortgage will always prevail against the equitable unless the holder of the legal has done or omitted to do something which prevents him in equity from asserting his paramount rights.

The various classes of mortgages are merely described, and then as regards mortgage by way of deposit of title-deeds, that is spoken of as a known method. That that known method had consisted in applying the doctrine of English law that such deposit effected a mortgage good against the mortgagor, although no actual conveyance of the property had been made, may be taken as certain.

Priority is dealt with in general terms by sec. 48 :—

" Where a person purports to create by transfer at different times rights in or over the same immoveable property, and such rights cannot all exist or be exercised to their full extent together, each later created right shall, in the absence of a special contract or reservation binding the earlier transferees, be subject to the rights previously created."

This is what is expressed in the old maxim qui prior est tempore potior est jure. But priority is specifically dealt with in secs. 78, 79 and 80, which are as follows :—

78. "Where, through the fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect of a prior mortgagee, another person has been induced to advance money on the security of the mortgaged property, the prior mortgagee shall be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee."

79. "If a mortgage made to secure future advances, the performance of an engagement or the balance of a running account, expresses the maximum to be secured thereby, a subsequent mortgage of the same property, shall, if made with notice of the prior mortgage, be postponed to the prior mortgage in respect of all advances or debits not exceeding the maximum though made or allowed with notice of the subsequent mortgage."

80. "No mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his original security. And, except in the case provided for by sec. 79, no mortgagee making a subsequent advance to the mortgagor, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his security for such subsequent advance."

Now upon the facts set forth the learned District Judge in appeal No. 148 of 1920 thought that two points and two points only arose : (1) Whether the registration of the Respondents' mortgage was ipso facto notice to the Bank, thus preventing the Bank from making further advances upon the doctrine of Hopkinson v. Rolt (1) : and (2) whether the fact that the Respondents in taking the mortgage did not ask for the title-deeds, brought into play the provisions of sec. 78. He decided the first question in the negative and the second in the affirmative. He then gave judgment in favour of the Bank. He did not consider or discuss the effect of the concluding words of sec. 80.

In appeal No. 149 of 1920 he held that the two questions were the same. The first he decided in the same way, but the second he decided otherwise. He held that as the mortgaged lands were in the District where the concluding provision of sec. 59 did not apply, the Bank were themselves negligent in not inspecting the register before making further advances and that this negligence on their part precluded them from putting forward negligence on the Respondents' part under sec. 78. He therefore preferred the Respondents. Again he did not discuss sec. 80.

The appeal in No. 149 of 1920 came on before the appeal in No. 148 of 1920. In that appeal sec. 80 was mentioned, but was dismissed with the remark that it did not in any way supersede sec. 79, and the question to be decided was declared to be whether in the circumstances the Court could impute gross negligence to the Respondents and whether such negligence was a proximate cause of the Bank making further advances. The learned Appeal Judge who delivered the judgment then proceeded to consider the English decisions as to the necessity of a legal mortgagee requiring possession of the title-deeds without perhaps quite adverting to the fact that the question in England is not so much one of priority in time as of the possibility of an equitable mortgagee being allowed to prevail over a legal. Having come to the conclusion that in the English law there was no absolute necessity to require production of the deeds, he argued that the case became much stronger in the country where registration existed, and he, therefore, came to the conclusion that the omission in this case to ask for the title-deeds was not negligence and dismissed the appeal. In appeal No. 148 of 1920 he held that as he had decided in appeal No. 149 of 1920, it followed that there was no negligence and preferred the Respondents to all except the amount which represented the amount due to the Bank before the date of the mortgage so far as not paid off.

Before their Lordships the argument proceeded on somewhat different and broader lines. The Respondents based their case entirely on the concluding words of sec. 80. Applying these words they say the Bank is a mortgagee who has made an advance subsequent to an intermediate mortgage and therefore as this is not a case falling within sec. 79 they cannot obtain priority therefor. All the discussion as to what is and what is not notice becomes unnecessary. The law being as it stands, sec. 78 cannot have any application because nothing done by them caused the Bank to make the further advances.

The Appellants sought to rebut this argument in various ways. They first argued that the words of sec. 80 "in the case mentioned in sec. 79" meant mortgages to secure further advances or the balance of a running account. Their Lordships cannot accept this argument. They think that the words of sec. 79 mean that the mortgage there referred to must express a maximum. The words "to secure further advances, etc.," denominate the different classes of mortgages, but to bring them under sec. 79 they must have the common feature of a maximum expressed. As no maximum was expressed in either of the two cases here, the exception in sec. 80 cannot apply.

The Appellants then argued that when a mortgage was to secure further advances, any advance when made was not truly a subsequent advance. The words of the section, in their Lordships' opinion, are destructive of this argument. "Subsequent" from the context must mean subsequent to the intermediate mortgage, and if that is so, then in the sense of the section an advance when made after another mortgage granted becomes a subsequent advance.

It was then argued that the equitable mortgage effected by deposit of title-deeds was not a mortgage in the sense of the Act and that consequently the priority sections had no application. This seems untenable in view of the words of sec. 58 (a). Unless the deposit of title-deeds effects the transfer of an interest in a specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced, it is absolutely nothing at all. Further the concluding words of sec. 59 actually use the word mortgage to denote the security effected by delivery of documents of title.

The consideration, however, on which the Appellants laid most stress was that it was evident that the legislature wished to preserve the system of mortgaging by deposit of title-deeds in the enumerated towns. Such mortgages are only really useful for the exigencies of business, especially in the timber and rice trades, where balances fluctuate from day to day. It would be impossible at each subsequent advance that there should be a search of registers, because the registers searched would be not only the registers in the town itself but all those where the security lands mentioned in the deposited title-deeds might be situated, and the exigencies of business require immediate advances without a delay which might be of many days. Therefore it was pressed on their Lordships that they should give such an interpretation to the Act as would not defeat one of its avowed objects.

Such considerations while founded on views as to business which are obviously of the greatest practical importance would, in their Lordships' opinion, be rather arguments for the invocation of the legislature than an incentive to the putting of a forced construction on sections of an Act which in themselves were, in their Lordships' judgment, capable of only one interpretation. It may, however, be not amiss to point out that, in their Lordships' view, the remedy is given in the Act itself, and that is by the insertion in the arrangements for such mortgages of a maximum as indicated by sec. 79. The insertion of such a maximum elides the result which otherwise would obtain in terms of the case of Hopkinson v. Rolt (1). It is true that the subsequent mortgage must be made with notice of the prior mortgage which includes the maximum. But a case like the present, where the lender took the subsequent mortgage without asking for the title-deeds, would be met by sec. 3 of the Act which provides :—

"A person is said to have 'notice' of a fact when he actually knows that fact, or when, but for wilful abstention from an enquiry or search which he ought to have made, or gross negligence, he would have known it. . . . . . ."

Taking the case of appeal No. 148 of 1920 as the simpler, their Lordships would be prepared to hold, that for a mortgagee taking a mortgage in a place where he knew that mortgages by deposit of title-deeds were legal and usual and not to ascertain whether the title-deeds were already pledged was such abstention from an enquiry which he ought to have made or such negligence as to infer notice in terms of the section. In the present case such a finding is unavailing, because sec. 80, in saying "with or without notice" makes notice immaterial. But if there had been a maximum then the exception would have applied and the case would have fallen under sec. 79. Appeal No. 148 of 1920 has been taken as the simpler case because the dealings are all within the town, but in appeal No. 149 of 1920, in their Lordships' judgment, the result would have been the same. No doubt each case must be judged of according to circumstances. In parts of India remote from the enumerated towns, it would be out of the question to hold that there was a necessary duty in taking a mortgage to insist on the production of the title-deeds. Registration is sufficient protection. But here the transaction was in Akyab, and the Respondents knew that a deposit of title-deeds in Akyab might involve lands situate outside Akyab and not very far remote.

Upon this view of sec. 80, 78 does not admit of any application. The Bank who had no maximum expressed so as to get the benefit of sec. 79 took the risk of there being an intermediate mortgage. Their further advances could not in any sense be said to have been induced by any action of the Respondents.

For the reasons above given their Lordships think, though on different grounds from that given by the learned Judges below, that these appeals fail, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 136 OF 1922.

MOOKERJEE, J.
RANKIN, J.
1923,

S. K. GHANDY
v.
L. P. E. PUGH.

Courts, if should interfere with internal management of joint stock companies acting within their powers—Suit for redress of wrong done to the company or to recover moneys or damages alleged to be due to the company, how far can be brought by an individual share-holder of the company.

It is an elementary principle of the law relating to joint stock companies that the Court will not interfere with the internal management of companies acting within their powers, and in fact has no jurisdiction to do so.

BURLAND v. EARLE (1) and FOSTER v. FOSTER (2) relied on.

In order to redress a wrong done to the company or to recover moneys or damages alleged to be due to the company, the action should primâ facie be brought by the company itself. But an exception is made where the persons against whom the relief is sought themselves hold and control the majority of the shares in the company and will not permit an action to be brought in the name of the company. In that case the Courts allow the shareholders complaining to bring an action in their own names. But in such an action the Plaintiffs cannot have a larger right to relief than the company itself would have if it were Plaintiff, and cannot complain of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority of the shareholders or are capable of being confirmed by the majority. The cases in which the minority can maintain such an action are, therefore, confined to those in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or beyond the powers of the company.

FOSS v. HARBOTTLE (3), MOZLEY v. ALSTON (4), MENIER v. HOOPER'S TELEGRAPH WORKS (5) and other cases referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Pearson, dated the 26th July 1922, passed in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts are briefly as follows :—The Plaintiff-Appellant, a share-holder of the Hoogly Coal Company, Limited, on behalf of the other share-holders of the company brought this suit against the Defendant-Appellant, L. P. E. Pugh, the first director of the company, impleading the company as the 2nd Defendant, for fraud upon the minority in passing a resolution confirming a sub-lease of the company's coal fields in which the said director was personally interested. The said director being the holder of sharers to the extent of about three-fourths of the capital and controlling the majority of the votes, passed the resolution in question. Mr. Justice Pearson dismissed the suit and hence the present appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for damages. The Plaintiff is a shareholder in the Hoogly Coal Company, Limited, incorporated under the Indian Companies Act. The first Defendant, a shareholder of the company, was appointed its first director by the articles of association and has been a director thereof since its incorporation. The company has been joined as the second Defendant. The circumstances which have given rise to the claim for damages may be briefly narrated.

On the 23rd September 1914, the first Defendant obtained a lease for 999 years of coal land in Mouza Bon Bistupur held under proprietary right by one Sanjilal. The consideration was the payment of Rs. 30,000 as premium and royalties on the working. On the 23rd June 1915, the Defendant company was incorporated to take over the Bon Bistupur concern from the first Defendant on terms contained in a draft agreement. The capital was fixed at two and a half lacs of rupees covered by 50,000 shares of Rs. 5 each. This agreement between the first Defendant and the company was executed on the 2nd July 1915. On the 5th July 1915, 40,000 fully paid-up shares were awarded to the first Defendant as consideration. Messrs. W. A. Lee & Co. were at the same time appointed Managing Agents and they continued as such for about a year when their services were dispensed with. The evidence showed that till september 1917, the concern was looked after by the first Defendant who was also the sole director. During all this time, the premium of Rs. 30,000 had not been paid to the vendor nor had he executed the conveyance to the company. But in January 1916 the first Defendant had agreed to deposit shares to the extent of one lac to secure the company against the charge for premium, as, under the agreement, the company took the property free of encumbrances. On the 3rd September 1917, the first Defendant granted a sub-lease for 999 years to one Bagchi. This sub-lease included not only the Bon Bistupur concern but also two other collieries which were owned by the Defendant. The consideration for the transfer was an aggregate sum of Rs. 80,000 as premium. Royalties were also to be paid but at increased rates which were double the original rates. Possession was given to Bagchi under this sub-lease. The case for the Plaintiff is that this sub-lease, in so far as it relates to Bon Bistupur, is fraudulent and in breach of the duty of the first Defendant as director of the company. On the 17th September 1917, the first Defendant gave notice of a meeting of the share-holders of the Defendant company for the next day; but the meeting was not held, apparently because no one was present. After further notice, a meeting was held on the 26th November 1917 when a resolution was proposed to confirm the lease to Bagchi on payment of royalty. The first Defendant was in the chair and voted in favour of it, while others present voted aganst it; he then declared the resolution carried. A doubt, however, was raised as to the legality of the proceeding, and a further meeting was held on the 16th February 1918. The Plaintiff protested but a resolution was carried in these terms :—

"That the company confirms the lease granted by the first Defendant on the 3rd September 1917 so far as it relates to the lease of Bon Bistupur on royalty and accepts the offer of the first Defendant to pay over the royalties as they accrue due to the company and to make no further claim on him."

The case for the Plaintiff is that this resolution was a fraud on the minority and was not binding on the company. On these allegations the Plaintiff instituted the present suit on behalf of himself and the other share-holders of the Defendant company. The reliefs claimed were framed in the following terms:—

"1. Judgment for Rs. 50,000 as damages for wrongful acts, to be paid to the Defendant Company. 2. Judgment that the first Defendant may be ordered to deliver up to the Defendant company certificates of the said shares held by him or his nominees in order that the same may be cancelled and that the first Defendant be ordered to pay to the Defendant company at the rate of Rs. 5 per share in respect of such shares, if any, as have been transferred to bonâ fide holders for value."

The Defendant contended that no relief could be claimed in the suit as framed. Mr. Justice Pearson has found that the share-holders have not lost by what took place or that any more profitable way of dealing with the property was open, considering the position of affairs at the time, when the sub-lease was granted by the first Defendant on the 3rd September 1917. He has consequently held that upon the suit as framed the Plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought. In our opinion, the view taken by Mr. Justice Pearson is correct and his judgment must be upheld.

The principles of law applicable to a case of this character were enunciated by Lord Davey in Burland v. Earle (1) in a well-known passage which is quoted by Mr. Justice Peterson in Foster v. Foster (2):—

"It is an elementary principle of the law relating to joint stock companies that the Court will not interfere with the internal management of companies acting within their powers, and in fact has no jurisdiction to do so. Again, it is clear law that in order to redress a wrong done to the company or to recover moneys or damages alleged to be due to the company, the action should primâ facie be brought by the company itself. These cardinal principles are laid down in the well-known cases of Foss v. Harbottle (3) and Mozley v. Alston (4) and in numerous later cases which it is unnecessary to cite. But an exception is made to the second rule"—that is to say, that the company ought to bring the action—"where the persons against whom the relief is sought themselves hold and control the majority of the shares in the company, and will not permit an action to be brought in the name of the company. In that case the Courts allow the share-holders complaining to bring an action in their own names. This, however, is mere matter of procedure in order to give a remedy for a wrong which would otherwise escape redress, and it is obvious that in such an action the Plaintiffs cannot have a larger right to relief than the company itself would have if it were Plaintiff, and cannot complain of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority of the share-holders, or are capable of being confirmed by the majority. The cases in which the minority can maintain such an action are, therefore, confined to those in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or beyond the powers of the company. A familiar example is where the majority are endeavouring directly or indirectly to appropriate to themselves money, property, or advantages which belong to the company, or in which the other share-holders are entitled to participate, as was alleged in the case of Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works (5). It should be added that no mere informality which can be remedied by the majority will entitle the minority to sue, if the act when done regularly would be within the powers of the company and the intention of the majority of the share-holders is clear. This may be illustrated by the judgment of Mellish, L. J., in MacDougall v. Gardiner (6)." This passage was approved in Dominion Cotton Mills Co. v. Amyot (7) and applied by Kekewich, J., in Normandy v. Ind., Coope & Co. (8). The same view was affirmed in Cook v. Deeks (9) where Lord Buckmaster, L. C., referred to North West Transportation Co. v. Beatty (10) and Jacobus Marler Estates v. Marler (11).

The question consequently arises, whether on the facts of this case, the Plaintiff has established that the suit as framed comes within the scope of this rule. The answer, in our opinion, must be in the negative. We have been pressed to hold that the grant of the lease to Bagchi for a premium of Rs. 80,000 on the 3rd September 1917 was fraudulent and was in breach of the obligation of the first Defendant as the director of the Hoogly Coal Company. The transaction, however, was not merely in respect of the Bon Bistupur property but also in respect of two other collieries which belonged to the first Defendant alone. The Plaintiff has not been able to establish that this premium of Rs. 80,000 was not fair consideration for the two collieries held by the Defendant. This distinguishes the present case from the decision in Cockburn v. Newbridge Sanitary Steam Laundry Company (12) which illustrates how the application of well-settled principles to concrete facts may be beset with difficulties. We see no reason to dissent from the view taken by Mr. Justice Pearson that the lease was neither an act of fraud nor a breach of duty.

The result is that the decree made by Mr. Justice Pearson is confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch III, Art. 3—Suit for possession by raiyat in case of dispossession by landlord claiming title by auction-purchase in execution of rent decree against third person, if governed by 2 years' rule of limitation—Dispossession by landlord—Limitation.

Where a raiyat was dispossessed of a part of his holding by his landlord who caused the dispossession claiming title by auction-purchase in execution of a rent decree against another person treating him as his sole tenant, and it was found that the said decree and sale were fraudulent and that at the time when the Plaintiff was dispossessed in 1913 and up till the date when the suit for possession was instituted in 1919 the Plaintiff was all along the tenant of the Defendant:

SUHRAWARDY, J.—Art. 3, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to a case where dispossession has been by a person who at the time of dispossession occupies the position of a landlord.

This was an appeal preferred on the 29th of August 1921 against the decree of Rajendra Nath Rai, Esq., Additional District Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 20th of June 1921, reversing the decree of Babu Dhirendra Nath Bagchi, Officiating Munsif, Additional Court at Jhenidaha, dated the 29th of May 1920.

The facts material to the report are as follows :—

Plaintiff brought this suit on the 17th May 1919 for declaration of title and recovery of possession of 5 cottahs of land on the allegation that Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who were her landlords in collusion with the other Defendants dispossessed her from the lands in suit in March 1919 by stacking straw and erecting a hut thereon. Plaintiff's case was that two brothers Sitanath and Dwarkanath jointly held a homestead of 10 cottahs under the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 at an annual rental of Rs. 1-4-0. Sitanath having died his half-share devolved upon his widow, the Plaintiff, and she having purchased the other 8 as. share from Dwarkanath in Pous 1320, B. S., became entitled to the entire 10 cottahs and was in possession of the same on payment of the 16 as. rent to her landlords, Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Dwarkanath's daughter, Defendant No. 4, and her sons Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 in collusion with the landlords Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 dispossessed the Plaintiff subsequently from Dwarkanath's half-share in the homestead as alleged and hence they brought this suit.

Defendant No. 2 alone contested the suit, and his defence, inter alia, was that the disputed land which was admittedly the eastern half of the homestead formed a separate non-transferable occupancy holding of Dwarkanath which he held at an annual rental of Re. 1, and that after Dwarkanath's death his daughter, Defendant No. 4, succeeded him, and that as Defendant No. 4 did not pay rent in respect of the eastern half of the homestead he and Defendant No. 1 sued her for rent and having obtained a decree purchased the land in execution sale. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 obtained delivery of possession of the land through Court on the 8th December 1913 and were in possession of it since that time.

The Munsif dismissed the suit. He believed the Defendant's case and held that the disputed land was a separate holding held by Dwarkanath alone at a jama of Re. 1, and that Plaintiff had no title to or possession of the lands in suit. He further held that the suit was barred under Art. 3, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The following portion of his judgment will be found material :—

"I therefore hold that even if the Plaintiff had ever any right to or possession of the disputed land she was dispossessed therefrom by her landlords, the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, for upwards of 2 years before the institution of the suit, and the present suit is therefore barred by the special law of limitation as provided in Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act."

On appeal by the Plaintiff, the Additional District Judge of Jessore allowed the appeal and decreed the suit. He believed the Plaintiff's case and held that the disputed land appertained to the occupancy holding of Rs. 1-4 held jointly by Sitanath and Dwarkanath, that the rent decree against Defendant No. 4 and the sale thereunder were fraudulent and collusive, that the homestead was partitioned by the two brothers in two equal shares and Sitanath got the western half while Dwarkanath got the eastern half and this was the land in suit which was purchased by the Plaintiff from Dwarkanath. He further held that the suit was not barred, and disposed of the issue on the point of limitation as follows :—

"In view of the ruling of Kamaldhari Thakur v. Rameswar Singh Bahadur (2) the suit is not time barred."

Against this decision of the lower Appellate Court Defendant No. 2 preferred this second appeal.

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur (with Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the Appellant.—In this case having regard to the facts found the two years' rule of limitation (Sch. III, Art. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act) applies and the suit is barred by limitation. Defendant purchased the suit lands at a sale in execution of a rent decree against a third person treating him as the sole tenant, and then dispossessed the Plaintiff. That decree and sale have been found to be collusive. The said decree was not against the Plaintiff: the relationship of landlord and tenant between the Plaintiff and the Defendant existed at the time of the dispossession. There is no doubt a conflict of decisions on the question as to whether Art. 3, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act will apply where the dispossession is by the landlord by virtue of his title as auction-purchaser: see Nabin Chandra Saha v. Sheikh Wajid (1) and the cases referred to therein. I submit that that question does not arise here having regard to the findings in this case. Defendant went upon the suit land claiming it as his khas land. It is found that at the time of the dispossession and up to the date of the suit the Defendant was in fact the landlord of the Plaintiff.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit for the Respondent.—Having regard to the conflict of rulings the case should be referred to a Full Bench. The Defendant dispossessed the Plaintiff as auction-purchaser and as such the dispossession was not by the Defendant in his capacity as landlord.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :-

SUHRAWARDY J.—In this appeal the point involved is whether on the findings of the Courts below the Plaintiff's suit is barred by two years' limitation under Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The facts are that Defendant No 2 who is the Appellant was the landlord in respect of a certain holding which was jointly held by two brothers Sitanath and Dwarkanath. Sitanath died leaving the Plaintiff as his widow on whom devolved his one-half share. The Plaintiff's case is that she purchased the other one-half of Dwarkanath and thus became entitled to the 16 annas share of the holding. The Defendant's case is that in respect of the eastern half of this holding Dwarkanath was the sole tenant and after his death the

KEDAR NATH BISWAS v. KAMINI SUNDARI DASYA.

Defendant No. 4 succeeded him as a tenant, but as Defendant No. 4 did not pay the rent in respect of the eastern half of the holding, the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, being the landlords, brought a suit for rent, obtained a decree, purchased the land in execution of the same and obtained delivery of possession through Court on the 8th December 1913. The lower Appellate Court has found that the Defendant's decree against Defendant No. 4 and the sale in execution thereof were fraudulent and collusive. It was the case of the Plaintiff and it has been found by the Courts below that the Plaintiff was all along the tenant of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in respect of the land in dispute and that the decree against Defendant No. 4 and the sale thereunder did not affect the Plaintiff's title. The Plaintiff alleged that she was dispossessed in 1325 by a certain act of the landlords. The first Court disbelieved the evidence on that point and found that she was dispossessed by her landlords (Defendants Nos. 1 and 2) more than two years before the institution of the suit and held that the suit was barred by limitation. The learned Munsif does not say on which date the dispossession took place, but reading the whole judgment it appears that he was of opinion that the Plaintiff was dispossessed from the disputed land in 1913 by virtue of the delivery of possession to the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in execution of the rent decree against Defendant No. 4. The lower Appellate Court has not found as to when the dispossession took place; but it disposes of the issue "Is the suit barred by limitation" in these words: "In view of the ruling of Kamaldhari Thakur v. Rameswar Singh Bahadur (2) the suit is not time-barred." I think what he means to say is that because the dispossession was by the Defendant in 1913 as purchaser in execution sale, it was not dispossession by him as landlord and so two years' bar of limitation did not apply to the facts of this case and therefore the Plaintiff's suit was not barred by limitation."

On this question as to whether the dispossession under Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act should be dispossession by a person as landlord and not in any other capacity though he happened to be a landlord has been the subject of consideration in a large number of cases and there has been a wide divergence of judicial opinion. All the cases on this point have been collected in the case of Nabin Chandra Saha v. Sheikh Wajid (1) and in the well-known edition of the Bengal Tenancy Act by Mr. Surendra Chandra Sen whose assistance we had in this case appearing as he did for the Appellant, at pp. 856 and 858. It is not necessary for us to refer to those cases, nor do we feel called upon in the particular facts of this case to refer the matter to a Full Bench as we have been invited to do by the learned Vakil for the Respondent. The facts of this case are of a peculiar nature. It has been found, and it is the case of the Plaintiff, that the relationship of landlord and tenant between the Defendant and the Plaintiff continued down to the date of the suit and I take it that it still continues. At the time when the sale in 1913 took place and delivery of possession was given to the Defendant through Court, he was on that date occupying the position of a landlord in respect of the Plaintiff. The collusive decree that was obtained against Defendant No. 4 did not put an end to that relationship and it is on the basis of that relationship that the Plaintiff now comes to Court and demands restitution of property of which she was dispossessed. I need not consider the question as to what would have been the effect if the rent decree were against the Plaintiff and the dispossession had taken place by the Defendant as purchaser in execution of that decree. I may only mention that the ratio of some of the decisions of the class of the case of Kamaldhari Thakur v. Rameswar Singh Bahadur (2) is that the landlord having ceased to be a landlord by purchasing the holding himself in execution of this decree, he subsequently obtained delivery of possession through Court and thereby dispossessed the tenant not as a landlord but as an auction-purchaser. But, here, as I have said, the dispossession was by the Defendant when he was holding the character of a landlord in relation to the Plaintiff. If we look at it from another point of view it appears that the Plaintiff was dispossessed on the 8th December 1913 from the holding as a tenant in respect of the holding. In my judgment Art. 3 applies to a case where dispossession has been by a person who at the time of dispossession, in whatever way the dispossession might take place, either through a civil wrong or by means of criminal force, occupies the position of a landlord or possesses the character of a landlord and had the capacity of the landlord; the dispossession must be taken to have been effected by the landlord. In this view of the finding of the lower Appellate Court I think that Art. 3 is applicable to the facts of this case and the Plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs.

(2) 17 C. W. N. 817 (1913).

PAGE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question in this appeal is whether or not the Plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation. The material article is Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides that a suit by a Plaintiff as a raiyat, (which was the capacity in which the Plaintiff launched the proceedings in this suit), to recover possession of land must be brought within two years from the date when the Plaintiff was dispossessed of the land. It is well-settled that dispossession must be by a landlord. I desire to adopt the observation of Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Rudranarayan Maiti v. Natober Jana (3). Referring to Art. 3 his Lordship says: "This is an article, which after a lapse of a certain time, deprives the Plaintiff of his right to come to Court for the purpose of vindicating a claim which is his and therefore it must be clearly made out that any particular case falls within its terms. We recently had occasion to enter a protest against extending the terms of this article by use of figures of speech and metaphors. What we have to see in each case is whether in fact there has been such dispossession as the article requires. That dispossession, it is conceded, must be by the landlord." There are two findings of fact in this case to which I must refer. The first is that the Plaintiff was dispossessed of the premises more than two years before she launched the present suit; and the second finding is that at the time when she was dispossessed and up till the date when the suit was instituted she was in fact the tenant of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In my opinion these two findings of fact are sufficient to enable us to dispose of this appeal. Upon these facts Art. 3 will bar the claim of the Plaintiff. But it is contended that Art. 3 does not apply because the Defendant No. 2 had obtained a decree for possession against some other person on the ground that such other person was his tenant, and that he obtained possession under that decree. The Court below has found, however, that that proceeding was a fraudulent and collusive proceeding between the parties to it. The Plaintiff was not impleaded in that suit and she was not bound by the decree passed in it. In my opinion, the fact that the Defendants in collusion with a third person obtained possession of these premises by fraud does not affect the position of the Plaintiff. The finding of fact that at the time of dispossession the Plaintiff was the tenant of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 brings into operation Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, notwithstanding the fraudulent device to which the Defendant No. 2 resorted in order to obtain possession. The determination of the question depended upon this finding of fact and in my opinion this appeal should be allowed.

KEDAR NATH BISWAS v. KAMINI SUNDARI DASYA.

REF. NOS. 1 AND 2 OF 1924.

28, January.	NOBADALI, Accused.

Simultaneous trial and disposal of cross-cases, desirability of Police case, if can have precedence over complaint case—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 438, revisional powers of District Magistrate over Subordinate Magistrates, extent of—Sec. 344, Court's powers of postponement or adjournment, extent of.

Two cross-cases were instituted, one upon a Police report and the other upon a complaint, the accused in the one being the complainants in the other. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed the trial of the Police case first and then of the complaint case. The District Magistrate in revision set aside that order and directed the trial of the two cases side by side:

Held—That the policy of the law is that a case should go on, unless it be adjourned, so far as the trial Court is concerned, under the provisions of sec. 344, Cr. P. C., for reasons to be stated in the order. There is, therefore, no justification for the postponement of the trial of the complaint case. The accused in the complaint case, who may be interested in the Police case, cannot in any way be hampered to depose truthfully in the Police case and proving their own version of the case. On the other hand, there is no reason whatever why the complainant in the complaint case should not be allowed to proceed with his case in which he and his co-accused can give their deposition on oath and be in a much better position to substantiate the truth of their version, than as accused persons in the Police case. There is no foundation for the view that a Police case is to have precedence because it is a Police case. To meet the ends of justice, therefore, both the cases should be tried simultaneously and contemporaneously, but should be dealt with wholly separately from each other, each on its own merits and upon the facts and circumstances appearing therein, judgments in the two cases being pronounced, if possible, after both the trials are over.

which he did. If he was of opinion that an order for trial of the two cases side by side was necessary in the interests of justice, his proper course was to make a reference to the High Court under the provisions of sec. 438, Cr. P. C.

These were References under sec. 438, Cr. P. C. made by the Sessions Judge of Birbhum (Mr. K. C. Nag), recommending that the order of the District Magistrate of Birbhum, dated the 15th November 1923, directing the trial of the two cases side by side may be set aside and the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Suri, dated the 9th of November, directing the trial of Case No. 1 first may be restored, for the reasons stated in the Reference.

The Reference was as follows :—

"The Petitioner Sheikh Bahatar lodged a first information at the Illambazar Police Station against Nobadali and others for offences under secs. 147, 225 and 379, I. P. C., on the 1st of October at about 1 A.M. and on the same date Nobadali also lodged a counter complaint to the Illambazar Police Station at 1-30 A.M., which was noted in the Station Diary. On the 11th the Police sent up charge sheet against Nobadali and others under secs. 147, 225 and 379. Meanwhile on the 3rd of October accused Nobadali lodged a petition of complaint against Sheikh Bahatar and others before the Sub-Divisional Officer, Suri; and processes were issued against Bahatar and others. On the 5th November the Sub-Divisional Officer passed an order in the Police case directing the Police to send up witnesses on the 24th November. On the same day that is on 5th November, the accused Nobadali filed a petition before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Suri praying that the petition case might also be proceeded with on the 24th November. Upon this petition the learned Sub-Divisional Officer after calling for the Station Diary passed an order on the 9th November that the Police case would be taken up first. Not being satisfied with the Sub-Divisional Officer's order accused Nobadali filed a petition on the 15th November before the learned District Magistrate of Birbhum praying that the Police case and the petition case started by him should be tried side by side by the same Magistrate and that the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer should be set aside. The learned District Magistrate on the same day without calling for the records of the case and without issuing any notice on Sheikh Bahatar passed an ex parte order directing the Sub-Divisional Officer to deal with the two cases 'side by side' and 'to pronounce judgment as soon as possible in one case after that given in the other."

* * * * *

The portion of the District Magistrate's order directing the Sub-Divisional Officer of Suri to deal with the two cases 'side by side' is, in my opinion erroneous in law and without jurisdiction.

There is no provision of law by which the District Magistrate can directly interfere with the Sub-Divisional Officer's order and as such the learned District Magistrate's order was in my opinion ultra vires and without jurisdiction. Simultaneous trials of two cross-cases have been held to constitute grave irregularity and it has been greatly deprecated in the case of Bechu Mollah v. Sia Ram Singh (1). Now as to the order of trial of these two cases, I think in view of the recent ruling [in Judhisthir Gope v. Sheikh Samir (2)] that the Sub-Divisional Officer was right in holding that the Police case should be proceeded with first as this case was started prior in point of time to the case of Nobadali against Sheikh Bahatar and others. I, therefore, recommend that the District Magistrate's order directing the Sub-Divisional Officer to deal with the two cases side by side be set aside and that the Sub-Divisional Officer's order, dated 9th November 1923, be restored."

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We think the learned District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass the order which he did on the 15th November 1923. If he was of opinion that such an order was necessary in the interest of justice his proper course was to make a reference to this Court under the provisions of sec. 438, Cr. P. C. We accordingly accept this part of the Reference made by the learned Sessions Judge and set aside the said order of the learned District Magistrate.

With reference to the other recommendation made by the learned Sessions Judge, viz., that the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, dated the 5th November 1923, be restored, we are not prepared to accept his recommendation. He has referred to two cases in his letter of Reference in support of the recommendation that he has made, viz., (i) Bechu Molla v. Sia Ram Singh (1) and (ii) Judhisthir Gope v. Sheikh Samir (2). The decision in the latter case rested on its special features, viz., that the two cases were being tried by two different Courts, and in one of the cases the prosecution case had been closed and charge framed whereas in the other practically very little had been done, and under those circumstances it was held that it was desirable to hold the trials in one Court and to finish the trial which had nearly come to an end. With regard to the former case the authority of the observations which, by the way, were not the foundations of the decision therein was very much weakened in consequence of a later decision of this Court in Queen-Empress v. Chandra Bhuiya (3).

We propose to consider the matter from the point of view of first principles and in doing so we shall for the sake of brevity call the case against Nobadali and others as the Police case and the case against Sheikh Bahatar and others as the complaint case, since they have been started, respectively, upon a Police report and a complaint. We start with the position that the Police case is to go on immediately : in fact no application has been made by any party to have it postponed and none has suggested that it should not be taken up at once. The question is whether the complaint case should not also be started at once. Now, the policy of the law is that it should go on, unless it be adjourned so far as the trial Court is concerned, under the provisions of sec. 344, Cr. P. C. Under the provisions of that section, "if from the absence of a witness or any other reasonable cause, it becomes necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of or adjourn any enquiry or trial, the Court may, if it thinks fit, by order in writing, stating the reasons therefor postpone or adjourn the same." In this case no reasons have been recorded by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate. His order simply runs thus :—"Seen. The Police case will be taken up first." It is for us, then, to enquire : Is there any reasonable cause, which may justify the order?

The accused in the complaint case who may be interested in the Police case cannot very well say that they will in any way be prejudiced. They cannot say that they will not permit the complainant in the complaint case in which processes have issued against them on the footing that a primâ facie case had been made out to proceed with his case merely because the Police case is pending. There is nothing to prevent them from proving their own version in the Police case. They cannot in fairness be permitted to say that as they are accused in the complaint case, they will in any way be hampered to depose truthfully as they are expected to do in the Police case in which they expect to secure a conviction of their opponents. On the other hand, there is no reason whatever why the complainant in the complaint case should not be allowed to proceed with his case in which he and his co-accused can give their deposition on oath and are in a much better position to substantiate the truth of their version, than as accused persons in the Police case. Of course if they had asked for an adjournment of the complaint case on the ground that being accused persons in the Police case they will be handicapped in going into the witness-box and give their deposition on oath, other considerations would have arisen; but it is they who want a simultaneous trial, presumably because they will be benefited and not prejudiced by the adoption of that course. There is no foundation for the view that a Police case is to have precedence because it is a Police case: and so far as order of institution is concerned it appears to us that upon the facts appearing on the records to say that the Police case was instituted earlier in point of time is a mere fiction.

We accordingly pass the following order which seems to us to meet the ends of justice in this case. The two cases should be tried simultaneously and contemporaneously, but should be dealt with wholly separately from each other, each on its own merits and upon the facts and circumstances appearing therein; judgments in the two cases being pronounced, if possible, after both the trials are over.

GREAVES, J. PANTON, J. 1923, Heard, 7 and 10, December. Judgment, 20, December.	BHOLANATH DAS and others, Petitioners, v. EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs 61 and 167, procedure when investigation cannot be completed in twenty four hours—Sec. 190 (1) (b), Magistrate if can take cognizance of cognizable offence upon report of a Police Officer which is not a "Police report" under sec 173—Sec 344, Magistrate's powers of postponement and adjournment.

The law laid down by secs. 61, 167, 169 and 190 (1) (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code is that at the expiration of the maximum period of 15 days' detention of an accused person and the additional time necessary to bring him before a Magistrate allowed under secs. 61 and 167, an accused must either be released by the Police under sec. 169, security for his appearance if and when required being taken, or the Magistrate, empowered in that behalf, must either take cognizance if he has before him a Police report (which ordinarily would be a report in the form laid down in sec. 173) which he thinks made out a primâ facie case or he must release him.

The provisions of sec. 190 extend to any offence and notwithstanding the use of the words "Police report" in sec. 173, sec. 190 (1) (b) cannot be restricted merely to non-cognizable offences, and a Magistrate is empowered by sec. 190 (1) (b) to take cognizance both in cognizable and non-cognizable offences upon a report such as is mentioned in sec. 190 (1) (b).

After a Magistrate has taken cognizance of a case his powers of postponement and adjournment are regulated by sec. 344, Cr. P. C.

This was a Rule granted on the 8th October 1923 against an order refusing application for bail by the Police Magistrate of Sealdah on 2nd October 1923, which order was affirmed by the Sessions Judge of the 24-Perganas (Mr. G. N. Roy) on the 5th October 1923.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerji, Satindra Nath Mukerjee, Narendra Nath Mitra and Promotha Nath Mitra for the Petitioners.

Mr. Camell for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We have already directed that some of the Petitioners are to be released on bail but the questions of law raised by the learned Vakil of the Petitioner remain to be decided.

The facts are as follows :—One Promotha Nath Das was arrested in June of this year, he was brought before the Additional Magistrate of Alipore on the 7th June when he made a confession which was recorded. As a result of Promotha's confession the Petitioners were arrested on the 5th August and on the 20th August they were brought before the Police Magistrate of Sealdah and a letter from the investigating Police Officer was received, their application for bail was refused and the case was adjourned to the 4th September. On the 4th September the case was again adjourned until the 18th September when a Magistrate, who had been deputed to verify Promotha's confession, was examined and the case was adjourned to the 2nd October. One of the accused Nagendra was subsequently released on bail by this Court on the ground that there was at that time no Police report and that no cognizance of the case had been taken by the Police Magistrate. On the 2nd October the case was again adjourned until the 13th October, bail was asked for and refused. An application for bail made to the Sessions Judge of Alipore was rejected by him on the 3rd October. On the 5th October a report from Inspector M. M. Sinha was filed before the Police Magistrate who on the 6th October took cognizance purporting to act on the report under the provisions of sec. 190 (1) (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The accused were remanded on the 13th October until November 3rd when the Inspector was examined and they were remanded until November 15th on which day they were again remanded until November 30th. This Rule was granted on the 8th October and when it came before us on the 7th and 10th December the accused were still in custody. Four points were urged before us. First, it is said that the detention of the Petitioners is illegal as the Magistrate has not taken cognizance. Secondly, it is said that if he has taken cognizance he was not justified in doing so upon the report which was before him as it is not a report under sec. 173 of Code of Criminal Procedure and it is said that the Magistrate could only take cognizance in respect of a cognizable offence upon a report in the form contemplated in sec. 173. Thirdly, it is said that if the Magistrate was justified in taking cognizance upon a report not in the form contemplated by sec. 173, the report before him did not contain sufficient materials to enable him to take cognizance. Fourthly, it is said that if he has rightly taken cognizance under this report he is not justified in granting adjournments to enable the Police to complete their investigations and that since he has taken cognizance he must proceed with the case and only grant such adjournments as are necessary to obtain the atttendance of the witnesses and as may be necessitated by the exigencies of his own work.

Sec. 61 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that no Police Officer shall detain in custody a person arrested without warrant for longer than is reasonable under the circumstances of the case and that such period shall not exceed 24 hours in the absence of a special order of a Magistrate under sec. 167, exclusive of the time necessary to bring the accused before a Magistrate. The Rule was not directed to the point whether the provisions of sec. 61 were complied with and we are unable to say what actually occurred.

Sec. 167 empowers Magistrates when a person is arrested and detained in custody and it appears that the investigation cannot be completed within the 24 hours fixed by sec. 61 and when there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well founded to authorize his detention for a term not exceeding 15 days in all.

The Magistrate in the present case apparently considered that he took cognizance on the 20th August but as has been pointed out by Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Chatterjee there was nothing before him upon which he could take cognizance of the case on that day. The 24 hours' detention and the additional time necessary to bring an accused before a Magistrate allowed by sec. 61 and the fifteen days' additional detention allowed by sec. 167 having expired, an accused must either be released by the Police under the provisions of sec. 169, security being taken for his appearance before a Magistrate, if and when required, or the accused must, under the provisions of sec. 170, be forwarded under custody to a Magistrate who is empowered to take cognizance of the offence upon a Police report. The law as laid down in the sections of the Criminal Procedure Code to which I have referred seems to me to be this that at the expiration of the maximum period of 15 days' detention of an accused person and the additional time necessary to bring him before a Magistrate allowed under secs. 61 and 167, an accused must either be released by the Police under sec. 169, security for his appearance if and when required being taken, or the Magistrate, empowered in that behalf, must either take cognizance if he has before him a Police report (which ordinarily would be a report in the form laid down in sec. 173) which he thinks makes out a primâ facie case or he must release him.

In the present case the Magistrate has purported to take cognizance upon a report, which the Crown admits, is not a Police report as contemplated by sec. 173. The Crown say that he was justified in so doing by reason of the provisions of sec. 190 (1) (b) which provides that a Magistrate empowered in that behalf may take cognizance of any offence upon a report in writing made by any Police Officer. It is said on behalf of the Petitioners that having regard to the words in sec. 170 "empowered to take cognizance of the offence upon a Police report" the words of sec. 190 (1) (b) must refer not to a cognizable offence but to a non-cognizable offence and it is said that in the case of a cognizable offence, having regard to the clear words of sec. 170 to which I have referred, a Magistrate can only take cognizance upon a Police report as contemplated by sec. 173 and upon no other report. There is, I think, considerable force in this argument but after all the provisions of sec. 190 extend to any offence and I think, notwithstanding the use of the words "Police report" in sec. 173, that sec. 190 (1) (b) cannot be restricted merely to non-cognizable offences and that a Magistrate is empowered by sec. 190 (1) (b) to take cognizance both of cognizable and non-cognizable offences upon a report such as is mentioned in sec. 190 (1) (b).

This disposes of points 1 and 2. As to point three we have read the report and we are not prepared to say that the Magistrate was not justified in taking cognizance thereon. As to the 4th point since the Magistrate has taken cognizance I think his powers of postponement and adjournment are regulated by sec. 344. To the extent indicated in our order of the 10th December we make the Rule absolute.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

LORD BUCKMASTER. LORD DUNEDIN. LORD CARSON. SIR JOHN EDGE. LORD SALVESEN. 1923, Heard, 27, April. Judgment, 26, June.	A. S. S. SUBBAIYA PANDARAM, Appellant, v. MUHAMAD MUSTAPHA MARACAYAR (since deceased) and ors., Respondents.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 10, Arts. 134, 144—Trustee, decree against—Purchase of endowed property in execution—Purchaser's possession, if adverse and from when—Decree against purchaser declaring property trust property, if res judicata—Cases of permanent leases by trustees, how distinguishable.

The purchaser of endowed property in execution of a decree against the trustee for the time being acquires title to the purchased property by adverse possession for 12 years under either Art. 134 or. Art. 144 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act.

A decree obtained by the succeeding trustee subsequent to the purchase in a suit to which the purchaser was a party declaring the property to be trust property, so far from preventing the purchaser from asserting his adverse claim to the property, merely emphasised the fact that it was adverse.

In view of the provisions of sec. 10 of the Act, the purchaser was not prevented from relying on the bar of limitation by reason of the fact that the property was to his knowledge trust property after the date of the decree.

SRI SRI ISHWAR SHYAM CHAND JIU v. RAM KANAI GHOSE (1) and VIDYA VARUTHI THIRTHA v. BALUSAMI AYYAR (2) are distinguishable in that in both the attempt on the part of the trustee was to dispose of trust property by a permanent mokurari lease which being good for the grantor's life the possession became adverse only when his successor assumed office.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 31st August 1916 of the High Court at Madras affirming a decree of the Subordinate Court of Tanjore, dated the 19th November 1915.

The suit was brought by the Appellant as Dharmakarta to recover lands dedicated to charitable purposes in 1890 and 1894.

The dedications were made by the Ap-pellant's grand-father and on his death the Appellant's father, Arunachellam, became Dharmakarta. In 1898 the property was brought to sale under a decree against Arunachellam and was purchased by the Respondent Maracayar (since deceased) who obtained possession on the 11th August 1898.

In 1900 the Appellant obtained a declaration that the properties were subject to charitable trusts, and to this suit the Respondent Maracayar was a party.

The decree was affirmed by the High Court on appeal in 1904.

In 1897 the Appellant had filed a suit to obtain possession of the property but his suit was dismissed on the ground that he was incompetent to sue while his father was sole trustee.

The Appellant attained his majority in 1910 and in 1913 he obtained a decree for the removal of his father from the trusteeship and two days' later filed this suit for the recovery of the property.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as barred by limitation on the ground that the Respondents had been in possession for more than 12 years.

On appeal the High Court agreed with the finding of the District Judge and held that the suit was barred by limitation under either Art 142 or 144 of the Limitation Act.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant.—The decision in 1900, affirmed by the High Court in 1904 that the property was in fact trust property, operates as "res judicata" against the Respondents and prevents them from contending that the property is their own.

Nasarat-ullah v. Mujib-ullah (3).

The Respondents had notice of the trust and so became constructive trustees at any rate subsequent to that decision. Their possession therefore was not adverse and they cannot obtain a title by presumption. There was no limit of time for the institution of this suit.

Sec. 10, Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1908.

Ram Kanai Ghosh v. Hari Narain Singh (4) relied on by the High Court was reversed by the Privy Council in Ishwar Shyam Chand Jiu v. Ram Kanai Ghose (1) though not on this particular point. That decision and the decision of the Privy Council in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (2) are conclusive that a fresh period of limitation commences on the appointment of a new trustee.

On the removal of Arunachellam from the trusteeship in 1913 any title which the purchaser had acquired then ceased.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Respondents.—On obtaining the declaration that the property was subject to a trust it was open to the Plaintiff to get a reconveyance to the charity in execution. Such execution was not taken out within three years and the Plaintiff's remedy became barred. Singaravelu Mudaliar v. Chokka Mudaliar (5).

If sec. 10 of the Limitation Act applies the Respondents being execution creditors and therefore assignees for valuable consideration are excluded from the operation, Chintamoni Mahapatra v. Sarup Se (6).

If sec. 10 is not applicable then either Arts. 11, 134 or 144 applies and the suit is barred.

The fact that different trustees are in possession of the property is immaterial, Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (7).

Mr. Kenworthy Brown replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The real question in this appeal is whether the suit is barred by the operation of the Statute of Limitation.

It was instituted by the Appellant to recover, as against a purchaser under an execution sale and those who claimed under him, certain property which had by two deeds dated the 21st February 1890 and the 13th December 1894 been devoted to charitable purposes. The first of these two documents declared that the heirs of the settlor in the order of primogeniture should be trustees and conduct the said charities. The settlor died in 1895, leaving him surviving his widow and Arunachellam, his only son. Arunachellam is the father of the present Appellant. He was trustee of the charity and having become involved in debt one of his creditors sued him and obtained a decree in execution of which the endowments of the charity were attached. The settlor's widow, on behalf of the Appellant who was then an infant, filed an objection to the attachment, but it was dismissed on the ground that during the life-time of the Appellant's father he had no locus standi. In the same year another suit was instituted by the minor acting through the same next friend seeking to establish the validity of both the deeds, and while this suit was pending, the property was brought to sale under the decree against Arunachellam on the 22nd March 1898. It was purchased by Maracayar who is since deceased, and whose legal personal representatives are the Respondents Nos. 4 to 8 of this appeal; the sale was confirmed on the 11th August 1898, and delivery of possession was made to the purchaser, the settlor's widow being removed from possession. From that day until the institution of these proceedings the purchaser and those claiming under him have been in uninterrupted possession of the property.

On the 31st December 1900, it was declared in the second suit of 1897 that the properties, including those seized under the execution sale, formed a trust estate for the purpose specified in the deed. On the 9th November 1911, the Appellant, who had come of age on the 6th August 1910, petitioned the District Court asking for leave to bring a suit to remove Arunachellam from the office of trustee, and such leave was granted; the suit for removal was accordingly instituted and on the 21st July 1913, a decree was obtained removing Arunachellam, and the Appellant succeeded as trustee. The present suit was then brought on the 23rd July 1913, to recover the property. Both the learned Judge, before whom the matter first came, and the learned Judges of the High Court have decided against the Appellant but on different grounds; the result of the decisions was, however, in their Lordships' opinion, correct.

There is no doubt that whatever period of limitation be assigned, the full period had run before these proceedings were instituted, unless it could be alleged that by virtue of the proceedings to which reference has been made, there was some interruption in the period.

Now the real argument in favour of the Appellant was that in the presence of the purchaser it was declared that the trust had been validly created and that the property was, in fact, trust property, and it is suggested that this effects res judicata as against the Respondents, and prevents them from now asserting that the property is their own. Their Lordships do not think that the decree had that effect. At the moment when it was passed the possession of the purchaser was adverse, and the declaration that the property had been properly made subject to a trust disposition, and therefore ought not to have been seized, did not disturb or affect the quality of his possession; it merely emphasised the fact that it was adverse. No further step was taken in consequence of that declaration until the present proceedings were instituted, when it was too late.

A further argument has been put forward to the effect that the Statute of Limitation begins to run afresh as each new trustee succeeds to the office, and in support of that view reliance is placed in the case of Sri Sri Ishwar Shyam Chand Jiu v. Ram Kanai Ghose (1) and in the case of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (2) but these authorities do not assist the Appellant. In each case they relate to the effect of an attempt on the part of a trustee to dispose of the property by a permanent mokurari lease. This he has no power to do, though he is at liberty to dispose of it during the period of his life and a grant made for a longer period is good, but good only to the extent of his own life interest. It follows, therefore, that possession during his life is not adverse, and that upon his death the succeeding trustee would be at liberty to institute proceedings to recover the estate, and the statute would only run against him as from the time when he assumed the office. Such an argument has no relation to the case where, as here, property has been acquired under an execution sale and possession retained throughout. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that this suit is barred either under sec. 134 or 144 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act. The former fixes the period as 12 years where the suit is to recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration; and the latter assigns the same period where the claim is for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein not thereby otherwise specially provided for.

This is not, in fact, a transfer by the trustee himself for a valuable consideration, though there is little difference in principle between a transfer under an adverse execution and a sale by the trustee himself; but disregarding that section, sec. 144 covers the exact case. Further, sec. 10 of the Limitation Act appears also to contemplate the exact position: it is in these terms:—

"10. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property, or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time."

and it shows that, where it is sought to follow trust property, as in the present case, on the ground that the person in possession knew that it was trust estate, the claim is not barred, excepting in a case of assigns for valuable consideration, and the exception shows that in that event the claim may be defeated by adverse possession. The purchaser in the present case is clearly within the terms of the exception, and consequently he is not prevented, by reason of the fact that the property was to his knowledge trust property after the date of the decree, from relying on the provisions of the statute which limit the time within which suits must be brought for recovery.

(1) L. R. 38 I. A. 76: s. c. I. L. R. 38 Cal. 526; 15 C. W. N. 417 (1911).

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

L. executed in favour of V. an English mortgage in July 1910 in consideration of the latter securing an advance by means of drafts to be discounted by the Bank of Bengal. In June 1911, a supplemental mortgage was executed between the parties and it was arranged that the requisite money would be provided by the Bank by cash credit to L. A promissory note was given by L. to V., who endorsed it to the Bank and executed a deed of guarantee in favour of the Bank for the sum advanced to L., who executed a deed of further charge in favour of V. in order to enable him to execute the deed of guarantee. Subsequently the Bank having called upon L. and V. to furnish further security for overdrafts made, a fresh deed, not stamped and attested as a mortgage, was executed in February 1914, by which V. transferred to the Bank the full benefit of the securities created by the deeds of July 1910 and June 1911; and in consideration of such transfer, the Bank released V. from all liability under the drafts discounted by the Bank as also under the promissory note and the guarantee. This was an appeal preferred on the 15th of September 1921 against the decree of Babu N. G. Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, 6th Court, Zillah Dacca, dated the 29th July 1921.

The facts material to this report are as follows:—One Lucas, a jute merchant, executed an indenture of English mortgage on 8th July 1910 in favour of a firm named Vertannes and Bertram. The deed provided that Vertannes and Bertram would finance Lucas in his business. This mortgage was on 26th June 1911 followed by a supplemental indenture of mortgage which acknowledged the debt due on the security of 1910 and contained an arrangement whereby a previous broker and financier of Lucas was to be paid off by an advance by the Bank of Bengal by way of cash credit to Lucas. The advance was to be made on the security of a promissory note drawn by Lucas in favour of Vertannes and Bertram and endorsed by them, to the Bank of Bengal. Vertannes and Bertram executed a deed guaranteeing to the Bank payment of the balance for the time being owing to the Bank by Lucas. Lucas also executed a further deed of charge in favour of Vertannes and Bertram in order to enable them to execute the said deed of guarantee. In 1912 Bertram died and letters of administration were granted to the Administrator-General of Bengal in 1913. Subsequently the Bank having called upon Lucas and Vertannes and the representatives of Bertram to furnish further security in respect of overdrafts, on the 4th February 1914 an indenture purporting to be supplemental to the mortgage deeds of 1910 and 1911 was entered into by all parties—the Bank, Lucas, Vertannes and the Administrator-General. By this deed Vertannes and the Administrator-General transferred to the Bank the full benefit of the securities created by the deeds of July 1910 and June 1911 and in consideration of such transfer the Bank released Vertannes and the representatives of Bertram from all liability under the drafts discounted by the Bank, as also under the promissory note and the guarantee. This document was not stamped or attested as a mortgage but as a transfer of mortgage. The question in the present suit largely arose upon this instrument. As Lucas

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff to enforce a charge upon immovable property for the realisation of a sum of Rs. 78,504-10-2 with interest pendente lite and costs. The transactions which have led up to this litigation are evidenced by four deeds, whose substance must be stated concisely for the elucidation of the points in controversy.

Lucas, the first Defendant, is a dealer in jute. On the 6th April 1908, he executed an equitable mortgage (which for the sake of brevity may be called A) by deposit of title deeds in favour of his broker, Thaddeus, who financed him in his business. On the 8th July 1910, Lucas executed in favour of Vertannes and Bertram, an English mortgage (which for the sake of brevity may be called B) of the properties covered by A. According to the recitals in this document, Lucas was indebted to Thaddeus under A to the extent of Rs. 63,560 approximately. The arrangement was that the mortgagees should be the sole brokers of the mortgagor during the continuance of the security, and that they should secure an advance of Rs. 50,000 by means of drafts to be drawn by one of them in favour of the other and to be discounted by the Bank of Bengal. On the 26th June 1911, a supplemental indenture of mortgage (which for the sake of brevity may be called C) was executed. According to recitals in this deed, there was due to Thaddeus, under A, a sum of Rs. 65,000 approximately, and to Vertannes and Bertram, under B, a sum of Rs. 10,755-15-0. The arrangement was that Thaddeus should be paid off, the requisite money to be provided by the Bank of Bengal by way of cash credit to Lucas. A promissory note was given by Lucas to Vertannes and Bertram and was endorsed by them to the Bank of Bengal. The Bank placed Rs. 65,000 in the hands of Lucas, and with this sum Thaddeus was fully paid off. Thaddeus at the same time executed a deed of release in favour of Lucas. Vertannes and Bertram simultaneously executed a deed of guarantee in favour of the Bank for the sum advanced to Lucas, and Lucas executed a deed of further charge in favour of Vertannes and Bertram in order to enable them to execute the deed of guarantee. Bertram died on the 27th of December 1912, and letters of administration in respect of his estate were taken out by the Administrator-General on the 17th January 1913. On the 4th February 1914, a fresh deed was executed which for the sake of brevity may be called D. This purports to be supplemental to B and C, and the parties to the document were Lucas, Vertannes, the Administrator-General and the Bank of Bengal. The document was neither stamped nor attested as a mortgage, but was treated as a transfer of mortgage. The recitals show that at the time there was due to the Bank a sum of Rs. 74,017-1-4, namely, Rs. 13,084-13-7 on account of drafts discounted in conformity with the arrangements embodied in B, and Rs. 60,932 on the cash credit opened on the basis of C. The Bank, it is recited, had called upon Lucas, Vertannes and the representatives of Bertram to furnish further security in respect of this sum. The arrangement was that Vertannes and the Administrator-General should transfer to the Bank the full benefit of the securities created by B and C and that in consideration of such transfer the Bank should release Vertannes and the representatives of Bertram from all liability under the drafts discounted by the Bank, as also under the promissory note and the guarantee. Lucas had not satisfied the debt due to the Bank; thereupon the present suit was instituted by the Bank on the 20th December 1917. Lucas was made the first Defendant. Puisne mortgagees from Lucas, the proprietors of a firm named Gourchandra Das, were joined as Defendants Nos. 2 to 16. Vertannes and the Administrator-General were placed on the record as pro formâ Defendants Nos. 17 and 18. In the plaint as originally framed, the claim was founded on D, the deed of the 4th February 1914. The plaint was however subsequently amended on the 6th January 1919, so as to enable the Bank to take advantage of B and C, the mortgages dated the 8th July 1910 and the 29th June 1911. The Defendants contested the claim on every conceivable ground as will appear from the eighteen issues raised:

I. Has the Plaintiff Bank of Bengal cause of action?

II. Is the suit maintainable in its present form?

III. Is the suit for sale based on the document of the 4th February 1914, maintainable and enforceable against the Defendant No. 17? Is the deed as pleaded by the Defendant No. 1 an English mortgage and is it sufficiently stamped and attested? If so, has this Court jurisdiction to entertain the suit on such a mortgage?

IV. Have the rights, titles and interests of the Defendants Nos. 17 and 18 been legally transferred to the Plaintiff Bank? If not, can Plaintiff proceed with the suit?

V. Was there any contract between the parties relating to the law charges? Are they correct and are they recoverable in the present suit?

VI. Was there any contract between the parties as to insurance charges? If not, is the same maintainable and recoverable in the present suit?

VII. Was the Plaintiff's agent authorised to make any payment for insurance charges and can any such payment be a charge on the mortgaged properties?

VIII. Was there any contract for payment of compound interest and is it recoverable? Is the account annexed to the plaint correct?

IX. Has the sum of Rs. 7,543-15-0 been paid to the Defendants Nos. 17 and 18 by the Defendant No. 1? If so, is anything due by the Defendant to the Plaintiff under the indenture of 1910?

X. Is the account contained in the document of 1914 correct and due by the Defendant? Can it be a charge on the mortgaged properties?

XI. Is the Indenture, dated 4th February 1914, properly drafted, endorsed, signed and stamped with the knowledge of the Defendant? Were the properties described in Schs. A and B mortgaged to the Plaintiff Bank?

XII. To what relief, if any, is the Plaintiff entitled?

BANK OF BENGAL v. WILLIAM ARRATOON LUCAS.

XIII. Did the Plaintiff Bank advance Rs. 65,000 on the security of the immoveable properties to the Defendant No. 1? If not, can the Bank enforce the claim under law?

XIV. Was the bond of 1911 legally attested and presented for registration and did any consideration under the same? Can the Plaintiff enforce any lien under the same?

XV. Has the Plaintiff acquired any right under the deed of 1914 with respect to the deed of 1911?

XVI. Can the Plaintiff enforce the lien in respect of the bond of 1908 in favour of Thaddeus? Is that lien still alive?

XVII. Is the claim of the Plaintiff on the basis of pronote barred by limitation?

XVIII. Should the suit fail for non-substitution of the legal representatives of the Defendant No. 12 in time?

The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit. On the present appeal, the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed as erroneous, both on the facts and in law. I shall first consider the three substantial questions of fact which have emerged from the arguments addressed to us, namely, first, was the Bank of Bengal the real mortgagee under the deed of the 29th June 1911; secondly, was the mortgage of the 29th June 1911, duly executed and attested: and thirdly, was the indenture of the 4th February 1914, executed by Lucas under circumstances which entitle him to treat it as inoperative in so far as he is concerned. In my judgment, the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge upon each of these points are erroneous and cannot be supported.

As regards the first point, it was argued in the Court below that Vertannes and Bertram were set up by the Bank as ostensible mortgagees, because the authorities were anxious to circumvent the provisions of secs. 36 and 37 of the Presidency Banks Act. This theory found favour with the Subordinate Judge, though no solid foundation was laid for such a case in the evidence. The Subordinate Judge based his conclusion on this part of the case on mere suspicion, contrary to the elementary rule that the burden lies heavily upon those who claim against the tenor of a deed to establish by evidence that the real transaction was different from the apparent. The senior Government pleader very properly declined to support the view taken by the Subordinate Judge on this matter.

As regards the second point, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the mortgage of the 29th June 1911 had not been duly attested, and he relied principally upon the evidence of Lucas as to what had happened at the time of execution. After a careful study of the evidence of Lucas, I have not been able to adopt the conclusion that he may be unreservedly treated as a witness of truth; he is so vitally interested in the result of this litigation that it would not be safe to act upon his assertions without independent corroboration. With regard to the question of attestation, his story, taken by itself, is most improbable, and no reason was even suggested why a witness of the position of Stapledon, a member of a well-known firm of solicitors, should have attested a signature which had not been made in his presence. Stapledon was first examined on commission on the 12th August 1918, and the point was then not cleared up. The reason is obvious; at that stage, the claim was rested solely on the document of the 4th February 1914, and no one realised the vital importance of the question of attestation of the mortgage of the 29th June 1911 till the plaint had been amended on the 6th January 1919. An application was made to the Subordinate Judge at the close of the trial for leave to examine Stapledon. He refused the application, as, in his judgment, his view upon other points in the case rendered the question of attestation immaterial: but he did record the opinion that he would have been inclined to afford an opportunity to the Bank to examine Stapledon if the decision of the case had hinged on the point. After we had heard arguments in this appeal for a considerable time, we felt convinced that this point should be cleared up in the interests of justice. The original document purports, on the face of it, to have been attested by two witnesses, Stapledon and Evenett. Their signatures are so placed on the document that presumably they signed after the document had been executed in their presence; Binoy Bhushan Ray v. Dhirendranath Dey (1). The case was covered obviously by both cls. (a) and (b) of Or. 41, r. 27 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under cl. (a), the Appellate Court may allow additional evidence, if the trial Court has refused to admit evidence which should have been admitted. Under cl. (b), the Appellate Court may allow additional evidence, if it requires such evidence to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause. We decided accordingly to examine both Stapledon and Evenett; the course adopted is supported by the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Kessowji Issur v. G. I. P. Ry. Co. (2) and Raja Indrajit Pratap v. Amar Singh (3). Stapledon and Evenett were thereupon examined, and their testimony left no doubt that the mortgage deed of the 29th June 1911, had been duly attested by them after they had witnessed its execution. The Respondents were allowed full opportunity to bring forward additional evidence, if they so wished. They intimated that they had no desire to rebut this evidence. On the record as it now stands, I feel convinced that the mortgage of the 29th June 1911, was duly executed and attested. As regards the third point, the Subordinate Judge has held that Lucas is not bound by the deed of the 4th February 1914. His conclusion is based chiefly, if not entirely, upon the assertions of Lucas. The story of execution of the document by Lucas is by no means convincing and is not sufficient to support a case either of fraud or of undue influence. Lucas was a man of business and was in no sense a novice. If it be his case that he affixed his signature to the deed in the belief that it was something other than what it purports to be, his evidence does not bear out such a theory. The attempt, in such circumstances, to take advantage of the principle enunciated in the class of cases of which Foster v. Mackinnon (4) and Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg (5) may be taken as the types, is futile. Nor is foundation laid in the evidence for a case of undue influence under the provisions of the Indian Contract Act; there is no question of confidence reposed and betrayed, much less of domination of his will to obtain an unfair advantage over him, within the meaning of sec. 16 which was expounded by Lord Shaw in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Poosathurai v. Kannappa Chettiar (6). The outstanding fact cannot moreover be ignored that since the 4th February 1914, Lucas has made no attempt to obtain cancellation of the deed of that date, and delay and acquiescence must throw serious doubts upon the genuineness of his defence; Allard v. Skinner (7) and Wright v. Vanderplank (8). In my opinion, the endeavour of Lucas to wriggle out of the transaction of the 4th February 1914 is bound to end in failure.

I shall next consider the two substantial questions of law involved in the appeal, namely, first, is the Bank entitled to relief on the basis of either the indenture of the 4th February 1914, or the mortgages of the 8th July 1910 and the 29th June 1911; and secondly, whether Lucas is, in this suit, entitled to re-open the accounts as between himself and Vertannes and the representatives of Bertram.

As regards the first question, there has been some discussion at the Bar as to the exact nature of the indenture of the 4th February 1914, which was neither stamped nor attested as a mortgage, but was taken to be a transfer of a mortgage. It is well-settled that in determining whether an instrument is liable to duty as a transfer only or to the full duty of a mortgage, the Court will look at the substance of the transaction and not merely at the form of the instrument; City of London Brewery Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (9). Thus, where a deed was executed by a mortgagor, professing to be a transfer of a mortgage for £150 and a security for a further advance of £70, on which sum the stamp was calculated, upon objection taken that the deed in fact amounted to an original mortgage for £220, as the original mortgagee did not execute it, it was ruled that it could not fairly be said so to operate and that the stamp was sufficient; Doe L. Snell v. Tom (10). On the other hand, in Berham v. Earl of Thanet (11), where the mortgagee assigned a part of the mortgage debt and joined with the heir of the mortgagor in conveying part of the mortgage lands to a new mortgagee, with a new proviso and at a new rate of interest and with a bond and a covenant, the transaction was regarded as a new mortgage. But it may be taken as a general rule that the introduction of a new proviso for redemption in the assignment of a mortgage is not by itself sufficient to constitute a new mortgage. In the absence, however, of a statutory provision like that embodied in sec. 27 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which prescribes forms of statutory transfer of mortgage, there is no reason why a document should not be of a mixed character, namely, a transfer of a mortgage as also a new mortgage. In this view, the Bank would be entitled to take advantage of the deed of the 4th February 1914, which, as a deed of transfer of mortgage, does not require attestation; and if any question of stamp duty could arise on such a view, the defect could be remedied by payment of penalty. In the events which have happened, the Bank is, in my opinion, entitled to the securities held by Vertannes and Bertram. If the deed of the 4th February 1914, be deemed inoperative in law, contrary to the true intention of all parties, they must be relegated to the position they would have occupied if that deed had never been executed: Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Prasad (12).

I do not feel called upon to review here the history of the development of the well-settled rule relating to a creditor's right to his surety's securities. It is sufficient to state that it was held in an early case, Maure v. Harrison (13), that if the principal gave any security to the surety for his indemnification, the creditor was entitled to the benefit thereof. "A bond creditor shall, in this Court, have the benefit of all counterbonds, all collateral security given by the principal to the surety; and if A owes B money, and he and C are bound for it, and A gives C a mortgage or bond to indemnify him, B shall have the benefit of it to recover his debt." But this pronouncement has stood by itself and was not accepted by Lord Eldon in Exp. Waring (14). The later decision in Re: Walker (15) shows that there is no authority for the unqualified proposition that the principal creditor is entitled to the benefit of every collateral security given by the principal debtor to the surety, or that, as was said in Moses v. Murgatroid (16), all securities given by a principal to his surety are held in trust. This theory of trust is rested on the analogy derivable from the class of cases where the remedies of a creditor against the principal debtor are transferred to a surety who has paid the debt (Story on Equity Jurisprudence, sec. 638). The application, however, of the principle of subrogation, as expounded in Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (17), is by no means free from difficulty. In the case where the remedies of the creditor are transferred to the surety, who has paid the debt, the payment by the surety extinguishes the creditor's claim, and what he seeks is a substitution to the creditor's remedies against the principal debtor. Where this does not happen, there can be no question of substitution proper, for the receipt of the surety's securities by a creditor does not relieve the surety from liability in case the securities prove insufficient. The relief by substitution is extended on the assumption that the debt has been or is to be paid in full, so that further detention of the security is against equity. Another objection to substitution may be found in the fact that the security being for the indemnity of the surety, he has no right to it till he has been damnified by payment; the creditor's remedies against the principal debtor, on the other hand, ripen as soon as there has been a refusal to pay. By subrogating the surety to the creditor's remedies against his debtor, the burden is finally placed where it belongs, and therein lies the equity of the transaction. No such object is attained in doing the converse of this, where the only result is to place the creditor in a position of advantage which he cannot claim. The burden in the latter case is not always placed where it belongs; if the securities are sufficient in value, the burden will take care of itself, if they are insufficient, the loss will fall, in part at least, on the surety. The view adopted by Lord Eldon in Exp. Waring (14) must consequently be regarded as well-founded on principle, and a creditor can derive no benefit from securities given by the principal to the surety, unless he can show a direct interest in them by contract or under a trust or unless both principal and surety are bankrupt and the rule in the decision just mentioned applies. In this connection reference may be made to the decisions in Exp. Rushforth (18), Wright v. Morley (19), Wilding v. Richards (20), Powles v. Hargreaves (21), Bechervaise v. Lewis (22) and Vaughan v. Halliday (23). It is worthy of note that the rule in Exp. Waring (14) was not applied in the Scotch case, Royal Bank of Scotland v. Commercial Bank of Scotland (24). According to the Scotch rule, the surety has no right to the security, except to indemnify himself for payments actually made; nor have the bill-holders any direct claim, though both principal and surety are insolvents; but if the surety's estate pays a dividend for which it is reimbursed out of the security, a new general asset is created; thus, incidentally, in the winding up of the surety's estate, all the creditors derive a certain benefit from the indemnity fund; whatever may remain of the latter goes back to the principal's estate. I need not pursue the point further; for apart from these considerations, if the rights of the surety have in effect been assigned to the Bank, as in my judgment they have been, the Bank is entitled to enforce the remedies available to the surety.

As regards the second point, it is plain that Lucas is not entitled to re-open in the present litigation the accounts as between himself on the one hand, and Vertannes and the representatives of Bertram on the other. The latter were, no doubt, made parties as pro formâ Defendants, but the question now attempted to be raised was not put in issue as against them. It must further be remembered that Lucas must be taken, as between himself and the Bank, to be bound by the recitals in the deed of the 4th February 1914.

The result follows that this appeal must be allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside. The suit will be decreed with costs both here and in the Court below in respect of the sums mentioned in the deed of the 4th February 1914 (including charges and expenses), which constitute a first charge on the properties covered by the deeds of the 8th July 1910 and the 29th June 1911. The case will be remanded to the Subordinate Judge with the direction that he will take an account of what is due to the Bank and draw up a decree accordingly.

RANKIN, J.—The fundamental question in this case is a question of law and it can be stated and answered first.

The Defendant Lucas is a jute merchant and in 1908 a Mr. Thaddeus was his broker and financed him in his business upon security of an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds in terms of an instrument dated 6th April 1908.

On the 8th July 1910, Lucas executed an indenture of mortgage over the same property in favour of a firm Vertannes and Bertram. This recited the mortgage of 1908 and stated that there was due to Thaddeus thereon a sum of Rs. 63,560 or thereabouts. It contained provisions that thenceforward Vertannes and Bertram would finance Lucas in his business to the extent of Rs. 50,000 and that they should during the subsistence of the security be his sole brokers at a commission of 1 per cent. on all his sales of jute.

This mortgage was on 26th June 1911 followed by a supplemental indenture of mortgage which contained the acknowledgment by Lucas that Rs. 10,755-15-0 was then due to Vertannes and Bertram on the security of 1910, and that to Thaddeus on his prior security the amount due was Rs. 65,000 or thereabouts. The deed contains an arrangement whereby Thaddeus was to be paid off. Rs. 65,000 was to be advanced by the Bank of Bengal by way of cash credit to Lucas. The advance was to be made on the security of a promissory note drawn by Lucas in favour of Vertannes and Bertram and endorsed by them to the Bank. Vertannes and Bertram were to execute a deed guaranteeing to the Bank payment of the balance for the time being owing to the Bank by Lucas.

Accordingly Lucas by this deed of 1911 covenanted with Vertannes and Bertram (1) that he would on demand pay them all monies which they might at any time and from time to time be called upon to pay to the Bank in respect of the promissory note with interest from the date of payment by them to the Bank (2) "and also shall and will indemnify and keep indemnified the mortgagees from and against all claim and demands in respect of the said promissory note or the monies payable thereunder" and so forth.

The deed then charges all the property already mortgaged and certain additional items of property as security for the payment to the mortgagees as well of all monies which the mortgagees may be called upon to pay to the Bank under the said promissory note . . . . and all interest for the same monies as for the monies secured by the principal indenture (of 1910).

At the end of 1912 Bertram died and letters of administration with the Will annexed were granted to the Administrator-General of Bengal early in 1913.

On the 4th February 1914, an indenture purporting to be supplemental to the mortgage deeds of 1910 and 1911 was entered into by all parties—the Bank, Lucas, Vertannes and the Administrator-General. This document was not stamped or attested as a mortgage but as a transfer of mortgage. The question in hand arises upon this instrument.

It recites that under the arrangements of 1910 there is now due to the Bank on drafts discounted the sum of Rs. 13,084-13-7; and that there is due to the Bank upon the cash credit opened in 1911 Rs. 60,932-3-9. It recites that the Bank has called upon the other three parties to give further security for the total sum due, Rs. 74,017-1-4 and interest accruing.

"And whereas it has accordingly been agreed that the said Vertannes and the Administrator-General should transfer the full benefit of the securities created by (the deeds of 1910 and 1911) to the Bank, to the intent that the Bank shall henceforth hold the same as security for the repayment to the Bank on demand of the said sum of Rs. 74,017-1-4 and interest thereon and that in consideration of such transfer the Bank should release the said Vertannes and the Administrator-General and the estate and effects of the said Bertram from all claims and demands whatsoever under the said drafts so discounted by the Bank as aforesaid and under the said promissory note for Rs. 65,000 and the said agreement whereby the said Vertannes and Bertram guaranteed the payment of the balance of the said cash credit account.

"Now this Indenture witnesseth that in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the release by the Bank hereinafter contained they the said Vertannes and the Administrator-General thereby grant convey transfer and assign unto the Bank all those the mortgaged premises . . . . and all the estate right title and interest claim and demand whatsoever of them the said Vertannes and Administrator-General into and upon the same to have and to hold the same unto the Bank according to the nature and tenure thereof subject to such right or equity of redemption as the same are now subject to by virtue of the principal indenture (1910) and the supplemental indenture (1911) on payment by the mortgagor of the said sum of Rs. 74,017-1-4 now payable under the principal indenture and supplemental indenture and all interest at the rate aforesaid."

To this instrument Lucas was a party and he entered into divers covenants with the Bank upon the basis of these provisions.

Now the contention which has succeeded in the Court below and has been maintained before us has reference to the amount due to the Bank upon the cash credit secured by the promissory note under the arrangement of 1911 for paying off Thaddeus. This is the amount stated in the deed of 1914 as Rs. 60,932-13-9 but the question of amount is not at the moment relevant. The Defendant Lucas contends that as Vertannes and Bertram were in fact paid on their guarantee to the Bank but were released from it by this very deed of 4th February 1914 the deed transferred nothing to the Bank and that for the amount due on the promissory note the Bank have no security whatsoever. Of course if the deed had been stamped and [illegible] as a mortgage, the Bank would have been secured, but as a transfer—so runs the argument—it has no effect whatever. Again if the parties had met in the Bank parlour and Vertannes had paid down the amount outstanding on the note and the Bank's officer had said—"At last, Lucas now owes you a debt and you have security for it. You can take back your money if you assign your debt and your security to me"—then a transfer would have been perfectly correct but without this pantomime nothing it seems can be effected by a transfer, not even with Lucas's consent.

I do not doubt that for stamp purposes and for the purposes of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act the line between a mortgage and a transfer must be drawn somewhere. But why draw it here? The debt to the Bank upon the promissory note was one single debt owed by two persons. As between these two one had from the other a covenant "to indemnify and keep indemnified against all claim and demands." The Bank was demanding further security which means "our right is to have payment: pay: but if you want further credit satisfy us and we will withdraw our demand." The principal debtor had a duty to the surety to make the payment—not only to the Bank [Bechervaise v. Lewis (22)]. The Bank as principal creditor had no right in the surety's security [In re: Walker (15)] but I fail to see how it can be said that the equity of redemption was prejudiced or altered by an assignment of the surety's rights to the Bank. It was and it remained a right to redeem on payment of the sum due on the promissory note with interest at the rate carried by the note. After February 1914 the mortgagor was in the circumstances free of any danger of having to pay interest to the sureties upon any interest they might be obliged to pay to the Bank—that seems to be the only possible difference to him, but that does not make a different equity.

I proceed now to consider whether there is any other reason why the Plaintiff Bank should not have a preliminary decree in the ordinary form upon the mortgage of 1911.

BANK OF BENGAL v. WILLIAM ARRATOON LUCAS.

which repeats and comprises the mortgage of 1910. This is the only question, as Plaintiff's counsel has stated that no personal decree against Lucas would be of any value and no such decree is asked for.

The defences which remain are first that the mortgage of 1911 was attested by a solicitor Mr. Stapledon although he was not present when Lucas executed it. Secondly, that Lucas signed the deed of 1914 without reading it and that it does not bind him. Thirdly, that the amount due on the 1910 deed to Vertannes and Bertram was paid off and that certain drafts discounted in 1912 and 1913 have nothing to do with this deed, Vertannes having negotiated them for Lucas without any security.

In the Court below there was a further and very remarkable defence to the effect that Vertannes and Bertram were mere benamidars for the Bank in respect of the deed of 1911, i.e., that they had no interest of their own in the matter whatsoever but were mere nominees of the Bank put up to give a sham guarantee in order that the Bank might have the advantage of lending Rs. 65,000 to Lucas on security of his immoveable property contrary to the terms of the Presidency Banks Act. The learned Judge has upheld this defence, as he has upheld all the other defences I have mentioned, but the learned and very experienced vakil who appeared for the Defendant Lucas in this Court has very properly declined to support this finding. It is, however, somewhat difficult to think that the learned Judge when he came to canvas the subsequent transactions of the parties was in a position to appreciate their meaning or to draw correct inferences of fact. In particular, and with all respect to the learned Judge, his estimate of the value of the evidence of Lucas seems to me to be demonstrably wrong. In his answers to Interrogatories on 26th May 1918 (cf. also his evidence on the 18th July 1921) Lucas asserts his entire ignorance as to any deed of guarantee by Vertannes and Bertram to the Bank. The plain fact is that for years he had obtained finance from his broker: that Vertannes and Bertram were to be his sole brokers and that his business was conducted accordingly.

Coming first to the allegation that Mr. Stapledon witnessed Mr. Lucas's signature to the deed of 1911 without having seen him sign this rests wholly on the word of Lucas. "Lucas's evidence," says the learned Judge, "stands ex parte and there is no reason why it should not be believed." Now Lucas may have no reason for trying to resist the claim of the Petitioner Bank: but otherwise there seems to be something to consider. The learned Judge states that at the close of the case a petition was filed asking for leave to examine Stapledon. "Had the decision of the case hinged on this point only I would have probably given the Plaintiff Bank another opportunity after mulcting it in costs. But in the view I take of the deed I do not think it necessary and so reject the application."

Unfortunately it is necessary to decide this question and on this appeal being gone into at some length we acceded after argument to an application that [illegible] both of Stapledon and E[illegible] be taken under Or. 41, r[illegible] the Code, and stated that we wou[illegible] record our reasons in the judgment. In my opinion there is on the face of the judgment of the Court below substantial cause within the meaning of the Rule as explained by the Judicial Committee in Raja Indrajit Partap v. Amar Singh (3). I think further that the facts to which I shall shortly refer constitute substantial cause by themselves. Moreover if this be regarded as an exercise of our power under the Rule mero motu, it seems to be exactly within the language of Lord Robertson a case "where, on examining the evidence as it stands some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent" [Kessowji's case (2)]. An opportunity was offered to the Respondents to say whether they would want to call other witnesses: they did not desire to do so. Stapledon's evidence had been taken on commission in May 1922 in the case. At the hearing of this appeal leave should be given to use it. Evenett was examined before us. The original document has been carefully examined. In it Stapledon's signature is above Evenett's. Both gentlemen say with perfect frankness that they make no claim to an independent recollection of the occasion apart from the document. Both say that witnessing a signature that he has not seen made is a thing which Mr. Stapledon did not do. Against that Mr. Lucas says that in 1911 he did not know that two attesting witnesses were required for a mortgage but that he can swear that in 1911 Stapledon did not see him sign. He is certainly very fortunate both as to the circumstance and as to his recollection of it.

(3) Since reported 28 C. W. N. 277 (1923).

BANK OF BENGAL v. WILLIAM ARRATOON LUCAS.

Now the credibility of Lucas on this point depends not only on the circumstances directly bearing on this issue but also on his evidence and conduct as to other matters. Apart from the question of benami already dealt with, the Court is asked on the evidence of Lucas to accept several remarkable allegations. That although under the deed of 1910 Vertannes had security for all discounted bills and for "any advances which may be made by the firm for the purposes of the said business" yet in 1912 Vertannes made himself liable as acceptor on bills to a very large amount solely for the benefit of Lucas upon a verbal arrangement that they should not be covered by the security. That in 1914 Lucas at the instance of a Mr. Morrison (then an officer of the Bank but now in Tasmania or elsewhere) signed the deed of 4th February 1914 without knowing its contents. That into this deed —to be executed by four parties—false statements were put, e.g., that Rs. 13,000 was owing under the deed of 1910, whereas nothing was owing. That inspite of repeated applications to the Bank Lucas never could get them to give any particulars of his account or to let him see his own Pass-Book. That his admission in writing—made twice over in July 1914 and January 1915—was made without any enquiry as to whether he did owe Rs. 76,000 or not. That in spite of his extraordinary treatment over the deed of 1914 he never got a copy of it: it being his practice not to take a copy of mortgage deeds.

Now the learned Judge has referred to a circumstance which showed to him that on an application to substitute the heirs of one of the puisne mortgagees Lucas had given evidence before the Subordinate Judge then in charge of this case and had been disbelieved as a witness to whose oral evidence no weight could be attached. Having read this previous judgment with some care I take leave to doubt whether the comments made upon it by the trial Judge are justified. The trial Judge was well entitled to form his own opinion upon Lucas's evidence and if his view had been that notwithstanding his interest, his statements and his conduct, Lucas was a transparently honest witness whose word in his own favour could safely be accepted to the value of half a lac and more, the position of the learned Judge would have been tenable at least in form. So too if the presence of direct and cogent corroboration had turned the scale. This however seems to be very far from the possibilities in the present case.

Reverting to the evidence upon the attestation of the deed of 1911 I note first that the mortgages of 1910 and 1911 were pleaded at length in the plaint (20th December 1917). In the first written statement Lucas pleaded (para. 4) that the rights of Vertannes created by the documents of 1910 and 1911 had not been legally transferred to the Plaintiff: also (paras. 8 and 9) that the debt due on the deed of 1910 had been paid off. He in no way challenged the deed of 1911 as a mortgage though he challenged the deed of 1914. This was in March 1918. In August 1918 evidence was taken on commission. Mr. Faley called to give formal proof as against the non-appearing Defendants of the document of 1910 was cross-examined on behalf of Lucas and his answers in examination-in-chief were frequently objected to. Mr. Evenett called for the same reason to give formal proof of the execution of the deed of 1911 gave (under objection) on the 16th August 1918 evidence identifying Stapledon's signature, Lucas's signature and his own. "The document was executed by Lucas in my presence." In cross-examination on the 22nd August on behalf of Lucas the witness who in the course of practice for 20 years must have witnessed hundreds of documents was asked without being given the document to look at, who were present. His answer showed that by this time he had forgotten who the witnesses to this particular document were and in fact he said so frankly. Stapledon had given evidence only as to the deed of 1914 and had been cross-examined only on that. As the written statement at that time contained no denial of the entering into the indentures of 1910 and 1911 and as Lucas had admitted them in April in answer to Interrogatories, cross-examination on his behalf was of a fishing character. When the Plaintiff Bank desired to amend the plaint so as to claim upon the deed of 1914 as a transfer only the application was resisted on the ground that it would be unfair to the Defendants since the witnesses on commission were "none of them cross-examined about the bonds of 1910 and 1911 as the suit was not based on the said bonds." (Order Sheet No. 49, 21st Dec. 1918, part III, p. 23). This was accepted as a fact by the Judge in making his order as to costs, but he allowed the amendment substantially on the ground that the claim was an honest claim and "the major portion of the claim is admittedly due." The additional written statement of Lucas was filed on the 6th April 1920. It is mainly occupied with the question of benami but by para. 7 it pleads that the deed of 1911 was not legally attested and presented for registration. The puisne mortgagees now appear and challenge the deed of 1911 in particular by written statement filed on 17th April 1920. In July 1921 the case was tried, one witness only being called for the Plaintiffs to prove some facts about the bank account. Lucas was the only witness for the defence. He says that Evenett alone was present when he signed. That "six months or a year ago it struck me that Stapledon was not present. It never struck me to suggest to my pleader when cross-examining Stapledon that he was not present when I signed it." Again "I came to know of the law on the point after amendment of the plaint in this case, I did not know it before as the question never arose before. My pleaders then asked me about the attestation of all documents."

So far the facts were before the learned Judge when he said that Lucas's evidence stands ex parte and there is no reason why it should not be believed. In my judgment there is cogent reason. The first written statement did in fact appreciate that the deed of 1914 might be relied on as a transfer of rights under the deed of 1911. If neither was attested by two witnesses there could be no mortgage. Lucas plainly did know the statutory requirement for the purposes of his original written statement filed in March 1918 because the third paragraph states it explicitly as regards the deed of 1914. The origin of the whole matter is in the fact that Mr. Evenett on 22nd August 1918 after a long examination upon all sorts of documents on previous days was asked as to the witnesses present at the execution of this document without being given the document to look at. It is idle to say that the Defendant's case was not put to him because on the pleadings it was not relevant. He was cross-examined. The Defendant was fishing this very water to see what he could get. If materials could be obtained, the pleadings were plainly not going to prevent some case or other being made if it promised well. No concrete case was put to Evenett to the effect that the deed was executed when he was alone with Lucas, because Lucas was rushing off to Dacca and that no witness in the whole of Messrs. Morgan's office could be had to sign, though the power-of-attorney had been mentioned in examination-in-chief. Not a word of this concrete story is to be discovered in Lucas's own evidence. In my opinion the attestation of the deed of 1911 is amply proved, and both Mr. Stapledon and Mr. Evenett are entitled to be absolved from a grave charge made against them both.

The second line of defence upon the facts is that Lucas signed the deed of 1914 without reading it and that therefore it is a nullity. I do not understand the evidence of Lucas to suggest that he signed something without knowing even the general nature of it or the properties comprised in it. To his mind apparently he was signing a mortgage in favour of the Bank—presumably for his debt to the Bank. Plainly Vertannes had something to do with the matter. On 18th April 1915 Lucas gave a second mortgage for Rs. 17,868 reciting that the properties hypothecated to you are mortgaged with the Bank of Bengal. This defence was in the original written statement. "This Defendant was taken quite at unawares and signed the said document at Messrs. Morgan & Co.'s office without even having an opportunity of going through the deed before signing the same and that he did so in the belief and on the assurance of Defendant No. 17 (i.e., Vertannes) that the facts were correctly stated." The evidence of Lucas, on which it rests, is that when the parties met at the solicitor's office he was shown an engrossed deed, that he complained to Morrison that he knew nothing of its contents, that Morrison asked him not to be nasty and disagreeable, that Vertannes said that everything was all right and that on the impression that he would be financed by the Bank on signing the deed, he signed it. That after this the Bank never did finance him; that he spoke to Morrison about it but made no application in writing about this to the Bank. That he came to know of the statements of amount contained in the deed only when this suit was brought in December 1917. That he never could get any particulars of his account from the

BANK OF BENGAL v. WILLIAM ARRATOON LUCAS.

Bank and after admitting to some Rs. 76,000 twice he refused to admit anything.

Now both Mr. Stapledon and Mr. Vertannes were called before the commissioner. The cross-examination was not such as to leave it open to Lucas to make the case which he now makes. Vertannes was not cross-examined at all upon the point: in this case there is not even a pretence of touching on the subject. Lucas says he was busy and could not remain to instruct his pleader. Evenett in the following month (17 March 1914) identified Lucas before the Registrar: nothing was put to him.

The learned Judge seems to think that the Plaintiff Bank have to prove that Lucas read the draft on the deed. If he was content to take the statement of Vertannes or of Morrison he may certainly prove that they deceived him. Or he may set up a case of domination of his will and of undue influence under the Contract Act. But what this case is or why it should be seriously entertained upon this evidence I wholly fail to see.

The third series of findings upon fact are to the effect that in February 1914 nothing was due from Lucas to Vertannes upon bills discounted under the deed of 1910. That deed did not prescribe who should be drawer, drawee and acceptor but at first the practice was apparently for Vertannes to draw on Bertram, Lucas not being a party. At the end of 1912 there were a series of drafts drawn by Lucas on Bertram in favour of Vertannes. All the drafts were discounted with the Bank and all were to finance Lucas. On all of them Vertannes and Lucas were liable. Lucas says that there was a special verbal arrangement whereby his liability to Vertannes was not to be covered by the deed of 1910 This is a very definite statement: "Vertannes was negotiating drafts for me without any security." Considering what was done in February 1914 and later this requires a great deal of explanation on the part of everybody. Vertannes is nowhere asked as to bargain of that character, as to whether he negotiated drafts without security, why he had improper statements of liability put into the deed of 1914, whether the Bank in taking over his security and releasing him knew that certain drafts were excluded from a security that purported to cover not only all drafts but all advances. He is merely cross-examined to admit the difference in the way the bills were drawn and that is all he does admit. Moreover Vertannes' dead partner Bertram was a party to these drafts. Why should the Administrator-General be allowed to assign contrary to the good faith of the matter?

Again an account was put to Vertannes which purports to be a rough statement and expressly mentions that it is incomplete. This is, it appears, in the handwriting of a clerk of Vertannes. In it by an undated credit put down at the end Lucas is credited "By draft Rs. 50,000." That is quite all right as far as it goes but one must look to see what happened to the draft—whose it was, whether it was met or renewed or dishonoured. This account is not an account of the bills under discount. The learned Judge has been persuaded that it shows that little or nothing was owing under the deed of 1910 and that the statements in the deed of 1914 are outrageously wrong. He has not thought it necessary before finding this to take an account of the transactions between Lucas and his financing brokers, though commission on all local sales is expressly provided for by the deed of 1910.

The Defendant's case as put by his learned vakil, to whose clearness I am personally much indebted, is that the accounts of the Bank are doubtless all right but that if Vertannes and Bertram who were handling the money for Lucas retained some of it improperly then Lucas would be liable on the bills to the Bank but Vertannes and Bertram could not have claimed the full amount under their security. Now the evidence of Lucas shows that he knew that Vertannes and Bertram had taken Rs. 10,000 under some claim or other. This appears to be in July and August 1912 (cheques 389, 390 in their Bank account, Ex. 101). He says they undertook to pay and he renewed the drafts expecting them to repay to the Bank. He states that he discussed the matter with the Administrator-General whose letter of 11th May 1913 is in evidence. Not a word is put to Vertannes about promises to relieve Lucas as to Rs. 10,000 or as to why he drew the money.

In these circumstances the question is whether on the evidence Lucas is entitled as against the Bank which took its transfer with Lucas's assent to the deed of 1914 to have an account taken as between himself and Vertannes and Bertram ripping up the basis on which the transfer was taken by the Bank, and going into the whole of the general account between Lucas and his brokers. I fail to see how on these pleadings and in this suit to which Vertannes and Bertram's estate are only pro formâ parties he can do anything of the sort and I see no such evidence as would justify such a course, were it possible.

In my opinion there must be a preliminary decree declaring the Plaintiff Bank to be entitled to a first charge upon the property comprised in the deeds of 1910 and 1911 for the sums mentioned in the deed of 1914 together with interests, costs, charges and expenses. The case must go back to the Court below to have the necessary account taken. The appeal should be allowed—as against Lucas with costs here and below and with liberty to add these to the security.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER

No. 335 OF 1922.

RANKIN, J. PAGE, J. 1923, 18, December.	SHAHEBZADA MAHAMMAD MUNWAR SULTAN, Petitioner, Appellant, v. SHAHEBZADI SHAMSUNNESSA BEGUM, Opposite Party, Respondent.

Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912), secs. 62 and 38 —Court's duty before ordering an inquisition.

An inquisition under sec. 62 or sec. 38 of the Indian Lunacy Act into the state of health, the state of mind, the state of property and general capacity of a person is a thing which affects the person so prejudicially that it ought not to be taken except it be first ordered upon a careful consideration of evidence.

MUHAMMAD YAQUB v. NAZIR AHMAD (1) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 29th of August 1922 against an order of the District Judge of 24-Pargannas (J. F. Graham, Esq.), dated the 8th of July 1922, dismissing an application for an inquisition under the Indian Lunacy Act.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

MAHAMMAD MUNWAR SULTAN v. SHAMSUN NESSA BEGUM.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

RANKIN, J.—I am of opinion that the course taken in the Court below affords not a little just grievance to the lady against whom the proceedings were taken but it affords none whatever to the present Appellant. The smallest attention to the words of the Indian Lunacy Act whether they be the words of sec. 62 or the words of sec. 38 shows this that the Legislature appreciates that to have an inquisition into the state of health, the state of mind, the state of property and general capacity of a person is a thing which affects that person so prejudicially that it ought not to be taken except it be first ordered upon a careful consideration of evidence. It was said in a case, which is, I think, the case to which some reference is made in the judgment of the Court below [Muhammad Yaqub v. Nazir Ahmad (1)]. "It is true that nothing is contained in the Act itself to direct or guide a Judge as to how he shall consider applications for an inquisition and probably no rules exist for dealing with the matter; but ordinary common sense would appear to dictate to a tribunal before whom such an application comes that care should be exercised in a painful matter of this kind, namely, an inquiry into a man's or woman's state of mind; specially in the case of people in comfortable circumstances who merely wish to lead a quiet life, care should be exercised that they are not suddenly flung without sufficient reason into an elaborate inquisition which after all is nothing more or less than a trial involving sometimes the history of a person's life back for many years, medical evidence, and all sorts of family witnesses." Now, in this case, an application was presented to the learned District Judge and was registered on the 31st of March 1922. In May of that year the lady against whom it was made who appears to be an old lady and a purdanashin lady filed a sworn statement in reply and certain documents having been filed, the first order made is Order No. 5 of the 15th of May. "Pleader for Petitioner appears and states that a very lengthy written statement has been filed by the Opposite Party and that until he has had time to consider the objections, it will not be possible for issues to be framed." Now, that shows that the pleader for the Petitioner had entirely omitted to notice that, before anything like an enquiry involving framing of issues should be undertaken, the learned Judge had a most important duty to perform as regards this lady. He had no business whatever to tumble into an inquisition. His business was carefully to consider whether there were any grounds for holding an inquisition. The order goes on: "It is desirable, however, that the hearing of this case should be expedited as much as possible. Issues will be settled on the 22nd of May." That seems to me to show that the learned Judge had entirely omitted to notice what the duty was that rested heavily on his shoulders. On the 22nd May, in pursuance of the attitude disclosed by the order of the 15th an issue was framed being no less than a complete issue as to whether the lady was of unsound mind and incapable of managing herself and her affairs. Accordingly the Judge said: "It will now be necessary to have a report of the mental capacity and condition of the alleged lunatic"; and then, after some little time, on the 31st, two eminent medical practitioners were appointed to make an examination. Thereupon, the lady filed an application and it is rather interesting to see the attitude of mind disclosed by this application. I propose to take the narrative as regards this from the judgment, of the learned Judge himself. "Therefore, on the 16th June last, an application was filed on behalf of Shamsunnessa Begum praying that the inquisition which had been ordered to be held by two medical officers"—this may be a mere quotation but it shows a considerable confusion of mind on the part of somebody—"might not be proceeded with on the ground that it would involve considerable expense and inconvenience and praying that instead thereof the Court would be pleased to fix a date for personal examination of the alleged lunatic in camera with a view to ascertaining whether she is, in fact, a lunatic and whether there is any need for holding an inquisition." A more proper application than that I find it difficult to conceive. I should have thought that the lady was entitled to apply to this Court in revision to have the proceedings in the Court below stopped. She applied, however, to the trial Court asking it to do its duty—to consider whether there was any need for holding an inquisition and, in support of that application, she called attention of the Court to the case of Muhammad Yaqub v. Nazir Ahmad (1) which rightly or wrongly advises the Judges before ordering an inquisition to take steps, if possible, to see the alleged lunatic in person. The learned Judge in the present case appreciated the force of the lady's application and accordingly an order was made directing that she should be examined in camera and the learned Judge's order says: "In these circumstances," he has referred to some matters of suspicion, "it is the more desirable that the Court should see the alleged lunatic and satisfy itself whether there are any grounds for ordering the inquisition formerly prayed for." Those are the words of the learned Judge's own order. He did see the alleged lunatic and her answers are in the paper-book. He came to the conclusion having regard to the allegations in the petition that the whole application of the applicant was a piece of oppression and was mala fide, and he dismissed the application then and there. It is said that the learned Judge had begun the inquisition. I quite appreciate the force of the criticism that is made in this connection but here learned Judge had slid into the proceedings proper to an inquisition without knowing it and without making any order or coming to any decision which would entitle him to commence it. It is arguable that the power conferred by sec. 41 of the Indian Lunacy Act is a power which only arises when an inquisition has been ordered. The present case is not a case of the Court exercising a power to require the lunatic to come before it personally. This is a case where the alleged lunatic herself asked to be examined and the learned Judge had at any rate some authority in his support in examining the lady in the presence of the parties, even on the assumption that there was no inquisition. In these circumstances, what happened was that owing to the lady's taking a very reasonable step in making her well-founded application on the 16th of June, the learned Judge saw his error. He came to the conclusion that there was no ground for ordering an inquisition and he must have, I think, repented of the fact that he had not with sufficient care followed the statute and let himself slide into holding an inquisition which he had no jurisdiction to hold. In these circumstances it seems to me that while the alleged lunatic may have some grievance in the matter, the present Appellant has none, and that his appeal should be dismissed with costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

(1) I. L. R. 42 All. 504 (1920).

MAHAMMAD MUNWAR SULTAN v. SHAMSUNNESSA BEGUM.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2601 OF 1922.

NEWBOULD, J.
B. B. GHOSE, J.
1923,

CHAND MIA MUNSHI and ors., Plaintiffs, Appellants,
v.
TUKAMIA and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs 103B, 111A—Right of a person to rear fish in another's tank, if recognised by law—Easement—Declaratory suit under sec. 111A—Cause of action—Presumption under sec. 103B, if applies to non-agricultural land.

Where in respect of the Plaintiff's tank in his possession it was recorded in the record-of-rights prepared under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the Defendant had a right to rear fish, and the Plaintiff brought a declaratory suit under sec. 111A of that Act:

Held—That the Plaintiff had a cause of action to bring the suit and was entitled to have the declaration that the Defendant had no right to rear or catch fish in the Plaintiff's tank.

The right of a person to rear fish in another's tank is a novel right which a Court of law cannot recognise and is too vague to give a person a right in law in the nature of an easement.

Although strictly speaking the presumption under sec. 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not applicable to non-agricultural land to the extent to which it is applicable with regard to agricultural land, still an entry in regard to non-agricultural land raises some presumption with regard to the fact recorded in it.

RAJA SASHI KANTA ACHARJYA BAHADUR v. SANDHYA MONI DASSYA (1) referred to.

(1) 26 C. W. N. 483 (1921).

This was an appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Zillah Noakhali (E. Milsom, Esq.), dated the 20th of July 1922, reversing the decree of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Lakhmipore (Babu Makhan Lal Mukerjee), dated the 22nd of November 1920.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babus Dhirendra Lal Kastgir and Nagendra Nath Bose for the Appellants.

Babu Bhagirath Chandra Das for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal is against the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Noakhali reversing those of the Munsif of Lakhmipore. The Plaintiffs are the Appellants and the appeal arises out of a suit for confirmation of possession after declaration of the Plaintiff's title to the tank in suit.

The cause of action arose in this way :— There was a record-of-rights of the mouzah in which the tank is situated under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tank was recorded as within the tenancy of the Plaintiffs, but it was also recorded that the Defendants would be entitled to rear fishes and use the water of the tank. With regard to the use of the water of the tank there is no question and the Plaintiffs had not disputed that right. But the Plaintiffs say that the Defendants have no right to rear fishes in the tank and the record-of-rights is erroneous to that extent.

The suit has been brought for a declaratory decree as provided in the proviso to sec. 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Defendant No. 1 contested the suit and he pleaded that he and his predecessors before him were the proprietors of 6 annas share of the tank and another person Malika Banu was the proprietor of the remaining 10 annas share and he further pleaded that he and his ancestors have been exercising possession over the 6 annas share of the tank for the last 50 years by using its water and rearing and catching fishes. The learned Judge on appeal has dismissed the suit entirely, and the first ground on which he holds against the Plaintiffs is that they have no cause of action. He thinks that as the record-of-rights shows the Plaintiffs' title and possession the mere fact that the record shews the Defendants having got the right complained of does not give them a right to bring the present suit. We are unable to agree with him with regard to this proposition. The record, if it is allowed to stand, restricts the absolute ownership of the Plaintiffs and disentitles them from excluding the Defendants from exercising some acts of possession. They have therefore the right to complain against the entry in the record-of-rights and this gives them a good cause of action.

The next ground on which the learned Judge has decided the case is that the entry in the record-of-rights had not been rebutted by the Plaintiffs. It is first urged on behalf of the Plaintiffs that the entry in the record-of-rights not being an entry with regard to agricultural land, nor of any matter between landlord and tenant the presumption under sec. 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply. It has, however, been held that although strictly speaking the presumption under sec. 103B is not applicable to non-agricultural land to the extent to which it is applicable with regard to agricultural lands, still such entry raises some presumption with regard to the fact recorded in it; see Raja Sashi Kanta Acharjya Bahadur v. Sandhya Moni Dassya (1). It is next urged on behalf of the Appellants that the right that is recorded is too vague to give the Defendants a right in law in the nature of an easement, and secondly the Defendants themselves did not claim the right as recorded but claimed ownership to 6 annas share of the tank and pleaded that they exercised the right of ownership in that share of the tank; and the learned Judge having found that the Plaintiffs were the sole owners of the tank and the Defendants had no share in it ought to have made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs. In our opinion this contention should prevail. The right of one person to rear fishes in another's tank seems to be quite a novel right which a Court of law cannot recognize. The learned Vakil for the Respondents was unable to show us any authority for the proposition that such a right should be recognized. We are therefore of opinion that the Plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration they have sought for that they are owners of the tank and also for confirmation of possession and they are also entitled to have the other declaration that the Defendants have no right to rear or catch any fishes in the tank.

(1) 26 C. W. N. 483 (1921).

We therefore set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the Munsif with costs in all Courts.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD DUNEDIN.	SURAPATI ROY and
SIR JOHN EDGE.	ors., Appellants,
MR. AMEER ALI.	v.

Judgment, 19, April.	Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 12—Permanent tenure—Transfer by registered document, when complete—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 110—Suit for rent—Recurring liability charged on land above appealable value—Certificate, if may be granted.

SURAPATI ROY v. RAM NARAYAN MUKERJI.

Where the subject-matter in dispute related to a recurring liability for rent and was in respect of a property considerably above the appealable value, a certificate that the case was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council was properly granted by the High Court.

A transfer of a permanent tenure by a registered document is complete under sec. 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as soon as the document is registered.

KRISTO BULLUV GHOSE v. KRISTO LALL SINGH (2) and HEMENDRA NATH MUKERJI v. KUMAR NATH ROY (1) referred to.

These were consolidated appeals from a judgment and two decrees of the High Court, dated the 26th August 1919, reversing decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 28th February 1917, which affirmed a judgment of the Munsif of Hooghly, dated the 30th September 1915, made in certain rent suits.

The suits were brought by the 1st Respondent to recover from the Appellants and the remaining Respondents arrears of rent in respect of darputni tenures of which he was putnidar under the Maharaja of Burdwan.

By a registered kobala, dated the 9th Bhadra 1313 (25th August 1906), the Defendants other than Nos. 3, 14 and 15 purported to transfer their interest to one Ramtarak Bhuttacharji as benamidar of the Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15.

In 1908 and 1911 rent suits were brought by the putnidar against all the Defendants and the trial Judge held that the kobala was not a bonâ fide document and that Defendants Nos. 3, 15 and 16 had not established their exclusive possession and that the putnidar was entitled to rent and the claim was decreed accordingly. Subsequent suits for rent were also decreed against the Defendants, the Court holding that the decision in the previous suits operated as res judicata.

On the 22nd Assar 1321 (6th July 1914) the Defendants other than Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 executed a further deed described as a "deed of confirmation" in favour of Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15.

The present suits were filed on the 6th November 1914 and the 4th February 1915.

The Defendants other than Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 denied liability and relied on the sale deed of 25th August 1906 and on the deed of confirmation of 6th July 1914.

The suits were tried together by the second Munsif of Hooghly who held that although the bonâ fides of the kobala was not established yet that the possession of Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 had been proved and that this possession coupled with the deed of confirmation conferred a valid title on them as from the date of the latter deed (6th July 1914). He accordingly passed a decree for rent up to that date against all the Defendants and for the subsequent period only against Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge confirmed this decree.

Upon further appeal to the High Court (Nalini Chatterjea and Duval, JJ.), the decrees of the lower Courts were reversed.

The learned Judges held that the questions relating to the deed of sale, dated the 25th August 1906 were "res judicata" by reason of the previous decisions and that the assertions in the deed of confirmation, dated the 6th July 1914, cannot "make it valid as against the other party to the previous suits." The Court also held that the deed of release did not operate as a transfer of rights in praesenti.

On the 12th May 1920, the Appellants applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decrees of the High Court and for consolidation of the appeals. In their petition they alleged that the arrears of rent already decreed or pending in other suits exceeded Rs. 10,000 and that another tenure was affected by the decree of the High Court. They further alleged that the actual subject-matter of the appeals to the Privy Council would be the amounts already accrued and that would accrue in future.

On the 31st May 1920, the High Court directed that "certificates be granted that as regards amount or value and nature the cases fulfil the requirement of sec. 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

Mr. W. Wallach for the 1st Respondent.—Referred to sec. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code and contended that no appeal lay to the Privy Council as the value of the subject-matter was insufficient and no proper certificate had been given. He referred to Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Swaminatha Ayyar (3).

Mr. Dubé for the Appellants.—The High Court was right in granting a certificate in that sums of money considerably over Rs. 10,000 are affected; Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Swaminatha Ayyar (3) was reconsidered by the Board in Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Sundara Swamier (4).

(The Board reserved the question of the admissibility of the appeal and directed the appeal to be heard on the merits.)

Mr. Dubé for the Appellants.—A darputnidar can assign his interest by a deed of transfer under the provisions of sec. 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII of 1885. The deed in this case is effectual for the purpose, Hemendra Nath Mukerji v. Kumar Nath Roy (1) and the liability for rent of the Defendants other than Nos. 3, 14 and 15 ceased as from its date (6th July 1914).

The question of res judicata does not arise.

He also referred to Chintamoni Dutt v. Rash Behari Mondal (5), Kristo Bulluv Ghose v. Kristo Lall Singh (2) and Ismail Solomon Bhamji v. Mahomed Khan (6).

Mr. Wallach for the 1st Respondent.—The document of 1914 does not operate as a valid transfer under sec. 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was stamped as a release and treated as such by the parties to it and is distinguishable from the document in Hemendra Nath Mukerji v. Kumar Nath Roy (1) and Mathura Mohan Saha v. Ram Kumar Saha (7).

No consideration passed with the deed of 1906 and there was accordingly no transfer.

The Courts have decided that and it is res judicata. The deed of 1914 is merely an attempt to go behind those decisions and to affirm that a deed held to be invalid is in reality valid.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—These consolidated appeals arise out of two suits brought by the Plaintiff, a putnidar under the Burdwan estate, to recover rent from the Defendants in respect of three darputni taluks they held under him. The Burd-wan Raj contains a large number of putni tenures, and sub-infeudation is recognised and largely given effect to in that estate. Not only are putnidars entitled to grant sub-tenures called darputnis, but the darputnidar on his side can grant subordinate tenures under himself which bear the designation of se-putni. The Plaintiff's case is that the fifteen Defendants whom he sued for the darputni rent of the three darputni taluks were all jointly interested in the under-tenures. The Defendants, other than Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, contended that although originally they held a share in the darputni tenure, they had, on the 25th August 1906, conveyed their 12 annas interest to one Ramtarak Bhuttacharji as the benamidar of the Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, and that two years later, viz., in June 1908, Ramtarak had, by a registered document, renounced all interest in the darputni in favour of the Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, acknowledging that they were the real purchasers and that he was only their furzidar. The Defendants, other than Nos. 3, 14 and 15, accordingly urged that they were not liable for the rent of the under-tenure and were wrongly sued.

It appears that after the execution of the deed of sale in 1906, the Plaintiff had instituted against these several Defendants, including Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, suits for rent in which the Defendants other than Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, denied their liability on the ground that they had parted with their interest in favour of their co-Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, and that in those suits the Court before whom the question came for trial had held that the contending Defendants had failed to establish that the transaction was bonâ fide and not a mere sham; and had declared that, notwithstanding the transaction of 1906, the Plaintiff was entitled to rent from all the Defendants, and had decreed his claim accordingly. There were further suits between the parties; the same contentions were raised by the Defendants other than Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15; but the defence was disallowed on the ground that the question relating to their liability was res judicata. The Defendants other than the Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, thereupon, on the 6th July 1914, executed a fresh document in favour of their co-Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, by which they purported to confirm the transaction of 1906 and release in the latter's favour whatever right and title they possessed in their 12 annas share of the darputni.

The present suits are brought for rents partly due for a period prior to July 1914, and partly for a period thereafter. The Munsif, before whom the cases came for trial, held that the rent for the period anterior to the execution of the last document, viz., the release of 1914, came within the terms of the previous decisions and that, consequently, the matter was res judicata; but with regard to the period after the execution of the document of the 6th July 1914, he held that the transfer by the contending Defendants to their co-Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, was valid, and that, therefore, they were entitled to be absolved from liability for all subsequent rent. He accordingly decreed the Plaintiff's claim for the rent of this latter period against Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 alone.

From this part of the Munsif's decree, the Plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, who, on the 28th February 1917, dismissed the appeal and affirmed the decree of the Munsif.

He held that the point in controversy was concluded by the decision in the case of Hemendra Nath Mukerji v. Kumar

SURAPATI ROY v. RAM NARAYAN MUKERJI.

Nath Roy (1), that the deed which the contending Defendants had executed ratifying the previous transaction of sale was not only a "disclaimer of any subsisting right or interest of the executants, but also purported to vest whatever right or interest they might, by reason of the decisions of Courts in the previous rent suits. be said to have had in the properties covered thereby, in the Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, as from the date of its execution." He held, further, in respect of the contention, that there was no consideration for this last document, that it did not concern the Plaintiff, whether a consideration passed or not between the two parties to the transaction, that was a matter between them and them alone; and that the Plaintiff himself had ample security in the darputni tenures. He further held that the Defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 were in possession of the property. He accordingly, as already stated, dismissed the Plaintiff's appeal. The Plaintiff, not content with this decision, appealed to the High Court of Calcutta, which reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and decreed the Plaintiff's claim as against all the Defendants.

From these decrees of the High Court in the two suits, the contending Defendants have appealed to this Board. A preliminary objection has been taken as to the competency of the appeal, on the ground, firstly, that the subject-matter is below the appealable value; and secondly, that the certificate granted by the High Court is not sufficient. On both points in their Lordships' opinion the objection fails. The subject-matter in dispute relates to a recurring liability and is in respect of a property considerably above the appealable value. The certificate in the circumstances is quite in order.

(1) 12 C. W. N. 478 (1908).

The reasons upon which the learned Judges of the High Court have based their judgment are somewhat involved, but closely examined they amount to this: that as it had been held in the previous suits that there was no consideration and as there could be no transfer without the proof of consideration, the transaction of July 1911 is affected by the previous decisions and the Plaintiff was entitled to go on suing the Defendants as he had done heretofore. There are certain passages in the judgment which incline their Lordships to think the learned Judges did not clearly apprehend the legal position of the parties in relation to the provisions of sec. 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. They say in one place:—

"It cannot be disputed that if the title is perfected by a proper deed, and for consideration, the former decisions cannot operate as res judicata."

And then go on to say:—

"But there is no consideration apart from the consideration of the previous kobala; and the question of consideration under the kobala is res judicata."

In the case of Kristo Bulluv Ghose v. Kristo Lall Singh (2), a transfer of a permanent tenure by a registered document was held to be complete under sec. 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as soon as the document was registered, and the same view was expressed in the case of Hemendra Nath Mukerji v. Kumar Nath Roy (1), already referred to. Their Lordships consider that the present controversy is covered by the latter decision.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment and decrees of the High Court should be set aside and the order of the Subordinate Judge restored. The Appellants will be entitled to their costs here and in the High Court.

[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

LORD DUNEDIN.
LORD PHILLIMORE.	NUR MAHOMED
SIR JOHN EDGE.	PEERBHOY and anr,
MR. AMEER ALI.	Appellants,
1922,	v.
Heard, 1, 13 and	DINSHAW HORMASJI

Judgment.	Respondents.
2 , November.

Specific performance - Contract to purchase immoveable properties—Subsequent sale of one item in execution of a decree - Purchaser's title—Notice to purchaser, to be proved, nature of - Plaintiff's option, when one of the properties has passed by sale o a third party to demand specific performance as to the others, on terms.

Judicial sales would be robbed of all their security if vague references to antecedent contracts could be held to invalidate the buyer's title. The notice to the buyer of the existence of such contracts should be unequivocal.

Where one of the properties which the Plaintiff in a suit for specific performance had contracted to buy was found to have validly passed at an execution sale, he was given liberty to apply to the Court if so advised for specific performance in respect of the other properties on such terms as to the Court may seem just.

These were consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Bombay. dated the 30th March 1917, reversing a decree of the 1st class Subordinate Judge of Thana, dated the 18th April 1914.

The suit was brought by the Respondent Dinshaw Hormasji Motiwalla against the Appellants and Adam Haji Jacob for specific performance of a contract for sale of property in Bandra.

The property in question belonged in 1911 to Adam Haji Jacob who was heavily indebted.

In August 1911 a prohibitory order was issued by the Thana Court, attaching the property, and in March 1912 a warrant of sale was issued.

On the 17th July 1912, Adam Haji Jacob entered into a contract for the sale of the property to Motiwalla and received Rs. 1,000 as earnest money.

On the 29th August 1912 the decretal amount was paid in by the judgment-debtor and the sale of the property under the above-mentioned attachment was not confirmed.

On the 9th August 1912 a second decree-holder attached the property and applied for rateable distribution which was refused, but the property was sold under this attachment on the 25th April 1913 and purchased by the 1st Appellant and resold to the second Appellant.

The Subordinate Judge refused to decree specific performance of the agreement of the 17th July 1912.

He held that the agreement was void under sec. 64 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the Court sale purchaser and his assignee did not take the property with notice of the agreement of sale, and that the conduct of the Plaintiff at the sale and the general circumstances of the case justified the Court in its discretion in refusing to grant specific performance.

Motiwalla and Adam Haji Jacob filed separate appeals from this decree to the High Court.

In Motiwalla's appeal the Court reversed the decree of the trial Judge.

NUR MAHOMED PEERBHOY v. DINSHAW HORMASJI MOTIWALLA.

In their view the agreement of the 17th July 1912 was not affected by sec. 64 of the Civil Procedure Code and did not affect the execution creditors, but the equities created by it could be enforced against the auction-purchaser who was a person claiming under a party to that agreement and not a bonâ fide transferee for value without notice.

In Adam's appeal they held that only part of the property was sold at the auction sale and reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

From both these decrees the present consolidated appeal was brought to His Majesty in Council.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellants.—The agreement of the 17th July 1912 is void under secs. 64 and 73 of the Civil Procedure Code not only as against the attaching creditor but as against anyone who is entitled to rateable distribution.

Bibi Miyakhan v. Gulabchand Ramchand (1).

These agreements are void so far as they prejudice the rights of any execution creditors.

Dinobundhu Shaw Chowdhury v. Jogmaya Dasi (3).

The remedy of the claimant for specific performance is against the assets not against this particular property.

In any event the second Appellant was a purchaser for value without notice.

The evidence as to notice is contradictory, and the probabilities are that no notice was given.

They also referred to :—

Sec. 27, Specific Relief Act.

Dinendra Nath Sanyal v. Ramcoomar Ghose (4), Anundomoyee Dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee (5), Anund Lall Doss v. Jullodhur Shaw (6), Lalu Mulji Thakar v. Kashibai (7) and Ganesh v. Purshottam (8).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents contended that given an agreement to sale, specific performance can be enforced against an auction-purchaser whether or not he has notice.

The agreement was not made during the attachment under which the title of the present Appellant arises.

Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (2).

As regards notice the High Court say the evidence is all one way and that is in favour of the view that full notice was given.

Reference was also made to Peer Mahomed Dewji v. Mahomed Ebrahim (9) and Jetha Bhima & Co. v. Lady Janbai (10).

No. 3, to obtain under the Specific Relief Act, 1877, a decree for the specific performance of a contract of sale of the 17th July 1912, by which it was agreed that Adam Haji Jacob should sell and convey to Motiwalla, and Motiwalla should purchase :—

"All that piece or parcel of land with the bungalow, trees, plants, shrubs, etc., and a well standing thereon, situate, lying and being at Hill Road, Bandra, in the Thana District, Sub-District Bandra, admeasuring about 5,000 square yards, bearing Municipal No. 139 and City Survey No. 136, and bearing Collector's Survey No. 17, Pot Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5, admeasuring 25 Gunthas, and bounded on the East by property of Rustomji Muncherji Jasawala, on the West by property of Burjorji Ghamat, on the South by Government Hill Road, and on the North by the land of Mr. Dias, and which said premises are particularly described in the title-deed now in the possession of the mortgagees Sorabshah and Pirojsha Framji Bandrawala," for the price of Rs. 15,600, of which Rs. 1,000 were, in compliance with the contract, paid as earnest money by Motiwalla to Adam Haji Jacob on the execution of the contract. The purchase was to be completed within two months from the 17th July 1912. The contract was registered by the Sub-Registrar of Bandra on the 22nd July 1912. The only relief prayed for, to which it is necessary to refer, may, in effect, be briefly stated as follows :—That it should be decreed that Adam Haji Jacob, and the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, should execute a deed of sale in favour of Motiwalla, of the property described as bearing Municipal Number 139, and that Adam Haji Jacob should execute a deed of sale, in favour of Motiwalla, of the property described as bearing Collector's Survey Number 17, Pot Numbers 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Adam Haji Jacob, by his written statement, admitted that the contract of the 17th July 1912 was made and that he had received as earnest money Rs. 1,000, and pleaded, in effect, that he was ready and willing to convey to Motiwalla the property bearing Collector's Number 17, Pot Numbers 2, 3, 4 and 5, but that he was unable to convey to Motiwalla the property bearing Municipal Number 139, as it had been sold on the 25th April 1913, to the Defendant No. 2, in execution of a decree against him, Adam Haji Jacob.

The Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who claimed title under the Court-sale of the 25th April 1913, separately filed written statements, in which they pleaded that the contract of the 17th July 1912, was void under sec. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. They also pleaded that all the property in respect of which specific performance was claimed by Motiwalla was purchased at the Court-sale of the 25th April 1913, by the Defendant No. 2, and they further pleaded several other matters, which, in the view that their Lordships take of the case, need not be considered by them.

To the allegation that the whole property was included in the Court-sale the Plaintiff replied that on the face of the sale only the property being Municipal Number 139 was included.

The history of the various executions as regards the lands in question are as given by the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal as follows :—

"On the 19th of August 1911, an attachment was levied by a judgment-creditor under Darkhast No. 32 of 1911, and in June 1912, the property was put up for sale after being attached. On the 29th of August 1912, the judgment-debtor, that is, the first Defendant, paid in the whole of the decretal amount and costs, and therefore the sale was not confirmed, and the Darkhast proceedings were struck off on the 1st of October

NUR MAHOMED PEERBHOY v. DINSHAW HORMASJI MOTIWALLA.

1912. Before the payment of the decretal amount, namely, on the 9th of August 1912, another Darkhast was taken out by another decree-holder, being Darkhast No. 120 of 1912, and on the 10th of August the property was attached under that Darkhast. On the 12th of August the new decree-holder applied for rateable distribution of the proceeds of sale of the property. That application was refused on the ground that the money which had then been lodged in Court was not money realised in execution, but paid him in order to avoid the completion of execution, and there were, therefore, no assets rateably distributable. His application having been refused, the second decree-holder applied for sale of the attached property, which was accordingly sold on the 25th of April 1913. It was purchased by the second Defendant for a sum of Rs. 11,500. On payment of the purchase-money by the second Defendant, it became distributable under the provisions of sec. 73 of the Code, and would be assets which those entitled to rateable distribution would look to so far as there had been execution under the attachment at that time subsisting."

The description of the property as given in the prohibitory order of the 19th August 1911, was as follows :—

Creditors of Adam Haji Jacob had obtained against him a money decree, and in execution of that decree they, on the 19th August 1911, obtained from the Court executing that decree a prohibitory order and attachment of the following immovable property of Adam Haji Jacob :—

"1 One tiled house on the Hill Road at Kasba Bandra in Taluka Salsette, District Thana, having four slopes and walls of earth and stones (together with) the ground and the tenement, the front yard and the rear yard and the cut-house and (together with) the room for preparing food and the kitchen and a hut of (i. e., thatched with) palm-leaves for Mali (gardener) and (together with) one other small stable (roofed) with Mangalore tiles and a water-well and a privy and the pipe and (all) the appurtenances thereto. This house bears Municipal No. 139. (The house) including the fruit-bearing and flower-bearing trees and shrubs standing in the compound of this house and together with the fences and hedges. The four boundaries hereof are as follows:—The same is bounded on the east partly by a stone wall and partly by a Mendi hedge, and beyond that there is the property of Jehangir Rustomji Jasawala; on the west by the stone wall belonging to the Defendant himself, and beyond that there is the property of Burjorji Navroji Ghamat; on the south by the public road and on the north by the following Survey Nos. in the Saja of Kasba Bandra :—

Survey No.	Fa(lni) No.	Land.		Assessment.
		Acres.	Gunthas.	Rs.	a.	p.
17		0	$1\frac{1}{4}$	1	0	0
17		0	$4\frac{1}{4}$	1	0	0
17		0	$12\frac{1}{4}$	3	0	0
17		0	$4\frac{1}{4}$	1	0	0."

Now the schedule of the prohibitory order of the attachment of the 10th August 1912, specifies the property as being Municipal Number 139, and gives first the description of the property as given in the order of the 19th August 1911, without specifying the boundaries. It is clear, therefore, that the sale of the 25th April 1913, which forms the title of Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, cannot include the land described as Survey No. 17, Pot Numbers 2, 3, 4 and 5.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit upon the ground that the contract of which the Plaintiff asks specific performance was made unavailable in respect of sec. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. That section is as follows :—

"Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt, dividend or other monies contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment."

NUR MAHOMED PEERBHOY v. DINSHAW HORMASJI MOTIWALLA.

"Explanation—For the purposes of this section, claims enforceable under an attachment include claims for the rateable distribution of assets."

With sec. 64 should be read sec. 73 of that Code, which, so far as it is material in considering the facts of this case, is as follows :—

"(1).—Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realisation, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons."

The Court of Appeal reversed this judgment and gave decree for specific performance.

The difference of opinion lay in this. The learned Subordinate Judge, relying on a judgment, Bibi Miyakhan v. Gulabchand Ramchand (1) held that as sec. 64 with its explanation made any transfer to follow on the contract void in a question with persons having a claim for rateable distribution, and as the executing creditor under the attachment of the 9th August 1912, had applied for rateable distribution under the attachment of the 19th August, 1911, before the proceedings under that attachment were finally closed, that kept, so to speak, any transfer in respect of the contract of July 1912, void until it was made finally void against him by the prohibitory order under his own attachment of the 9th August 1912.

The Court of Appeal held that as the contract of July 1912, was only a contract to sell, and not a transfer with delivery of any property or interest, sec. 64 had no application. They then held that sec. 40 of the Transfer of Property Act directly applied, and that in the terms of that section the Plaintiff was a person entitled to the benefit of an obligation arising out of contract and annexed to the ownership of immovable property, and as such entitled to enforce it against a transferee with notice; and they held that the buyers at the Court-sale had notice of the contract.

The point raised by the learned Judge seems to their Lordships to be one of considerable difficulty, and not as easily to be disposed of as was done by the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal. In particular, it would have to be considered whether what was said in the case of Mina Kumari v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (2) has any bearing on the question, or whether that case is rendered inapplicable owing to the difference of phraseology of sec. 64 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 from sec. 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, under which that case was determined. It would also have to be considered whether at any given moment the Plaintiff was able to get specific performance. Their Lordships, if it had been necessary to determine these questions, would have required further argument. But they do not now think it necessary to decide the question, because they think the Plaintiff's case fails on another ground.

Assuming that sec. 64 has no effect, and that sec. 40 of the Transfer of Property Act has full scope, it is only if the purchaser at the judicial sale bought with notice of the contract that it could be enforced against him. Now on this point the evidence seems to their Lordships quite unsatisfactory. Judicial sales would be robbed of all their security if vague references to antecedent contracts could be held to invalidate the buyer's title. The notice given here is said to have been given by a Mr. Kirtikar, a pleader acting on behalf of the Plaintiff. But Mr. Kirtikar did not arrive at the sale until 4 P.M., the sale being begun before 3 P.M. He says he read the agreement, which was in English, but that he made a general statement in the vernacular that his client would claim on the property; further that the Plaintiff himself would bid at the sale. Kirtikar's statements are denied by the Defendants' witnesses. But taking them at their best, they seem to their Lordships far short of such unequivocal notice as ought, they think, to have been given in the case of a Court-sale.

Their Lordships think that the Plaintiff fails in his case. The result is that, inasmuch as their Lordships have already held that the Appellants have not purchased plots Pot Numbers 2, 3, 4 and 5, and have no locus standi to resist the Plaintiff's claim in respect of those plots, but that, on the other hand, they have made out their claim to retain plot Municipal Number 139, the decree for specific performance cannot stand, and the appeal must be allowed; but the first Respondent should have liberty to apply in the High Court, if so advised, to have a decree for specific performance in respect of plots Pot Numbers 2, 3, 4 and 5 upon such terms as to the Court may seem just. The order of the Subordinate Judge that Adam Haji Jacob should repay Motiwalla Rs. 1,000 should stand. The appeal from the decree of the High Court in Adam Haji Jacob's appeal to the High Court should be dismissed. The Appellants will have the costs of the consolidated appeals. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[TESTAMENTARY AND INTESTATE JURISDICTION.]

BUCKLAND, J. 1924, 25, February. | In the goods of EFFIE JESSIE CAROLINE MIRANDA, deceased.

Will—Married woman governed by Indian Succession Act, under twenty-one, for whom a guardian has been appointed by Court, if may dispose of property by Will—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), secs. 3 and 46 and Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), sec. 3, considered.

A married woman governed by the Indian Succession Act of whose person and property a guardian has been appointed by the Court and who has not attained the age of 21 years cannot dispose of her property by Will.

The facts of the case will appear from the following note submitted by the Registrar in Insolvency, Mr. S. C. Mitra, to Mr. Justice Buckland, and dated the 19th February 1924:—

"This is an application for grant of probate. The deceased was a Christian British subject and the case is governed by the Indian Succession Act.

By an order of this Court, dated the 28th day of January 1920, the mother of the deceased was appointed the guardian of her person and property. (Flag P).

By an order of this Court of the 21st day of April 1920 the former order, so far as it constituted the mother of the deceased as the guardian of her property, was vacated and the Official Trustee of Bengal was appointed Trustee to hold certain funds belonging to the deceased as "trustee" and to make same over to her on the 21st day of February 1924 when she was to have attained the age of 21 years. (Flag Q).

In the goods of EFFIE JESSIE CAROLINE MIRANDA.

The deceased died before attaining the age of 21 years, viz., on the 29th day of October 1923 and prior to her death, viz., on the 28th October 1923 she executed the Will of which probate is sought and was at the date of the execution of the Will of the age of 20 years and 8 months.

The mother of the deceased who had been appointed her guardian died on the 1st day of June 1923.

The question for your Lordship to consider is whether the deceased should be considered an adult at the date of the execution of the Will. It will be noticed that under sec. 3 of the Succession Act a minor is a person "who has not completed the age of 18 years." This definition differs from that of a "minor" given in sec. 3 in Probate and Administration Act which includes persons governed by the Indian Majority Act who have not attained the age of 21 years.

If your Lordship be of opinion that in the present case the testatrix was a minor within the meaning of sec. 46 of the Succession Act, then we can only grant Letters of Administration to her estate. If on the contrary your Lordship holds, in view of the definition of minor in sec. 3 of the Act, that she was an adult at the date of the execution of the Will, then probate can issue.

Another point for your Lordship's consideration is whether before deciding this question, you would direct special citations to be issued to the executor and beneficiaries under the Will and also to the next of kin, so that the validity of the Will may be decided by the Court in the presence of all the parties interested.

It will be noticed that if the Will is held to be operative, the property would go in a different proportion and to persons other than those who would succeed to the estate as in a case of intestacy. (Flag O).

The papers are submitted for orders. Three-fourths goes to the husband who is the executor and the daughter who is an infant of 1 year 9 months, gets the remaining one-fourth."

On 20th February 1914, Buckland, J., made the following order :—

"Let special citations issue to the applicant, and the infant daughter of the deceased, returnable in Chamber on Monday next. I appoint Mr. Maurice Remfry to be guardian ad litem of the infant for the purpose of this application."

The matter was set down on the list for argument in Chamber before Buckland, J.

Mr. T. Ameer Ali for the Executor.

Mr. Mehta for Maurice Remfry, guardian ad litem of the infant daughter of the deceased.

Cites Jagon Ram v. Mahadeo Prasad (1).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

BUCKLAND, J.—The question which arises in this matter is whether a married woman who died before attaining the age of 21 years and of whose person and property a guardian has been appointed is competent to make a Will or whether she is a minor and therefore not within sec. 46 of the Indian Succession Act which says what persons may dispose of property by Will.

The point is governed by sec. 3 of the Majority Act which in these circumstances postpones majority until the age of 21 years and does so notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Succession Act.

The point is settled by authority, and from the section of the Majority Act itself it is clear that sec. 3 of the Indian Succession Act which states that a minor is a person who has not completed the age of

(1) I. L. R. 36 Cal. 768 (1909).

In the goods of EFFIE JESSIE CAROLINE MIRANDA.

18 years has no application to the circumstances of this case.

The only other point which has been submitted for my consideration is based upon Exp. 1. sec. 46 of the Indian Succession Act which provides that a married woman may dispose by Will of any property which she could alienate by her own act during her life.

This introduces an aspect of the matter which is not covered by authority, but I do not think that what is stated by way of explanation only can affect the provisions of positive law, nor, if it could, that this explanation is intended to affect the status of a person to whom the Acts with the resulting consequences to which I have already referred, apply.

In these circumstances I must hold that the deceased was a minor and could not dispose of her property by Will and it therefore follows that she died intestate.

Letters of Administration as on an intestacy may issue to the applicant, her husband, on his furnishing security in the usual way. Costs of this matter will be paid by the Administrator out of the estate as between attorney and client. I certify for Counsel.

Mr. G. C. Moses, Solicitor for the Applicant.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 2601 TO 2620 OF 1920.

CHATTERJEA, J.
PANTON, J.
1923,
Heard, 2, July.
Judgment, 10, July.

BIJOY CHAND MAHATAB, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
AKHIL BHUIA, Defendant, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 50 (2), 102—Tenancies wholly or in part hajabadi—Custom allowing remission or abatement in respect of hajabadi lands in years of flood—Tenancies, if held at uniform rent—Presumption of permanency.

The presumption of permanency under sec. 50, cl. (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to tenancies which being wholly or in part hajabadi, the tenants, according to custom, in years in which there is a flood, get an entire remission of the rent where the land of the tenancy is wholly hajabadi or an abatement with respect to the hajabadi lands in respect of tenancies which are partly hajabadi and partly raiyati. It cannot be said in respect of such tenancies that a uniform rent or rate of rent is payable, when it is a case not of the landlord not realising the same rent in years of flood but one in which he cannot in view of the custom realise it.

RADHAGOBINDA ROY v. KYAMATOOLYA TALUKDAR (1) distinguished.

This was an appeal preferred on the 16th of November 1920 against the decree of K. K. Sen, Esq., 2nd Additional Special Judge of Zillah Midnapur, dated the 26th July 1920, affirming the decree of Babu Akhoy Kumar Mukherjee, Assistant Settlement Officer of that District, dated the 14th of April 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakrabarti (with him Dr. D. N. Mitter and Babu Sarat Kumar Mittra) for the Appellant.—It is found by the Courts below that the tenants Defendants did not pay the same rents during the twenty years immediately prior to the institution of the suit; on the other hand, the rents varied, portions of rents were remitted in the years of flood and hence there could be no presumption of fixity of rent under sec. 50 (2), Bengal Tenancy Act.

Mr. Jatindra Nath Sen for the Respondent.—These appeals refer to two classes of tenancies (1) purely hajabadi lands in respect of which tenant gets total remission of rents in years of floods, (2) partly raiyati and partly hajabadi tenancy in which in years of flood the tenant gets partial remission of rent, i.e., to the extent of the rent shown against hajabadi portion. In the first class of tenancy a certain rent is payable for a certain area, in the second class of tenancy a certain rent is payable for the raiyati area and a certain rent is payable for the hajabadi area but the sum total of the two rents is shown in the column of rent of the record-of-rights Khatian. At the foot of the Khatian, in the column of special conditions and incidents, it is noted that in tenancies of the first class the entire rent and in a tenancies of the second class the rent for the hajabadi portion is remitted. Refers to sec. 102 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, cls. (e) and (h). The tenants are entitled to the benefit of the presumption of fixity of rent under sec. 50, cl. (2) inasmuch as it has been found by the two Courts that the rents have not been changed for more than 20 years prior to the suit. The tenants might not have paid, as it is found they did not do, owing to the custom prevailing there, the full rent in the years of flood but still it must be considered that the tenancies were held at a uniform rent. It is not necessary to show actual payment of rent to obtain the benefit of presumption. Refers to Mohini Kanta v. Priyanath (2) and Narendra Lal Chowdhury v. Benode Behari Sadhukhan (3). In the years of flood in spite of the custom of remission of rent, whether total or partial, as the case may be, the entire rent is payable but it is not realisable by the landlord. Refers to definition of rent in sec. 3, cl. (5). In rent receipts too the full rent is claimed by the landlord but the tenants do not actually pay the full rent as they claim the benefit of the custom and partial payment is considered as acquittance. There is nothing unlawful for the landlord to receive the full rent if the tenants so choose to pay just as a creditor may lawfully receive a debt which is not realizable by suit on the ground of limitation. The presumption of fixity of rent equally extends to the case of tenancies where a fixed sum as rent is payable and receivable but not realizable.

Lastly, the landlord is estopped from contending that the tenancy is not held at the amount of the rent which is put in the rent receipt in the column of the rent payable.

Dr. D. N. Mitter in reply.—It is not the intention of the legislature to give a tenant the benefit of fixity of rent when a remission is granted on the happening of a particular contingency.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

These seventy appeals arise out of as many cases for settlement of fair rents under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In 14 of these cases the lands are entirely hajabadi and in the remaining 56 cases the lands are described partly as hajabadi and partly as raiyati. With respect to the hajabadi lands the tenants according to a custom get an entire remission of the rent for the year in which there is a flood and the question is whether any presumption can arise under sec. 50, cl. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act in respect of such tenancies. Sec. 50, cl. (2) lays down that the presumption would arise if it is proved in any suit or other proceeding that a tenant and his predecessor-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the 20 years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding. The Courts below have held that the presumption does arise.

The Plaintiff (the landlord) has appealed to this Court and relies upon the fact that as no rent is paid in respect of the purely hajabadi tenancies in the 14 cases nor in respect of the hajabadi portion of the remaining 56 cases in years of flood, there is a change in the rent and the presumption therefore does not apply to such cases. Primâ facie there is a variation of the rent.

It has been contended, however, on behalf of the tenants Respondents that the words "held at a rent" in sec. 50 does not mean that the rent shall be actually paid, that it is enough to show that the rent is payable. Reference is made to sec. 102 which provides that the rent payable at the time when the record-of-rights is prepared is to be recorded in the record-of-rights.

It is true that it is not necessary to prove actual payment of rent provided the tenancy is held at a uniform rent or rate of rent for 20 years before the suit. It is difficult, however, to see how it can be said that a particular rent is payable when that rent is not payable according to custom in the years of flood. To take a concrete case—a holding consists of 7 bighas, 4 bighas are described as raiyati at a rent of Rs. 16 and 3 bighas hajabadi at a rent of Rs. 8; in the years of flood only Rs. 16 is paid, the tenant getting a remission of the rent of the hajabadi portion, namely, Rs. 8. We do not see how after taking the full benefit of the remission the tenant can contend that the rent is not changed in those years.

The case of Radhagobinda Roy v. Kyamatoolya Talukdar (1) is referred to in the judgment of the Court below. But there a portion of the lands having been rendered unculturable by the overflow of a river, an abatement of rent was allowed in a lump sum upon a lump jama. The abatement was proportionate in respect of the quantity of lands and the abatement was held not to vary the rent so as to debar the raiyat from the benefit of the presumption under Act X of 1859. It may be observed that the lands in respect of which proportionate abatement was granted in that case ceased to belong to the holding. The abatement was granted once for all and the rent proportionate to the remaining lands continued to be paid.

In the cases before us the abatement is taken every year in which there is flood and in the illustration given above a rent of Rs. 16 only is paid in years of flood instead of Rs. 24, the rent. In cases of pure hajabadi tenancies no rent is paid at all in those years not because the landlord does not realise it, but according to some custom he cannot realise it. The expression "rent" is defined in the act as something lawfully payable or deliverable to the landlord for the use and occupation of the land. Under the custom the rent lawfully payable for a particular year in which there is flood is not the full rent but a lesser sum, in respect of the mixed tenancies. The landlord cannot sue the tenant in a Court of law for rent in respect of the hajabadi tenancies nor the full rent of mixed tenancies in years of flood. We do not think that sec. 50, cl. (2) was intended to apply to cases like these where under a custom a tenant gets an abatement of rent from the landlord.

The decrees of the Courts below are set aside and these cases sent back to the Court of first instance in order that that Court may settle fair rents. Costs of these appeals will abide the result. We assess the hearing fee at Rs. 70 (rupees seventy only) to be distributed equally in all the 70 cases.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 67, 68, 98—Anomalous mortgage—Provision that if possession not given to mortgagee within the term, mortgagee may sue for the money · Possession not given—Mortgagee, if may get a decree for sale or a money decree only.

Where a mortgage provided inter alia that the mortgagee should have immediate possession, and continue in such possession for 8 years, that he would apply the profits towards payment of the stipulated interest, that on failure to pay in the mortgage money within the said eight years the property should be sold and the mortgagee's dues recovered therefrom and that in case the mortgagor should, during the term, interfere with the mortgagee's possession the latter would have the right to bring a suit to recover the principal and interest, and it was found that possession had never been delivered by the mortgagor:

Held per CURIAM.—That this mortgage while it was not a mere usufructuary mortgage was also not a mere combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage, and was an anomalous mortgage within the meaning of sec. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act, so that secs. 67 and 68 of the Act did not apply to the case.

That the document correctly construed did not entitle the mortgagee in the contingency which happened to recover a decree for sale of the property.

This was an appeal preferred on the 11th November 1921 against the decision of the District Judge, Zillah Assam Valley District at Gouhati (E. E. Stinton, Esq.), dated the 16th June 1921, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of that District at Dhubri (Moulvi M. Ahmed), dated the 31st October 1919.

The facts of the case are as follows :—Plaintiffs, as sons of the original mortgagee, instituted the present suit for recovery of the mortgage money by sale of the hypothecated properties. The mortgage was an anomalous one. It provided inter alia (1) that the mortgagee would be put in possession of the mortgaged properties and appropriate the usufruct, after paying the landlord's rent, towards payment of interest, (2) that the mortgagor would pay up the debt within eight years and take back the properties, (3) that in case of default, the mortgagee would be entitled to recover his dues by suit, by sale of the mortgaged properties as well as other properties of the mortgagor and (4) that in case any hindrance or obstruction was offered to the possession of mortgagee, he would be entitled forthwith to sue for and recover the amount of the bond. Plaintiffs alleged that they had not been put in possession of the mortgaged properties as agreed and were thus entitled to recover the amount of the bond by a sale of the mortgaged properties, although the due date had not expired.

The material defence taken was that a suit for sale on the basis of the mortgage bond, was not maintainable, as the due date had not expired.

The learned Munsif found all the issues in favour of the Plaintiffs and passed a preliminary decree for sale. The learned District Judge held that the suit for sale was premature. The due date not having expired the remedy given in the covenant relating to disturbance of possession was a purely personal one; hence he dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit.

The Plaintiffs appealed.

Babu Girija Prosanna Sanyal for the Appellants.—The last two covenants must be read together. It is quite clear that the parties intended that the mortgagee should have a right of sale in both the contingencies. The idea of the mortgagee having merely the right to call for the mortgage money without having the right to enforce his security is very unusual and the covenants ought not to be read in that way.

Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta for the Respondents.—The mortgage is an anomalous one—rights of the parties must be governed by the terms of the contract. The two covenants are entirely distinct and are meant to provide for entirely different contingencies. In case of non-payment within the due date, the mortgagee is expressly authorized to enforce his mortgage security by sale. But in case of obstruction to or disturbance of possession, he is merely authorised to call for the mortgage money immediately without waiting for expiry of the due date. This is a purely personal remedy. The language of this latter covenant is exactly similar to that used in sec. 68, cl. (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, which would apply but for the fact that this is an anomalous mortgage, and it has been held that the remedy given by that section is a personal one.

See Hiralal v. Ghositu (1), Arunachalam v. Ayyavayam (2) and Abdul Jasalim v. Musstt. Rafiat (3).

I submit that a right to enforce the security by sale cannot be imported into the latter covenant without doing violence to the language used. The suit for sale is therefore premature and has been rightly dismissed.

Babu Girija Prosanna Sanyal in reply.—The remedy given by sec. 68 is not merely a personal one—it carries with it the right of sale.

See Linga Reddi v. Sama Rau (4), Venkatarao v. Mahableshwar (5), Kangaya Gurukal v. Kalimuthu (6), Jafar Husen v. Ranjit Singh (7) and Narpat v. Ram Saran (8).

The cases cited by the Respondents were all cases of purely usufructuary mortgage. I submit where there is a covenant to pay, as is the case here, and some one of the contingencies, mentioned in sec. 68, has happened the right to sue for the mortgage money carries with it the right to enforce the security.

I further submit that having regard to the last covenant, it is quite clear that in case of disturbance of possession, the mortgage money would become immediately payable, so that the mortgagee would be entitled to sue for sale under sec. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, this being not an anomalous mortgage but a simple mortgage usufructuary.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RANKIN, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the learned District Judge of the Assam Valley District. The suit was brought by the mortgagees upon a mortgage which the learned Judge describes as admittedly an anomalous mortgage and, in the course of the argument yesterday, that assumption was accepted by both sides. The position is that the Plaintiffs say that their mortgagors have hindered them from getting possession of the mortgaged property and they bring their suit before the expiry of the due date of the mortgage claiming that, by reason of this wrongful conduct on the part of the mortgagors, they have a right not merely to bring a suit to recover possession of the mortgaged property, not merely to bring a suit for a money decree for principal and interest against the mortgagors but to bring a suit for the realization of the mortgage security by sale. The first two remedies they are ex hypothesi plainly entitled to. The sole question is whether they are entitled to the third. I confess that when I first read the judgment now under appeal, it struck me as extremely paradoxical to hold as a matter of construction that the provisions with which I am now about to deal did not imply a right not merely to obtain a money decree but to obtain the realization of the security. From the point of view of an English lawyer, there is, I think, no case in which a secured debt becomes due and payable but in spite of that fact the security is not available therefor. On consideration, however, I am satisfied that, under the Indian law, the position is very different, and the position in the case of the present mortgage is a little complex. The substance of the mortgage is this :—First of all the general description which it gives of itself is that of a Khai Khalasi or an usufructuary mortgage. That is its broadest feature. But it is not merely an usufructuary mortgage. First of all, there is a provision that the mortgagee is to apply the profits towards the satisfaction of a certain rate of interest. There is a provision then that he is to enter into possession for eight years from the date of the loan. Further, that he shall relinquish possession if, within the said eight years, he is paid off. The document then goes on to say : "On our failing to discharge the total claim for principal and interest due upon this bond, you will be entitled with the aid of the Civil Court to recover the said total amount of the said principal and interest by selling up the property mentioned in this bond as well as our other properties, immoveable and moveable." That clause occurs immediately after the clause which says that the mortgagee shall be bound to relinquish possession if within the said term of eight years the mortgagors discharge the total claim. It is perfectly plain, therefore, that the provision for enforcement by sale of the mortgaged property comes into effect only after the expiration of eight years. That matter having been dealt with, there is a later clause which says : "If during the term we create any obstruction in regard to your possession, you will be entitled forthwith to sue for the principal and interest of this bond." It is contended now that this provision to sue for principal and interest of the bond must be taken either to be a reference back to the previous provision which contains the power inter alia to realise the security or, even apart from that, it must be taken to imply a right to recover the principal and interest out of the security. It is further contended that, assuming that it does not go so far by itself, there is, by virtue of sec. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, a provision which attaches to this right to sue the consequence which gives a right to have a sale. The first thing to observe is that this mortgage while it is not a mere usufructuary mortgage is also not a mere combination of a simple and an usufructuary mortgage. It is not what is sometimes called a simple mortgage usufructuary, but it is an anomalous mortgage within the meaning of sec. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act, that is to say, there are elements in the bargain which cannot be brought under either of those two conceptions. How far the rights of the parties in the circumstances are intended to extend must in any possible case, apart from sec. 98, be controlled by the construction of the document. Sec. 98 makes it extremely difficult in a case which is not a mere combination of recognised types to apply sec. 67 at all.' But it may be that the true construction of a document of mortgage, taken by itself, would amount very much to the same thing as is effected by sec. 67. In my judgment, the moment one finds that in the case of a pure usufructuary mortgage, the consequence of a wrongful interference by the mortgagor with the mortgagee's possession would only be that, under sec. 68, the mortgagee would become entitled to a money decree: the moment one finds that and finds that the mortgage is not a combination of a simple mortgage and an usufructuary mortgage, one must examine the document carefully to see whether one has any right to attach by implication the further consequence of the right to realise the security. In the present case, the phrase "to sue for principal and interest under the bond" seems to me very much the same thing as the language of sec. 68. As a matter of construction, I do not think it refers to the previous clause which is a somewhat elaborate clause and it seems to me that in a case where the parties may or may not have intended the rights of the mortgagee to reach up to this point or to that point, we ought to take the ordinary meaning of the document without giving in a "wide" or "benevolent" construction. After all, it is in the nature of a penalty or stringent provision. "If during the term we create any obstruction" a certain right is given and that right being stated there "to sue for the principal and interest under the bond," it seems to me wrong to extend it by implication unless the implication be very plain. It is quite true that in the case of a mortgage which is a mere combination of a simple mortgage and an usufructuary mortgage, the right to sue under sec. 68 would give a right to sell under sec. 67. That is because the statute has elaborately defined the contract in that case. The moment one finds that the mortgage is an anomalous mortgage and that it purports to deal with the question now in point, it is unsafe, to say the least, to rely upon sec. 67 at all. For these reasons, although the question is not easy, I think that this appeal fails and, inspite of the very able argument we have had from the learned vakil for the Appellants, I am of opinion that it must be dismissed with costs.

PAGE, J.—I entirely agree. The document in question in this appeal is obviously and admittedly an anomalous mortgage within the meaning of that term as used in sec. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act. Under that section, in the case of an anomalous mortgage, "the rights and liabilities of the parties shall be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage deed and, so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage." The learned vakil who appeared and skilfully argued the case on behalf of the Appellants urged that there is no provision under sec. 98, and there is no authority to be discovered in the Indian Law Reports, to the effect that the rights and liabilities of the parties to an anomalous mortgage shall be determined only by the terms of the mortgage deed, and so far as such terms do not extend by local usage. In my opinion, the language of sec. 98 is clear and precise, and it is incumbent upon us to consider what are the rights and liabilities of the parties having regard to the provisions of the deed of mortgage. Now, I will refer to two provisions only. The first is this: "On our failing to discharge the total claim for principal and interest due upon this bond, you will be entitled with the aid of the Civil Court to recover the said total amount of the said principal and interest by selling up the property mentioned in this bond as well as our other properties, immoveable and moveable," and, later on, there is found the other provision. "if during the term we create any obstruction or interference of any kind whatsoever in regard to your possession, you will be entitled forthwith to sue for the principal and interest of this bond." Now, I agree with my learned brother in holding as a matter of construction that the latter clause creates special provisions to meet a special contingency, and that this clause is not incidental or referable to the earlier clause which gives the mortgagee a right to sell the mortgaged property on the failure of the mortgagor to discharge the total claim for principal and interest due upon the bond. Under the clause in question, the remedy which is given to the mortgagee is the right forthwith to sue for the principal and interest of the deed; but, on the contingency arising, no power is given to sell the mortgaged property. Therefore, the conclusion at which I arrive is that as there is no power of sale given to the mortgagee under this clause or by local usage, having regard to the terms of sec. 98, no such power is to be implied aliunde, and the appeal must be dismissed.

REF. No. 41 OF 1923
AND
APP. No. 384 OF 1923.

RICHARDSON, J. SUHRAWARDY, J. 1923, 8, August.	THE KING-EMPEROR v. JAMALDI FAKIR and ors.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 133, conviction on uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, how far legal—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 307, High Court's powers in a reference under.

There is no doubt that the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law. But it has long been a rule of practice for the Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice and, in the discretion of the Judge, to advise them not to convict upon such evidence; but the Judge should point out to the jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence.

R. v. BASKERVILLE (1) referred to.

common prudence to say that an unprincipled accomplice should not be implicitly trusted and that it is dangerous to convict any person on his uncorroborated testimony.

In a reference under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., the duty of the High Court is to consider the evidence on the record as it stands, to weigh the respective opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury and to form its own conclusions. On general principles it appears that when the process which sec. 307 directs has been carried out, and the opinions of the Judge and jury have been measured, in the result the verdict of the jury should stand unless the evidence and the opinion of the Judge show clearly that it is wrong and that in the interests of justice it ought to be reversed.

QUEEN v. SHAM BAGDI (2) and EMPEROR v. NEAMUTULLA (3) referred to.

This was a Reference under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., dated the 25th May 1923, made by the Sessions Judge of Pabna and Bogra (Mr. G. C. Sen), as he disagreed with the unanimous verdict of the jury.

The facts are briefly these :—Some persons were tried by the Sessions Judge of Pabna and Bogra and a jury on charges of dacoity under secs. 395 and 396 of the Indian Penal Code. The jury in some cases unanimously and in some cases by a majority found all the accused guilty of the offences charged. The learned Sessions Judge accepted the verdict in the cases of four accused whom he convicted. As regards the other accused the Judge disagreed with the verdict of the jury on the ground that as against these accused the only evidence was the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice who had accepted a tender of pardon and was examined as a witness. His letter of reference was as follows :—

"The jury has unanimously found the accused Fote Mandal, Madhoo Pramanik and Meherali Pramanik guilty under secs. 395 and 396 of the Indian Penal Code and also found by a majority of 3 to 2 Madhoo Fakir guilty under those sections. I have agreed with and accepted the verdict of the jury so far as the accused Fote, Mosha and Meherali are concerned and verdict of the majority so far as Madhoo is concerned, convicted them of the graver offence covered by sec. 396 sentencing each of them to rigorous imprisonment of eight years.

The jury also found by a majority of 3 to 2 the other five accused, viz., Jamaldi Fakir, Kofiruddin, Kudratulla, Haku Mandal, Ainulla guilty under secs. 395 and 396 of the Indian Penal Code. But as I am clearly of opinion that the verdict of the July so far as these accused are concerned is against the clear weight of evidence I have been compelled for the ends of justice to refer the cases of these five accused for orders of the Hon'ble High Court.

The case for the prosecution is that on the 7th of Falgoon at about midnight these nine accused and the approver committed a dacoity in the house of one Isharat Sarkar of Pilgunj and that in committing the dacoity murdered the said Isharat Sarkar.

The defence was a plea of not guilty. As against the five accused Jamaldi, Kudrat, Fakiruddin, Haku and Ainulla, the only evidence is the uncorroborated testimony of the approver : The circumstances of the case are not such that the approver should be believed without material corroboration. The retracted confession of Fote and Madhoo are particularly of no value as against them. Their retracted and therefore vitiated statements cannot in any view be regarded as a sufficient corroboration of the approver's evidence. I should certainly think that the evidence is not, at the best, legally sufficient for the conviction of these accused and that in any case these accused should get the benefit of doubt."

Babu Heramba Chandra Guha for the Accused.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RICHARDSON, J.—In this case, nine accused persons were tried by the Sessions Judge of Pabna and Bogra and a jury on charges of dacoity under secs. 395 and 396 of the Penal Code. This jury in some cases unanimously and in some cases by a majority found all the accused guilty of the offences charged.

The learned Judge accepted the verdict in the cases of four accused whom by his judgment he convicted and sentenced. In these cases there is no ground for our interference and the appeal from the convictions and sentences must be dismissed.

As regards the other five accused Jamaldi Fakir, Kafiraddi Fakir, Kudratulla Mullik, Haku Mandal and Ainulla, the learned Judge disagreed with the verdict of the jury on the ground that as against these accused the only evidence was the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice who had accepted a tender of pardon and was examined as a witness at the trial. Being of opinion that these five men should be acquitted, the learned Judge referred their cases to the High Court under sec. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Now the learned junior Government pleader appearing for the Crown has conceded that the evidence against these men is confined to that of the approver. No stolen property was found in their houses, nor is there any independent testimony which implicates or tends to implicate them individually in the commission of the offences charged.

In his letter of Reference, the learned Judge says that the evidence of the approver "is not legally sufficient for the conviction of these accused." That is not an accurate statement. It is clear, however, from the learned Judge's charge to the jury that the law on the subject was well known to him and that he explained it to the jury fully and correctly. He gave them the usual and proper warning as to the danger of acting on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. He told them that the approver was an accomplice, that he was a ganja smoker, that he came before the jury under a promise of conditional pardon and that his interest would be to secure the conviction of the accused. But he also and rightly told the jury that a conviction even upon the evidence of the approver alone would not be illegal. There is no fault to be found with the charge. The learned Judge clearly had in mind the illustration to sec. 114 of the Evidence Act, according to which the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars; but he did not forget the express provision in sec. 133 of the Act that an accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person and that a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

The English law on this topic has recently been reviewed by the Court of Criminal appeal in an authoritative judgment delivered by Lord Reading, C. J. [R.

THE KING-EMPEROR v. JAMALDI FAKIR.

v. Baskerville (1)] and I think it is satisfactory to find that in a matter of this sort the law and practice in England and in India run upon precisely the same lines. Lord Reading says at page 663 of the Report: "There is no doubt that the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law. But it has long been a rule of practice at common law for the Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice or accomplices and, in the discretion of the Judge, to advise them not to convict upon such evidence; but the Judge should point out to the jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence."

In my opinion, then it cannot be said that the learned Judge made this Reference because he misapprehended the law. Nor can the verdict of the jury be attributed to any misdirection or any failure to direct the jury, on the part of the learned Judge. It may well be that if he had accepted the verdict and the five accused had appealed, the appeal, regard being had to sec. 423 (2) of the Code, would have been unsuccessful. But the learned Judge has not accepted the verdict of the jury. On the contrary his opinion is that the verdict is erroneous and should be set aside, and the matter comes before us not under sec. 423 but under sec. 307 of the Code. Now sec. 307 lays down that, in dealing with a case submitted thereunder, the High Court "may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal" and that "subject thereto, it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict the accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it." Our duty accordingly is to consider the evidence on the record as it stands, to weigh the respective opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, and then to form our own conclusion. It still remains that the verdict of the jury is first in the field and that the Code, sec. 299, makes it primarily the function of the jury "to decide which view of the facts is true and then to return the verdict which under such view ought according to the direction of the Judge to be returned" and "to decide all questions which according to law are to be deemed questions of fact." On general principles therefore it appears to me that when the process which sec. 307 directs has been carried out, and the opinions of the Judge and jury have been measured, in the result the verdict of the jury should stand unless the evidence and the opinion of the Judge show clearly that it is wrong and that in the interests of justice it ought to be reversed. It is sometimes thought that the expressions of learned Judges in such cases as Queen v. Sham Bagdi (2) and Emperor v. Sheikh Neamutulla (3) are not wholly reconcilable in respect of the powers of the High Court under sec. 307 or rather as to the mode in which those powers should be exercised. As each case, however, must so largely depend on its own facts, I doubt whether there is any real inconsistency. Neither the Sessions Judge nor the High Court would wish to interfere with the verdict of a jury unless in his or their opinion there were strong reasons for so doing.

In the present case I have no difficulty in holding that the verdict of the jury is unreasonable.

One incident in the occurrence was the brutal murder of the owner of the house attacked, Isarat Sarkar. His widow Kabiran Bewa, is, apart from the approver, Sadhu, the only eye-witness, who has been examined. She does not speak to having seen or identified any of the accused, but her evidence invites attention in two respects.

In the first place she mentions Sadhu's name in this way: "Shortly" she says, "before the dacoits left one said that my husband was still alive and that something must be done to put an end of his life; after that I heard some gurgling sound from my husband. One of the dacoits then addressing another said: 'Sadhu, this wicked woman must be tied down else she would give an alarm before we left.' On this one again caught me and another tied me with my cloth which was on me. Then the dacoits left." Sadhu's own account of the part he played is as follows:—"We went into the bari. I was asked to stand guard in the south-east corner of the south-facing hut and the others entered into the inner compound. Hearing some golmal within the house I left the place where I was and went into the varandah of the north-facing hut. From there I saw that a woman was in the varandah caught hold of by Ainulla accused and a boy. Entering the house I saw that there was a dead body lying on the floor. Jamaldi had a lighted torch in his hand. Seeing the dead body, I got frightened and sat down. Seeing me thus seated, Jamaldi asked Sadhu (sic) who the man was who was seated. Mehar said, 'Sadhu was seated.' Jamaldi on this got enraged and said why Sadhu who was deputed to stand guard came there. On this Kope who had a knife in his hand wanted to give me slaps. I then came out and stood again in my appointed place." Comparing Kabiran's evidence and Sadhu's, it will be seen that the learned Judge had grounds for suggesting to the jury that Sadhu was reluctant to admit that he played any prominent or active part in the dacoity.

The second matter to which I wish to refer is what Kabiran says about the accused Jamaldi "I know Jamaldi among the accused. He is a disciple of my father-in-law. He was indebted to us. He now and then used to come to our bari. My husband secured a decree against him and his brother. They tried to compromise the claim. They offered Rs. 400 or Rs. 500. My husband demanded Rs. 800. So the compromise could not be effected. That was some eight days before the occurrence. They saw my husband once or twice even after that. On the date of last visit they went away in angry mood." It appears therefore that Kabiran knew Jamaldi, and had, or thought she had, reasons for suspecting him.

Now, it is not mere pedantry, it is common prudence to say that an unprincipled rogue or ruffian like Sadhu should not be inplicitly trusted and that it is dangerous to convict any person on his uncorroborated testimony. His own account of the occurrence does not bear on the face of it the impress of truth in all its details and it is so easy in the course of such an account to slip in the name of someone against whom the injured party or his or her friends may have cause of suspicion or a grudge.

In this case, I come to the clear conclusion that the opinion of the Sessions Judge should prevail over that of the jury and that the five accused who are the subject of this Reference should be acquitted. If they are in custody, they will be released. If on bail, they will be discharged from their bailbonds.

I have already said that the appeal of the four accused who were convicted and sentenced must be dismissed. In their cases there is independent evidence corroborative of the approver's testimony.

PRIVY COUNCIL

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD ATKINSON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1923,
Heard, 6, March.
Judgment, 6, March.

SUDHAMANI DAS and anr., Appellants,
v.
SURAT LAL DAS and ors., Respondents.

*Hindu Will—Interpretation—Gift to widow, whether absolute or for life—Malik—Power of sale, if cut down, when donee with power directed to offer co-heir or co-sharer an opportunity to buy at an adequate consideration before sale to stranger.*

It has been well-established that, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the words of a Will in India are to be taken as having their ordinary meaning.

The word "malik" in itself has considerable force as indicating that the person in reference to whom it is used should take absolute interest in the properties conferred.

When, whilst conferring on his widow the power to sell, a Hindu testator provided that the donee before selling a portion to a stranger shall give the opportunity of purchasing it at an adequate consideration to the donor's heirs and co-sharers, the power of sale was not thereby limited in any degree and the gift should be construed as an absolute gift to the widow.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 30th April 1920, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 12th September 1918, of the second Subordinate Judge of Dacca.

The main question for determination on the appeal was:—Whether on the true construction of the terms of his Will, dated the 11th May 1896, the testator, Banka Behari Saha Das, bequeathed the property in suit to his wife, Kamini Sundari Dasi, absolutely or only for the term of her life. The Subordinate Judge, as well as the learned Judges of the High Court, held against the Appellant and found that the widow obtained an absolute estate.

The facts which gave rise to the litigation were shortly as follows:—The abovenamed testator had a brother, Ganga Charan Saha, who was separate in estate from him. The Appellant No. 1 was the son, and the Appellant No. 2 was the widow of the testator's brother. On the 11th May 1896, the testator executed a Will which, among other things, provided as follows:—

1. . . . . I give my wife permission to adopt five sons in succession. My wife aforesaid is authorised to adopt one to five sons according to her will.

2. If my wife aforesaid should adopt a son in accordance with the authority given by me, the aforesaid son and my wife aforesaid shall succeed to the ownership of the entire properties in equal shares, vested with the power of sale and gift, and no violation of such provision shall be permitted.

* * * * *

4. If the aforesaid adopted son, or my wife aforesaid, should find it necessary to sell any of the properties left by me, they shall be entitled to sell it to a stranger if my heirs and co-sharers refuse to purchase it for an adequate consideration.

5. If no son is taken in adoption by my wife, she shall succeed to all the properties left by me after my death, with powers of sale and gift, and my wife aforesaid shall be malik, and be in possession, and she shall have power of sale and gift in accordance with the provisions in para. 4.

The testator died on the 13th May 1896, and probate of the above Will was granted to the testator's widow on the 12th May 1898.

The testator's widow, Kamini Sundari Dasi, obtained possession of her husband's estate under the terms of his Will. She did not adopt any son to her husband. She made a Will on the 17th April 1907, dedicating all her moveable and immoveable properties to the deity, Banka Behari Jiu, the present Respondent. She died on or about the 8th November 1911, and probate of her Will was granted on the 12th August 1912.

The Respondents, who were the shebaits of the deity above-named, are in possession of the property of the said testator and his widow under the Will of the latter. On the 16th June 1917, the present suit was filed in the Court of the second Subordinate Judge of Dacca. It was alleged in the plaint "that in fact Kamini Sundari had no higher rights than that of life interest only in the eight annas share of the property described in the schedule given below, and that she had no right or power to make a transfer of it in favour of any person by Will." The Plaintiffs therefore claimed to recover possession of the property in suit according to the ordinary Dayabhaga law.

The Defendants denied the claim of the Plaintiffs and filed written statements pleading that under the terms of her husband's Will, Kamini Sundari Dasi obtained an absolute interest in the property. The second Subordinate Judge of Dacca framed a number of issues on the pleadings, but the 9th issue alone is now material, and it is in the following words:—

"Whether Kamini Sundari Dasi got absolute right to any property of her husband by the provision of the Will left by him? If so, to what extent of the property she got that right? If not, is her alleged disposition of the property binding on the Plaintiff, who is now the next heir of her husband?"

The Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 12th September 1918. He found the 9th issue as well as the other material issues against the Plaintiffs. Two contentions were raised before him, the first was that under the Hindu law a husband is incompetent to make an absolute gift of immoveable property to his wife; the second was that on the true construction of the terms of the testator's Will, the bequest of the property was for the term of her life only.

In the course of his judgment the Subordinate Judge observed as follows:—

"Whatever might have been the law originally, it has now been settled by authorities that Hindu law does not raise a conclusive presumption against the gift or bequest by a husband to his wife, of a higher than life interest in immoveable property, and that a Hindu husband is not legally incompetent to pass an absolute estate to his wife. . . . It is found therefore that Kamini Sundari got an absolute power of alienation over the whole of her husband's property by the Will and that consequently the disposition she made is valid and binding on the Plaintiffs, although the minor Plaintiff is now the heir of her husband. The Plaintiffs are not entitled to any relief on the above findings."

In the result the Subordinate Judge made a decree dismissing the Plaintiff's suit with costs, and from that decree the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. The appeal was heard by Richardson and Chaudhuri, JJ., who delivered separate judgments on the 30th April 1920.

The High Court affirmed the view taken by the said Subordinate Judge.

Mr. Justice Richardson said as follows :—

"Speaking for myself, I can conceive of no language which would have more clearly indicated the intention of the testator, that his widow should take an absolute estate. I entirely recognise and appreciate the fact that ordinarily a Hindu leaving property to his widow to be enjoyed by her after his death, would desire that the widow should take the usual widow's estate, so that the property should not go out of the testator's family. But it is too late to contend that, if the husband's devise in terms confers upon the widow an absolute estate, even then the widow can only take the limited widow's estate. The law has been otherwise, at any rate, since 1872, when the case of Prosanna Koomar Ghose v. Tarrucknath Sarkar (1) was decided."

* * * * *

"The right which the testator purported to give to the heirs and co-sharers was a mere right of pre-emption. I agree entirely with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge and generally for the reasons which he has stated in his judgment."

Mr. Justice Chaudhuri concluded his judgment as follows :—

"With regard to the use of the word 'malik,' I may refer to the case of Surjamoni v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2), where their Lordships of the Privy Council say: 'The word malik imports full proprietary rights unless there is something in the context to qualify it. The fact that the donee is a Hindu widow is not sufficient for that purpose.' We think that the words used here are stronger than the word malik. The same words were used when the gift was made to the son, and that also indicates that an absolute estate was being given to the wife. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed."

The High Court therefore made a decree dismissing the appeal of the Plaintiffs with costs, and from that decree the Appellants appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. L. M. Parikh for the Appellants.—The wife was only given a limited estate as is shown by cl. 4 of the Will which specifically limits her power of sale.

Although the word "malik" frequently implies full proprietary rights, those rights may be limited by the context.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ATKINSON.—The only question arising in this case is the proper construction of the Will, dated the 11th May 1896, of the testator Banka Behari Saha Das. He left a widow and a brother, who has since died, and is represented by his son, who if the testator's widow was only entitled to a life estate would be entitled to the property.

It has been well-established that in the absence of anything to the contrary, the words of a Will—in India—are to be taken as having their ordinary meaning. It appears to their Lordships that nothing could be clearer than the following provisions of this Will. At the end of para. 1 the testator says :—

(1) 10 B. L. R. 267 (1873).

(2) L. R. 35 I. A. 17: s. c. I. L. R. 30 All. 84; 12 C. W. N. 231 (1907).

(3) L. R. 49 I.A. 25, 35: s. c. 26 C. W. N. 425 (1921).

"I give my wife permission to adopt five sons in succession. My wife aforesaid is authorised to adopt one to five sons according to her will." [Para. 2 commences]: "If my wife aforesaid should adopt a son in accordance with the authority given by me, the aforesaid adopted son and my wife aforesaid shall succeed to the ownership of the entire properties in equal shares, vested with the power of sale and gift, and no violation of such provision shall be permitted."

Therefore, if there was an adopted son, no stronger words could be used to confer upon the widow the absolute right and interest in one-half, and on the adopted son the absolute right and interest in the other half of the property.

This is followed by a provision about their living together in the ancestral home :—

"and in the event of disagreement between my adopted son and my wife, my estate shall be divided equally among my adopted son and my wife aforesaid, and after my death, my wife aforesaid shall take out probate of this Will, and when the adopted son attains to the age of twenty-one, my wife aforesaid shall make over his estate to him."

Then paragraph No. 4 provides as follows :—

"If the aforesaid adopted son, or my wife aforesaid, should find it necessary to sell any of the properties left by me, they shall be entitled to sell it to a stranger if my heirs and co-sharers refuse to purchase it for an adequate consideration."

And the last paragraph runs :—

"If no son is taken in adoption by my wife [which is the event which has occurred], she shall succeed to all the properties left by me after my death, with powers of sale and gift, and my wife aforesaid shall be malik, and be in possession, and she shall have power of sale and gift in accordance with the provisions in para. 4."

In every one of these provisions it is therefore clear that the testator's intention was to give the absolute property to the wife—either in the whole of the property, or if there was an adopted son, in one-half of the property. As was pointed out in the Court below, the word "malik" in itself has considerable force as indicating that the person in reference to whom it is used should take absolute interest in the properties conferred.

The Appellants' argument which is based on the provisions of para. 4 is fallacious. What para. 4 says is this :—

"If the aforesaid adopted son, or my wife aforesaid, should find it necessary to sell any of the properties left by me, they shall be entitled to sell it to a stranger if my heirs and co-sharers refuse to purchase it for an adequate consideration."

This only means that before selling a portion to a stranger, which the widow has perfect right to do, she shall offer it —or give the opportunity of purchasing it at an adequate consideration—to the co-heirs. That by no means limits her power of sale in any degree, and it appears to their Lordships that the decision appealed from was right.

This appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Mahomedan (Shiah) Law—Wakfnama, interpretation of—Clause providing for reverter to donor on failure of heir in the line of the mutwalli—"Heir," meaning of—Disqualification of immediate heir, if bars next heir.

A wakfnama executed by a Shiah Mahammadan provided that only in the event of no heir of the mutwalli and naib mutwalli being found fit to manage the wakf property, the selection is to be made of a competent person from among the heirs of the wakif. A daughter of a deceased mutwalli who as his next heir would have succeeded to the tauliat was found to be non compos mentis, whereupon his grand-daughter claimed to succeed but was opposed by the heir of the wakif:

Held—That the provision meant that so long as the deceased mutwalli left a relation competent to inherit to him and otherwise qualified to administer the wakf, the office of mutwalli would not revert to the dedicator's heirs.

Under Shiah law, daughter's children and descendants are not excluded from inheritance in favour of agnatic collaterals, nor does a disqualifying cause which excludes the direct heir from taking the inheritance form a bar under the Mahommadan law, to the succession of the next heir, the heir presumptive.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the High Court at Patna, dated the 5th March 1919, reversing the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, first Court of Bhagalpur, dated the 6th December 1916.

The principal point for determination was as to who was to succeed to the mutwalliship of a wakf in terms of a wakfnama, and as to what is included in the word "waris" according to the Mahammadan law.

On or about 27th March 1857, one Bibi Peary Begum executed a deed of endowment, which she revoked and subsequently executed a tauliatnama wakfnama of all her properties on or about 23rd August 1868. The said lady had adopted Mehdi and Tasaduk Husain, whom she made mutwallis in the said deed of wakf. On her decease in 1873, a dispute arose, one Imam Bux claiming to be Peary's step-brother, alleging to be entitled to all the properties and the wakf to be invalid. A compromise was entered into by which Peary's wakfnama was declared of no effect and the properties were divided into certain shares, the said Mehdi and Tasaduk receiving 7 annas, while 5 annas share (one-third of Peary's property) was resettled as wakf. The deed of wakf is dated 5th May 1874. The said Mehdi and Tasaduk were, as before, appointed mutwallis of mosque and Khankah and Imambara of Shah Mohammed Sadik Jafri, respectively. In accordance with the wishes of Peary, the said wakfnama of Peary was, it appears, treated as Will, and the said Mehdi and Tasaduk were allowed to remain mutwallis. Mehdi was empowered to appoint his naib or assistant mutwalli and that in case of certain eventualities, one of his "waris" was to succeed him as mutwalli. Mehdi died on 2nd January 1876, and was succeeded by his widow Umda Begum, on whose decease on 18th May 1912, a question arose as to who would succeed her. She left a daughter Mohamdi whose daughters

BIBI AKHTARI BEGAM v. DILJAN ALI.

Asghari and Akhtari claimed the mutwalliship; of these Akhtari was regarded as the most competent, and the gentry of Bhagalpur, both Shiahs and Sunnis, elected her as mutwalli. A Will was also made in her favour by Umda. In the mutation proceedings which followed, Akhtari Begam was declared as rightful person to succeed as mutwalli. The Respondent thereupon instituted the present suit.

In the plaint, the circumstances leading up to the present litigation were set forth. It was pleaded that as Umda's daughter Mohamdi was a lunatic, her daughter Akhtari was not the "waris" of Umda, and therefore she could not succeed. It was also alleged that Akhtari was not competent enough to succeed.

Written statement was filed by Akhtari Begam who traversed all the material points in the said plaint and alleged as a matter of Mahommadan law the term "waris" included all persons who were likely to succeed, which term included both "waris kariba" and "baida" (next and remote waris), ascendants as well as descendants, that it was a genuine term as has been laid down by jurists of recognised authority of both the Sunni and Shiah schools; that the intention of the wakif was to regard the term of waris in its generic sense; that in consequence she was the proper person to succeed.

On these pleadings some 11 issues were framed, of which the following are material :—

(1) Is the Plaintiff entitled to be the mutwalli of the Masjid and Khankah of Takia Shah Mohammed Sadik Jafri, at Gola Ghat, in the town of Bhagalpur, in the place of Bibi Umda Begum, deceased, under the terms of wakfnama, dated the 5th May 1874, executed by Imam Bux?

(2) Is the Defendant a "waris" of Umda Begum within the meaning of the word as used in the wakfnàma.

The learned Subordinate Judge, after recording evidence both oral and documentary adduced by parties, delivered judgment on 6th December 1916. He held that the word "waris" included all those who were likely to succeed to the mutwalli; that the word "waris" in the sense of law had no meaning in case of dismissal of the mutwalli in certain eventuality; that the intention of the maker of the wakf was also to use the word "waris" as used in the deed according to the Mohammadan law. In the result he decided in favour of the Appellant as entitled to succeed as mutwalli.

Being dissatisfied with the said judgment of the Subordinate Judge, the Respondent appealed to the High Court.

On 5th March 1919, the High Court delivered its judgment. It held that the word "waris" was used in its primary and ordinary meaning, that of "legal heir," and that therefore Akhtari was not the legal heir of Umda. It did not, however, apply the principles of the Mahommadan law to the benefaction which was purely Mahommadan. It allowed the appeal.

The Appellant being aggrieved by the said judgment of the High Court, obtained leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council on 25th November 1919.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and A. Majid for the Appellant.—The question at issue turns on the construction of the wakfnama.

The word "waris" means any person in a line of succession who could possibly succeed. The rule of succession here was created by the deed.

Mr. Hyam for the Respondent.—The meaning of the word "heir" depends on the context, it may mean either the legal heir or lineal descendant, but here it is clearly confined to the person entitled to take in direct succession to the deceased mutwalli and failing such direct heir there is a reversion to the dedicator or his heirs. Arumugam Pillai v. Vijayammal (2).

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The question for determination in this appeal lies within a very small compass, and turns upon the construction of the word waris or "heir" used in a wakfnama or deed of dedication, executed by one Mir Imam Bux on the 5th May 1874. It appears that Imam Bux had a step-sister, Bibi Peary Begum, who died in 1873. She left no heir entitled under the Mahammadan Law to her inheritance, excepting the half-brother Imam Bux. Peary Begum appears to have brought up as foster sons two boys named respectively Mian Mehdi Husain and Mian Tasaduk Husain; and on the death of Peary Begum disputes arose between Imam Bux and these two young men respecting the property left by her. These disputes were compromised, and on the 5th May 1874, Imam Bux, as owner of the property left by Peary Begum, executed the wakfnama on which the present suit is brought. The parties are governed by the Shiah (Imamia) Law.

By this document he dedicated a part of the property to various religious purposes, including a mosque and a Khankah, and appointed Mehdi Husain to be the mutwalli or curator thereof. He similarly dedicated another part of the property to identical objects, and appointed Tasaduk Husain to be the mutwalli of this wakf. He also appointed his own son Syed Amjad Ali as naib or deputy mutwalli. The provision relating to the management of the two wakfs is as follows :—

"The management, including the collection of the entire wakf estate, the distribution of the allowances to the persons receiving the same, both in perpetuity and for life, the appointment and dismissal of servants, and the payment of Government revenue, shall be made in consultation with all the three persons, viz., the two mutwallis and the naib mutwalli named above. The mutwalli Syed Mehdi Husian shall be at liberty to appoint on his own authority, and at any time he pleases, a competent person as his assistant mutwalli for the efficient management of the affairs of the tauliat."

Regarding the application of the income of the wakf Imam Bux made the following provision :—

"All the three persons together will, from the savings of the wakf property, continue to pay the allowance for the maintenance of all persons named herein below, viz., those for whom it is fixed in perpetuity, generation after generation, and those for whom it is fixed for life only—those for whom the allowance is fixed to be paid for ever, shall continue to get it from the above income as long as their lives continue while those for whom it (the allowance) is fixed for life only shall get it until their death. Out of the savings of the income of the wakf estate Syed Mehdi Husain, the mutwalli of the Masjid and the Khankah at Bhagalpur, shall receive an allowance of Rs. 50 per mensem; Syed Tasaduk Husain, the mutwalli of the Imambara at Bhagalpur, the Masjid at Mohanpur, and the Imambaras at Pirpainti. etc., mentioned above, an allowance of Rs. 20 per mensem; and Syed Amjad Ali, the naib mutwalli, an allowance of Rs. 10 per mensem, for the efficient discharge of their duties as mutwallis and naib mutwalli, and for management of the endowment properties."

Mehdi Husain died in 1876, and on his death his widow Umda Begum succeeded to the tauliat or governance of the wakf that had been entrusted to him under the wakfnama. Umda Begum died on the 15th May 1912, survived by a daughter named Mohamdi Begum and a grand-daughter, the present Appellant. In the ordinary course and in accordance with the provisions of the wakfnama, the daughter would be entitled to the tauliat, but she was found to be non compos mentis. The grand-daughter thereupon claimed the office of mutwalli. The Plaintiff Diljan, a son of Imam Bux, disputed her title, alleging that as Mohamdi Begum, the direct heir to Umda Begum, was insane and incompetent to be the mutwalli, the tauliat had passed to the line of the dedicator. The Revenue Courts accepted Akhtari Begam's claim, and she obtained possession of the wakf estate held by her grand-father.

The present suit to oust the Defendant from the governance of the wakf was instituted by Diljan on the 13th March 1914, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur. The Defendant Akhtari Begam denied the Plaintiff's title, and asserted that as the next in the line of descent, according to the Shiah (Imamia) Law, owing to her mother's incompetency, she was entitled to the tauliat under the wakfnama.

The Subordinate Judge, after a careful examination of the language and the provisions of the wakfnama, held against the Plaintiff's claim and dismissed the suit. He summed up his finding in the following words:—

"There cannot be any doubt that the Defendant is a competent person to hold the post of a mutwalli. She is a literate woman, and she can understand accounts. Moreover, when her grand-mother, Umda Begam, who was illiterate, could be considered competent for that, the Defendant is much more competent. She lives at Bhagalpur for the most part, and she can always have the help of her husband. This issue, viz., the issue as to competency, is found in Defendant's favour."

On appeal to the Patna High Court by the Plantiff, the learned Judges took a wholly contrary veiw. They thought that the word "heir" used in the wakfnama applied strictly to the person entitled to take in direct succession to the deceased mutwalli. In coming to this conclusion they seem to have placed somewhat undue reliance on the words "waris sharye" or "legal heir," used in another part of the document. They thought the expression "legal heir" indicated that the wâkif meant that the tauliat should go to the direct heir of the deceased mutwalli, and if such heir was incompetent it was to revert to the dedicator or his heirs. They accordingly held that on the death of Umda Begum, her daughter being of unsound mind, the descent in the line of Mehdi Husain ceased, and the wakf reverted to Imam Bux's heirs, and they accordingly reversed the order of the Subordinate Judge and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff Diljan. In this connection it should be noted that under the Shiah Law daughter's children and decendants are not excluded from inheritance in favour of agnatic collaterals; nor does a disqualifying cause which excludes the direct heir from taking the inheritance form a bar, under the Mahommedan Law, to the succession of the next heir, the heir presumptive. The grand-daughter is thus as much a "legal heir" under the Shiah Law as the daughter. Their Lordships are of opinion that the learned Judges of the High Court, in coming to the conclusion at which they arrived, overlooked the passage in which Imam Bux laid down the rule providing for the succession to the office of mutwalli. That rule is in these terms:—

"In the event of slackness, negligence or discovery of misappropriation on their part, I or my heirs shall be at liberty to dispense with the services of the said mutwalli, and in case of death or dismissal of any mutwalli, if any heir belonging to the Imamia sect and competent enough to administer the wakf property be not left to the mutwalli, the naib mutwalli shall succeed him as mutwalli and a naib mutwalli shall be appointed from among his (naib mutwalli's) heirs. In the event of no heir of the mutwallis and the naib mutwalli being found fit to manage the wakf property, selection shall be made of a competent person from among the heirs of me, the executant. If, God forbid, no heir of mine near or remote be found, the authorities for the time being shall be competent to appoint a suitable person belonging to the Imamia sect to administer the wakf property mentioned above. But so long as the mutwallis and the naib mutwalli aforesaid shall manage the affairs of the wakf estate faithfully and efficiently, no one shall question (the tenure of the offices by the mutwallis) or be competent to complain (urge their dismissal, nor shall they be dismissed) unless the complaint is substantiated before the authorities for the time being."

It will be seen from the above that, in the event of "slackness, negligence or discovery of misappropriation on the part of the mutwallis," power is reserved to Imam Bux and his heirs to dispense with their services. At the same time it is distinctly provided that "in case of death or dismissal" (for causes already recited) of any dismissed mutwalli, the succession to the office should go to the heir of the deceased; and that when no heir "belonging to the Imamia sect, and competent enough to administer the wakf," is left to the mutwalli, that the naib mutwalli shall succeed him as mutwalli, and a naib mutwalli shall be appointed from among his (the naib mutwalli's) heirs. It is only in the event of no heir of the mutwalli and the naib mutwalli being found fit to manage the wakf property, that selection is to be made of a competent person from among the heirs to the wakif.

In their Lordships' opinion this passage in the wakfnama clearly shows that so long as the deceased mutwalli leaves a relation competent to inherit to him and otherwise qualified to administer the wakf, the office of mutwalli cannot revert to the dedicator's heirs.

The English cases referred to by the learned Judges of the High Court have, in their Lordships' opinion, no bearing on the present controversy.

The Subordinate Judge in this case has found clearly on the evidence that the Defendant was competent to carry on the administration, and their Lordships do not find anything in the record to suggest to the contrary. They think, therefore, that the judgment and decree of the High Court should be reversed, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored, with costs in the High Court and of this appeal and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of February 1920 against the decree of Babu Chandra Bhusan Banerjee, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zilla Tipperah, dated the 6th of April 1918.

The facts and arguments will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mahendranath Ray, Bepin Chandra Bosu and Radhikaranjan Guha for the Appellant.

Babus Gunoda Charan Sen and Jatis Chandra Guha for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal is directed against an order absolute made on the basis of a consent decree in a mortgage suit.

On the 5th April 1916, the Plaintiffs-Respondents instituted a suit against the Defendant-Appellant to enforce a mortgage security. On the 2nd February 1917 a decree was made by consent of parties. The decree stated that the decree-holders would be entitled to receive from the judgment-debtor Rs. 4,000 on account of principal and Rs. 400 on account of costs. The aggregate sum of Rs. 4,400 was to be paid by annual instalments which were specified in the schedule. The decree then proceeded as follows: "The Defendants will pay to the Plaintiffs Rs. 4,400 on account of the claim and costs as per instalments mentioned below. If default is made in payment of any one instalment, the Plaintiffs will then be entitled to realise the whole amount due for all instalments at one and the same time by taking out execution. The properties mortgaged shall remain charged under the mortgage until the amount due for the last instalment has been paid." It is not disputed that nothing was paid under the decree. The result was that on the 12th October 1917 the Plaintiffs decree-holders applied for an order absolute, which was made on the 6th April 1918. An appeal was thereupon preferred to the District Judge on the assumption that as the decree was for a sum less than Rs. 5,000, the proper forum of appeal was the Court of the District Judge. It subsequently transpired, however, that the value of the suit was more than Rs. 5,000 and that consequently the appeal lay to this Court. The appeal was consequently lodged here and has now been brought up for final disposal.

The judgment-debtors have urged in support of the appeal that the remedy of the decree-holder is not by way of execution but by way of a regular suit to enforce the consent decree. In support of this contention, reliance has been placed upon the provision of r. 14 of Or. 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which is in these terms: "Where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage and he may institute such suit notwithstanding anything contained in Or. I, r. 2." Reference has also been made to the decisions in Chandranath Dey v. Burroda Shundary Ghose (1), Abhoyeswari Dabee v. Gouri Sankar Pandey (2), Matangini Dassi v. Chooneymoni Dassee (3) and Hem Ban v. Behari Gir (4), which all turned upon the construction of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Kailash Chandra Pal (5) and Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Kailash Chandra Pal (6) which were decided on the terms of Or. 34, r. 14. We are of opinion that the cases mentioned are distinguishable and that the provision of Or. 34, r. 14 is not applicable to the present case.

In each of the cases mentioned, the decree was for money and there was a charge upon the properties for security in respect of the judgment-debt. There was no express provision in the decree, as there is in the present case, that the decree-holder would be entitled to realise his dues by execution of the decree. In the case before us, as already stated, it was expressly provided that if default was made in payment of one instalment, the decree-holders would be entitled to realise the whole amount due for all instalments at one and the same time by taking out execution. There is no reason why a restricted meaning should be placed upon the expression "taking out the execution." We cannot accept the contention of the Appellant that this refers merely to taking out execution of the decree as a money decree against properties of the judgment-debtor other than the hypothecated properties. The intention of the parties plainly was that if default was made by the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder would be at liberty to take out execution against the mortgaged properties which were to remain charged until the amount due for the last instalment should be paid. This view is supported by the decisions in Abir Paramanik v. Jahar Mahmud Mondal (7) and Ambalal Bapubhai v. Narayana Tatyaba (8). The parties in the case before us were obviously anxious to avoid recourse to a fresh suit on the basis of the decree, such as might be necessary in view of the decisions already cited.

The only question which remains is, whether a decree by consent of this description is or is not operative as between the parties thereto. The answer must obviously be in the affirmative. It is sufficient to refer to the Full Bench decision in Ashutosh Sikdar v. Beharilal Kirtania (9) which was explained in Bechu Singh v. Bicharam Sahu (10) and shows that sec. 89 (2) was enacted for the benefit of the litigating parties. It is further clear from Sundari Debi v. Sovaram Agarwalla (11), Bechu Singh v. Bicharam Sahu (10), Biswa Nath v. Bhagwandin (12) and Syam Mandal v. Satinath Banerjee (13), that when a consent decree has been made, as was made in this case, before execution is taken out, an order absolute should be obtained by the decree-holder on notice, so as to allow an opportunity to the judgment-debtor to show cause, if possible, why the decree should not be made final.

The result is that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

Cases can be conceived when the Court might rightly consider that the value of the property as stated by both parties should be mentioned though it is generally desirable that the Court should attempt to arrive at a fairly accurate value of the property to be mentioned in the sale proclamation in order to enable bidders to judge of the nature and value of the property:

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Hughly, third Court, granting an application by certain judgment-debtors to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree. This decree was obtained by Raja Bejoy Singh Dudhuria Bahadur, the Appellant before us, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Faridpur on the 5th April 1918. The amount decreed was Rs. 20,774-10-9 for arrears of rent and the amount for which the property was attached with the addition of interest and execution costs was Rs. 24,018-1-3. After an order of a transfer, an application for execution was made in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hughly on the 21st September 1919. On this application the judgment-debtors' ancestral house in the town of Serampore was attached, sale proclamation issued on the 19th December 1919 and in it the property was valued at Rs. 5,000 which was the decree-holder's valuation. The judgment-debtors objected that the real value of the property was one lakh. The Subordinate Judge on the authority of a decision in this Court [Ram Kripal Singh v. Kedarnath Bose (1)] directed that the value stated by the decree-holder and also that stated by the judgment-debtors should be mentioned in the sale proclamation, the question as to what was the proper value being left open. Sale proclamation was issued in accordance with this direction on the 2nd March 1920 fixing the 14th April as the date of sale. The judgment-debtors then appealed and obtained a Rule No. 275 against the order directing both valuations to be stated in the sale proclamation and the sale was stayed by an order in Rule No. 201. The appeal was dismissed and the Rule discharged by a Divisional Bench of this Court on the 18th May 1920. The learned Judges referred to and distinguished the decision in the case of Saurendra Mohan Tagore v. Hurruck Chand (2) and concluded their judgment in Rule No. 275 as follows : " We are unable to hold that the Court can in no case mention in the sale proclamation the value as given by both parties. As however there will be a fresh sale proclamation, the Court will consider the desirability of attempting to arrive at an estimate of the value of the property to be sold." On receipt of the order discharging the Rule No. 201 for stay of execution the Subordinate Judge directed on the 7th June 1920 that execution should proceed and the sale proclamation was again issued on the 23rd June 1920 fixing the 10th August for the sale. On the 3rd August the mother of the judgment-debtors claimed a right of residence and maintenance in respect of the attached property and asked that the property be sold subject to these rights. This application was rejected by the Subordinate Judge. Against this order a Rule No. 594 was obtained from this Court and execution was stayed for three weeks. On the 27th August 1920, this Rule was discharged by a Division Bench of which one of us was a member. That Bench was not satisfied that the application was a genuine application on behalf of the Petitioner but believed it to have been made in the interest of her sons, the judgment-debtors. Information of the discharge of this Rule reached the lower Court on the 3rd September 1920 and on the 8th September fresh sale proclamation was issued fixing the 15th November 1920 for the sale. On the 5th October the judgment-debtors applied that the value of the attached property be ascertained by the Court on taking evidence. In support of this application a copy of the judgment of this Court in Rule No. 275 of 1920 was filed. It appears that for some reason which has not been explained the full judgment had not previously been sent to the lower Court. This application was rejected on account of the judgment-debtors' delay in making it. The sale was held on the 18th November 1920. The decree-holder was permitted to bid at the sale "at the highest price" and the property was knocked down to his bid of Rs. 5,000.

We do not understand the meaning of the expression "at the highest price," but nothing turns on this, since the bid-sheet shows that before this bid was accepted the sanction of the Court was taken after drawing attention to the judgment-debtors' as well as the decree-holder's valuation. The 20th December was fixed for the confirmation of the sale. On the 16th December 1920 the judgment-debtors applied to have the sale set aside under Or. 21, r. 90, C. P. C. There was considerable delay in the hearing of this case partly due to the failure of both parties to procure the attendance of their witnesses and partly to the inability of the Court owing to pressure of other business to take up the case on some of the dates fixed. Judgment was delivered on the 18th August 1921 granting the application and setting aside the sale and it is against this order that the present appeal has been preferred.

The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment has set out the following three points for determination. 1. Whether the proclamation was not served on the property? 2. Whether the property was undervalued by the decree-holder? 3. Have the applicants sustained substantial injury by the sale? He has found the first point in favour of the decree-holder and the second and third points in favour of the judgment-debtors. He has also held that the undervaluation of the property by the decree-holder was a material irregularity in consequence of which the Court accepted his bid for Rs 5,000. For the Appellant it is contended that there was no material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale and, even if there were, the judgment-debtors have failed to establish that they have sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity. On behalf of the Respondents, in addition to supporting the judgment of the lower Court, it is contended that his finding against them on the first point should be reversed.

On the first point relating to service of the sale proclamation on the property, after considering the whole of the evidence, we have come to the same conclusion as the lower Court. We agree with him that the absence of any motive for suppression of service is an important feature. We also agree that the direct evidence of service has not been successfully rebutted by evidence of witnesses who attempt to prove a negative. Our attention has been drawn to an alleged discrepancy in the evidence of the peon and the identifier as to the direction in which the house faced. But the former was speaking of the house and the latter of the gate of the compound and it is not impossible that the house should face west and the gate north. The learned Subordinate Judge has given his reasons for disbelieving the judgment-debtors' witnesses. What appears to us even more important than his reasons is the fact that he doubted the veracity of these witnesses after they had given evidence before him.

But in dealing with the other points that arise in this case, we think the lower Court has overlooked the importance of the fact that both the decree-holder's and the judgment-debtors' valuations were inserted in the sale proclamation. It has frequently been held that gross under-valuation of the attached property when accepted by the Court and inserted in the sale proclamation amounts to a material irregularity which is likely to cause substantial injury. It is sufficient to cite the leading case on this point, the decision of the Judicial Committee in Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar (3). In that case a sale was set aside in which an estate of which the value was not less than Rs. 8,000 or Rs. 9,000 was attached for Rs. 565 and was sold for Rs. 670, the estimated value in the sale proclamation having been Rs. 800. But it is clear from the judgment that the principal ground on which that decision was based, was that the acceptance of the decree-holder's low valuation by the Court was likely to mislead bidders. At p. 417 importance is given to the fact that "the value of the property to sell was given at Rs. 800" and at p. 418 it was pointed out "that an intending purchaser would readily accept the assurance of the Court that an estate attached for Rs. 565 was worth no more than Rs. 800." In the present case there has been no valuation at all by the Court. Though the statement of the two different valuations might not be of much assistance to an intending purchaser, it was not likely to mislead him.

(3) I. L. R. 20 All. 412; s. c. 2 C. W. N. 550 (P. C.) (1898).

It was contended on behalf of the Respondents that the insertion of the two valuations and the omission of the Court to give its own valuation was itself a material irregularity. But in the case just cited their Lordships of the Judicial Committee also held that the valuation by the Court was made gratuitously, or, in other words, that there was no legal obligation on the Court to enter the value of the property in the sale proclamation. No case has been cited to us in which it was held that the procedure adopted in the present case was irregular. There is, however, the authority of the case relied on by the Subordinate Judge when he settled the sale proclamation on the 21st February 1920. Further the propriety of this procedure has already been considered by this Court when deciding Rule No. 275 of 1920 and we are in entire agreement with that judgment of which we have already quoted the concluding portion.

We cannot agree with the contention that the concluding remarks should have been treated by the lower Court as a direction to estimate the value of the property. They are clearly so worded as not to fetter the discretion of the lower Court. Lest our decision should be misunderstood as laying down a general rule that in every case where there is a discrepancy between the values of the property given by the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, it is sufficient to state both in the sale proclamation, we will quote also another portion of this judgment with which we agree. "Cases can be conceived when the Court might rightly consider that the value of the property as stated by both parties should be mentioned though it is generally desirable that the Court should attempt to arrive at a fairly accurate value of the property to be mentioned in the sale proclamation in order to enable bidders to judge of the nature and value of the property." We hold that this is one of those exceptional cases in which the Court was justified in stating both values instead of attempting itself to value the property. Our reasons for so holding are that the property was one that it was most difficult to value accurately and that to hold an enquiry would have further delayed proceedings which the judgment-debtors were obviously attempting to obstruct by every means in their power.

Our findings that there was no material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale are sufficient for the disposal of this appeal and we will deal shortly with the other points argued before us relating to the valuation of the property and whether there has been any substantial injury. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the value of the property is Rs. 40,000 with this qualification that this represents the price that would be paid by a willing purchaser to a willing seller. But the difficulty in this case is that the owners of the property are most unwilling to sell and there are no willing purchasers. The house is a large house in a Mofussil town and property of this kind is sometimes practically unsaleable. There is also evidence that the fact that it belongs to Brahmins reduces the number of possible buyers. Further, any one contemplating purchase would realise that if he bought the property he would have long and expensive litigation before he obtained possession. Under these circumstances it is not surprising that the decree-holder was the only bidder at the auction-sale. Even he was not a willing purchaser and has expressed his willingness to part with his bargain if the amount due to him under the decree is paid. The decree-holder's valuation was the price actually fetched at the public auction and we cannot say that from his point of view he grossly undervalued the property. Nor do we hold that the low valuation put by him on the property resulted in substantial loss to the judgment-debtors. There is no evidence that any one was misled or deterred from bidding by the insertion of this low valuation in the sale proclamation and we have pointed out that there were other reasons for the absence of competing bidders. We are not satisfied on the facts of this case that the applicants sustained substantial injury by reason of the alleged irregularity.

We accordingly decree this appeal. We reverse the order of the lower Court setting aside the sale. The Appellant will get his costs in this and the lower Court. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at 5 gold mohurs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER
No. 99 OF 1923.

CHATTERJEA, J.
PANTON, J.
1923,
14, August.

JOGGESHWAR MAHATA and ors., Decree-holders, Appellants,
v.
JHAPAL SANTAL and ors., Judgment-debtors, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 49K—Aboriginal, tenure held by, sale of, in execution of money decree, whether void or voidable—Application to set aside—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 12, 166.

The sale of a tenure held by an aboriginal in execution of a money decree in contravention of sec. 49K of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a nullity and not merely an irregular sale.

JOGGESHWAR MAHATA v. JHAPAL SANTAL.

The sale being a nullity neither Art. 12 nor Art. 166 applies to an application to set it aside.

The mere fact that a statutory provision is intended for the benefit of a class of persons does not necessarily show that it is not based on grounds of public policy and may be waived.

This was an appeal preferred on the 16th February 1923 against an order of the Additional District Judge of Zillah Midnapur (Mr. A. Henderson), dated the 21st November 1922, affirming an order of the Munsif of Jhargram (Babu Abinash Chandra Ghosh), dated the 21th July 1922.

The facts are briefly as follows. The Appellants Joggeshwar Mahata and others obtained a decree for money against the Respondent Jhapal Santal who was an aboriginal residing in the District of Midnapur to which Bengal Act, II of 1918, applies and in execution of the decree put his tenure to sale in August 1920. An application was made to set aside the sale in January 1922, which was far beyond the period prescribed by Art. 166 or 12 of the Limitation Act. The lower Courts held that the sale was a nullity and the question of limitation did not therefore arise.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu J. N. Mitter for the Appellants.

Babu Peary Mohan Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The question involved in this appeal is whether a sale held in contravention of the provisions of the Bengal Act, II of 1918, is merely an irregular sale or a nullity.

The Appellant obtained a decree for money against the Respondent who is an aboriginal residing in the District of Midnapur to which the Act applies and in execution of the decree put up his tenure to sale and purchased it himself on the 20th August 1920. An application was made to set aside the sale on the 13th January 1922. It was for beyond the period prescribed by Art. 166 of the Limitation Act or even Art. 12 of the Limitation Act. The Courts below having come to the conclusion that the sale was a nullity, overruled the objection of limitation and set aside the sale.

The decree-holders have appealed to this Court and it is contended that the sale was not a nullity and that the provisions of the Act having been made for the benefit of a particular class of persons and not for the general public, the Respondents could waive the irregularity of the sale and the sale therefore was not altogether invalid. We have been referred to certain observations made by Mookerjee, J., in the case of Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (1). The learned Judge observes "When the object of the statute has been determined, if the statutory provision is not based on grounds of public policy and is intended only for the benefit of a particular person or class of persons, the conditions prescribed by the statute are not considered as indispensable and may be waived, because every one has a right to waive and to agree to waive the advantage of a law or rule made solely for the benefit and protection of the individual in his private capacity and which may be dispensed with without infringement of any public right or policy."

(1) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 61 at p. 74: s. c. 11 C. W. N. 1011 (1907).

JOGGESHWAR MAHATA v. JHAPAL SANTAL.

The mere fact that the statutory provision is intended for the benefit of a class of persons does not necessarily show that it is not based on grounds of public policy. As was observed by Lord Campbell, L. C., in Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner (2), "that no universal rule can be laid down as to whether mandatory enactment shall be considered directory only or obligatory with an implied nullification for disobedience. It is the duty of Courts of Justice to try to get at the real intention of the legislature by carefully attending to the whole scone of the statute to be construed," and the case of Rajani Kanta Ghosh v. Sheikh Rahaman Gazi (3). At p. 451, Mr. Justice Mookerjee observes: "The only rule that may be adopted is that when the provisions of a statute have been contravened, if a question arises as to how far the proceedings are affected by such contravention the matter must be determined with regard to the nature, scope and object of the particular provision which has been violated. No hard and fast line can be drawn between a nullity and an irregularity." We therefore have to consider the object of the Act. The preamble states "whereas it is expedient to supplement and amend the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885." Sec. 49 (B) of the Act lays down: "No transfer by an aboriginal tenure-holder, raiyat or under-raiyat of his right in his tenure or holding, or in any portion thereof, by private sale, gift, will, mortgage, lease or any contract or agreement shall be valid to any extent except as provided in this chapter." The voluntary alienation therefore is absolutely prohibited except as provided for in that chapter and sec. 49K lays down, "notwithstanding anything in this Act, no decree or order' shall be passed by any Court for the sale of the right of an aboriginal tenure-holder, raiyat or under-raiyat in his tenure or holding, or in any portion thereof, nor shall any such right be sold in execution of any decree or order." There are certain provisos to which we need not refer. Sec. 49K therefore clearly lays down that there shall be no decree for sale of a tenure of an aboriginal and no sale shall be held in execution of a decree except a rent decree and certain other cases mentioned in the proviso. It is not reasonable to hold that the legislature having enacted that there shall be no voluntary alienation by an aboriginal to any extent except as provided in this chapter should allow an involuntary sale in the same chapter. The enactment is for the protection of the aboriginals against any indiscreet transaction. That being the object of the enactment we think it was not open to him to waive the benefit of the provisions. We do not think that the mere fact that the enactment was made for the benefit of a class of persons, viz., the aboriginals in certain district, does not show that it was not on the ground of public policy. We are therefore of opinion that the sale was a nullity and if the sale is altogether void the question of limitation does not arise. That question arises where the sale is a valid sale until it is set aside as it was in the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (4). Having regard to the view taken by us that the sale in the present case was not an irregular sale but a void one, we are of opinion that the application is not barred by limitation.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. The hearing fee is assessed at one gold mohur.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 832 OF 1922.

WALMSLEY, J. MUKERJI, J. 1924, Heard, 5, February. Judgment, 12, February.

JOGUNNESSA BIBI, Petitioner, v. SATISH CHANDRA BHUTTACHARJA and ors., Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 22, r. 9 (2), substitution of heirs allowed after the period of limitation without objection by opposite party, if to be set aside by Appellate Court—Sec. 115 (c), High Court's powers to correct gross and palpable errors of subordinate Courts.

An application for substitution of heirs of a deceased Opposite Party in a proceeding to set aside a sale was allowed after the period of limitation without any objection by the Opposite Parties. On appeal from the final order in the case, the Appellate Court set aside the order for substitution and dismissed the case:

Held—That on a proper application under Or. 22, r. 9 (2), C. P. C. and on showing sufficient cause, the abatement could have been set aside. But by reason of the application for substitution being readily allowed by the Munsif and no objection having been taken by the Opposite Party at any stage of the proceedings, the Petitioners were deprived of an opportunity to make an application under Or. 22, r. 9 (2), C. P. C. and they were misled by the course of the proceedings that were adopted. The order for substitution made in the case should therefore be treated as being one setting aside the abatement.

Held further—That "acting illegally" in the first part of cl. (c) of sec. 115, C. P. C. does not merely imply the committing of an error of procedure such as "acting with material irregularity" does. That part of the clause was advisedly left in indefinite language in order to empower the High Courts to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of subordinate Courts.

This was a Rule issued on the 4th December 1922 against an order of the District Judge of Tipperah (J. Bartley, Esq.), dated the 26th June 1922, passed on appeal from an order of the Munsif at Commillah (B. L. Biswas, Esq.), dated the 18th February 1922.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of this Court.

M. Mahomed Nurul Huq Chowdhury for the Petitioner.

Babu Nagendra Chandra Chowdhury for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MUKERJI, J.—The facts which have given rise to the present application are these :—

One Umedali applied under Or. 21, r. 90, C. P. C. in the Court of the 6th Munsif at Commillah for setting aside a sale and during the pendency of the said proceedings died on the 18th July 1920. On the 24th July 1920 the death was reported to the Court, and the learned Munsif made a note of it in the order-sheet. Thereafter on five different dates the proceedings were adjourned, on the ground that the heirs had not been made parties and six months had not yet elapsed from the date of death. On the 5th February 1921, one of the dates to which the case was adjourned, an application for substitution was made on behalf of the heirs and legal representatives of Umedali and the same was allowed. It does not appear whether the Opposite Party were present on that date or not; but on none of the dates to which the case was subsequently adjourned, was any objection taken to the order for substitution that had been made, and the proceedings went on with the result that the learned Munsif set aside the sale by an order passed on the 18th February 1922. The Opposite Party preferred an appeal to the District Judge of Tipperah and the learned District Judge set aside the Munsif's order and dismissed the application for setting aside the sale, on the ground that the application had as a matter of fact abated by reason of the death of Umedali and the application for substitution was incompetent and the substitution had been wrongly allowed. The Petitioners have thereupon moved this Court and obtained the present rule to show cause why the order of the District Judge should not be set aside and that of the Munsif restored or why such other or further orders should not be passed as to this Court may seem fit.

We have heard the parties and considered the facts and circumstances of the case in so far as they bear upon the present rule. The learned District Judge was undoubtedly right in his view of the law that the proceedings had automatically abated on the 18th January 1921 under Or. 22, r. 3, C. P. C. and no application for substitution could be entertained after that date, but the Petitioners by presenting a proper application under Or. 22, r. 9 (2), C. P. C. and by showing sufficient cause could obtain an order setting aside the abatement. We think, however, that by reason of the application for substitution being readily allowed by the learned Munsif and no objection having been taken by the Opposite Party at any stage of the protracted proceedings that followed in his Court, the Petitioners were deprived of an opportunity to make an application under Or. 22, r. 9 (2), C. P. C. and they were misled by the course of the proceedings that were adopted. The order passed by the learned District Judge reversing the decisions of the learned Munsif and dismissing the application for setting aside the sale has also not given the Petitioners any such chance, and, as matters stand, they are altogether without any remedy.

It has been pressed on us on behalf of the Opposite Party that our powers of interference under sec. 115, C. P. C. are very limited. In my opinion the case does not fall within cl. (a) or (b) but under the first part of cl. (c) of that section. "Acting illegally" in that clause does not merely imply the committing of an error of procedure such as "acting with material irregularity" does. In my opinion this part of the clause was advisedly left in indefinite language in order to empower the High Courts to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of subordinate Courts, the justification for the interference being determined upon the grossness and palpableness of the error complained of and upon the gravity of the injustice resulting from it. In the present case, in my opinion, injustice has been done to the Petitioners.

The question then is what should be our order. Having regard to the fact that the Petitioners are all minors with the exception of one who is their guardian and who is said to be a purdanashin Mahomedan lady and who as far as can be made out is also illiterate, an application on their behalf under Or. 22, r. 9 (2), C. P. C. stands a good chance of succeeding. I would, therefore, treat the order for substitution as being one for setting aside the abatement, and would set aside the order of the learned District Judge and remit the appeal to him to be dealt with on the merits. No order is made as to the costs of this Rule.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

These were a Reference and two appeals against the convictions and sentences passed by D. Vaughan Stevens, Esq., I.C.S., 1st Additional Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 14th May 1923.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Birendra Kumar De for the Accused.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

Hassenulla Sheikh has been sentenced to death by the 1st Additional Sessions Judge of Mymensingh and the proceedings have been submitted to this Court under sec. 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Hassenulla Sheikh has also appealed against his conviction and so have two other accused, Rezatulla Sheikh and Tamez Sheikh who were convicted at the same trial. Hassenulla presented a separate jail appeal and also a joint appeal on behalf of the three accused was filed by their pleader.

In addition to these three Appellants one Farid Sheikh was also tried with them. Hassenulla Sheikh was charged on two separate counts with having committed murder of two persons, Moulavi Mahjazal Huq and Kaimulla. The other three accused were charged on two separate counts with having, in furtherance of the common intention of all, committed murder of these two persons, offences punishable under sec. 302 read with sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. Rezatulla was further charged with having voluntarily caused hurt to Kaimulla with a cutting instrument. The jury unanimously found Farid Sheikh not guilty giving him as they said the benefit of the doubt. By a majority of four to one they found the other three accused guilty on all the charges framed against them. The Sessions Judge sentenced Hassenulla Sheikh to death and the other accused to transportation for life.

The facts of the case according to the prosecution evidence are as follows: The murdered man Moulavi Mahjazal Huq was a Zeminder of Chikajani in the Jamalpur Sub-division of the Mymensingh District. The three Appellants and the father of Farid were his tenants and had been refractuary since the year 1327 B. S. supporting the claim of the Moulavi's son-in-law Abu Mia that the land held by them had been given to Abu Mia's wife. A criminal case had been instituted by Mohammed Nuruddin (P. W. 28) the Moulavi's gomostha on the allegation that execution of a decree against Tamez had been resisted. Tamez, Farid and others were accused in that case. The case was fixed for hearing at Jamalpur on the 4th December last and the Moulavi and Nuruddin were there on that date. Nuruddin returned home that night and was told to send some one to meet the Moulavi the following night. On the night of the 5th December the Moulavi arrived at Prodyotnagar railway station at about 10 P.M. and was met by two of his servants Kaimulla, a barkandaz, and Imam Sheikh (P. W. 6). They went towards Chikajani going through some fields till they reached a Local Board Road running North and South parallel to the railway line. It was the night after the full moon. Kaimulla went first carrying the Moulavi's bundle of clothes and Imam Sheikh followed behind the Moulavi carrying some radishes, plantains and a water pot. When they had gone about three quarters of a mile from the railway station they were attacked by the four accused persons. Hassenulla stabbed the Moulavi on the back with a knife. Kaimulla then seized Hassenulla but was attacked by Rezatulla who cut him with a banki dao on the head. Kaimulla in consequence let Hassenulla go and seized Rezatulla. Hassenulla then stabbed Kaimulla on the back. After that the accused ran away. Imam who had not been touched ran to the Moulavi's bari and returned with Azizul Huq (P. W. 21), a son of the Moulavi and Bhadu and O Miz (P. W. 22 and 23), two servants of the Moulavi's younger brother Fazlal Huq (P. W. 30). Before Imam's return with these witnesses Azijar Rahaman, Amizuddin and Joynulla (P. W. 13, 12 and 19) who were also returning from the railway station came to the place of occurrence. They found the Moulavi being supported by Kaimulla and both were bleeding. News was sent to Azizul's father Golam Wahed (P. W. 20) and when he arrived on the scene the Moulavi was dead. Golam Wahed sent for palki bearers and the dead and the wounded man were carried to the Dewanganj Police Station. There the Sub-Inspector Jagatbandhu Biswas, (P. W. 31) commenced taking a first information from Kaimulla. As Kaimulla commenced vomitting the Sub-Assistant Surgeon of the neighbouring Dispensary Moulavi Wahed Ali Khan (P. W. 3) took him there for treatment. The Sub-Assistant Surgeon gave Kaimulla some medicine and bandaged his wound. He then sent for the Sub-Registrar Sudhansu Bhusan Roy (P. W. 4) to take his dying declaration. After this had been recorded Kaimulla was taken back to the thana where the Sub-Inspector finished recording his first information. It was then about 1 A.M. and Kaimulla and the dead body were sent to Jamalpur. Kaimulla was admitted to hospital at 7 A.M. on the 6th December. The Assistant Surgeon in charge, Dr. Jamini Kanta Sen Gupta (P. W. 2), considered his condition critical, so sent for the Magistrate to record his dying declaration. The Deputy Magistrate Babu Dinendra Nath Saha (P. W. 1) reached the hospital at 8 A.M. and recorded Kaimulla's statement. Kaimulla died the next day at 1-30 P.M. When his body was removed from the bed a bundle of notes of the total value of Rs. 205 was found. The accused were all arrested on the 6th December.

On behalf of the Appellants it is contended that the trial was illegal on the following grounds. The accused were committed for trial on the counts of the charge relating to the murder of Moulavi Mahjazal Huq and the hurt caused to Kaimulla by Rezatulla. The Sessions Judge added the counts relating to the murder of Kaimulla. It is urged that in so doing he acted in excess of his powers under secs. 226 and 227 of the Code. In support of this contention the cases of Birendra Lal Bhaduri v. Emperor (1), Queen-Empress v. Appa Subhana Mendre (2) and Queen-Empress v. Kharga (3) are cited. The facts of the Bombay and Allahabad cases more closely resemble the facts of the present case. Though in both these cases the conviction was upheld, this was done on the ground that though there was an irregularity it was cured by the provisions of sec. 537, C. P. C., a ground of doubtful validity since the decision of the Judicial Committee in Subramania Ayyar v. Emperor (4). But these decisions have been rendered obsolete by the definition of "charge" in sec. 4 (1) (c) which was inserted for the first time in the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1898. This alteration of the Code is in accord with the dissenting judgment of Scott, J., in the Bombay case cited above. The decision of the majority in that case was also expressly dissented from by Straight, J., in the case of Queen-Empress v. Gordon (5). There can be no doubt that these dissentient judgments are in accordance with the law as it now stands and that under proper circumstances a Sessions Judge has power to add a charge distinct from the charges framed by the committing Magistrate. In the Calcutta case cited—Birendra Lal Bhaduri v. Emperor (1)—the facts are clearly distinguishable from those of the present case. The principle on which that case was decided is stated at the conclusion of the judgment in the following terms : "The Sessions Court is not a Court of Original Jurisdiction and though vested with large powers for amending and adding to charges can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal and not with regard to matter not covered by the indictment." In the present case the murder of Kaimulla was an immediate subject of prosecution. In the order of commitment the Magistrate states : "There is ample evidence to show that Hassenulla committed murder by intentionally causing the death of the Moulavi and his servant Kaimulla and that Tamez, Farid and Rezatulla in furtherance of the common intention with Hassenulla committed murder by intentionally causing the death of the Moulavi and his servant Kaimulla."

Under these circumstances and for the reasons given we hold that the Sessions Judge acted properly and within his powers in adding the charges relating to the murder of Kaimulla.

HASSENULLA SHEIKH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

If the prosecution evidence be believed there can be no doubt as to the guilt of the three accused who have been convicted. In their statements before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge the accused made no defence beyond a bare denial of their guilt. At the trial two lines of defence were put forward. It was suggested that Kaimulla himself might have killed the Moulavi and been fatally wounded by him and also that some persons unknown attacked both the deceased and Kaimulla was induced by the Moulavi's brother Fazlal Huq to implicate the accused. Before us the defence urged is that the assailants were not really recognised and the present accused have been implicated because they were suspected on account of their quarrel with the Moulavi. The evidence as to the identity of the accused consists of the statements of Kaimulla, the direct evidence of Imam and the circumstancial evidence of witnesses who saw the accused going to or from the place of occurrence.

It has been strongly contended that the statement made by Kaimulla at the thana by intrinsic evidence strongly supports the case for the defence that he did not recognise his assailant. This first information was partly recorded before and partly after Kaimulla was taken to the dispensary. Though no evidence was elicited as to how much of this statement was first recorded it is suggested that the interruption took place before he had given the names of the assailants and that he was tutored at the dispensary to give the names of the accused. This suggestion is based on the fact that in the first information the occurrence is first described wihout naming the assailants, "4 men came out . . . . one of them stabbed the Moulavi Shanib, I and Imam held him, etc." This is followed by the statement, "I recognised the 4 men as Hassenulla, Rezatulla, Farid and Tamez," and a repetition of the manner in which the wounds were inflicted giving the names of Hassenulla and Rezatulla.

We are unable to accept this suggestion. From the evidence of the Sub-Assistant Surgeon and the Sub-Registrar as to what happened at the dispensary it appears highly improbable that Kaimulla should then have been tutored. It is not improbable that Kaimulla should have commenced his description of the occurrence by first speaking of the assailants without naming them though he knew their names. We find Imam telling his story in a somewhat similar manner both before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge. On both occasions before he named any one he deposed that four men rushed out and one struck the Moulavi with a knife. But there is also abundant evidence that before Kaimulla was taken to the thana, both he and Imam named the accused and we see no reason to doubt that they did so.

There are some discrepancies in the three recorded statements of Kaimulla and the evidence of Imam. The most important is the omission of Farid's name in the last statement of Kaimulla. This no doubt was the reason why Farid was acquitted. As regards the commencement of the occurrence and the manner and the persons by whom the wounds were inflicted, the stories are consistent in main details without anything to suggest that either of them is telling a concocted story. There was bright moon-light, so the accused could easily be recognised. It is highly improbable that Kaimulla should have accused persons other than those who actually wounded him. The case is weakest against the accused Tamijuddin. The story in Kaimulla's last statement that he raised a lathi to strike Tamez is criticised on tho ground that it appears from Imam's evidence that he had Kaimulla's lathi. But from the deposition of the Deputy Magistrate who recorded the statement it appears that what Kaimulla said was that he picked up a lathi and this may have been dropped bv Imam who was undoubtedly too frightened to render any assistance. Imam is said to have been called pugla or half-witted, but there is nothing on the record to indicate that this was more than a nick name and that his intellect was in any way affected.

The case for the prosecution as a whole is attacked by a suggestion that the place of occurrence was elsewhere than that alleged. This suggestion is based on two facts. The first is that earth, leaves and grass taken from the alleged place of occurrence were sent to the chemical examiner but no blood was detected in them by him. The second is that the Local Board Road was not the most direct or the most usual way for the Moulavi to go home from the railway station. The negative effect of the chemical examiner's report is not sufficient to rebut the strong direct evidence as to the place of occurrence. The witnesses who might have explained why the less direct route was chosen were not questioned on this point. We get it from the Sub-Inspector that there were rumours that people were conspiring to kill the Moulavi and this may well have been the reason for his preferring to go home by the more public though longer road.

The finding of the money on Kaimulla's bed after his death is unexplained. It is certainly significant that the amount agrees very nearly with the sum that was in the Moulavi's possession according to an account found on him. But it is impossible to make any deduction which assists the case either for the prosecution or defence.

Having regard to the strength of the case against the Appellants on the direct evidence, the circumstancial evidence is of little importance. Though the jury have not thought this evidence sufficient to remove their doubts as to the guilt of Farid, it cannot be altogether rejected. The strongest evidence is that of Amezuddin who says he recognised the four accused when they were running away from the scene of the murder. We see no reason to doubt the independence of Golam Wahed and the other witnesses of his household and their evidence is very strong corroboration of the prosecution story both as to the place of occurrence and as to the recognition of the assailants by Kaimulla and Imam.

Of the other points that have been urged in attacking the case for the prosecution the most important is the denial of Fazlal Huq that he had any ill-feeling with his brother the Moulavi at the time of his death. That seems to be false but we see no reason in consequence to draw an inference that Fazlal Huq has been concocting evidence to implicate the present accused. His explanation of his delay in starting for the scene of occurrence is not unreasonable. We do not think it necessary to refer to discrepancies in the evidence which appear to us of little importance as for instance the number of Kaibartas who came to the scene from the adjoining bustee.

On a full consideration of the whole of the evidence and the able arguments of the learned pleader who conducted the defence, we find ourselves in entire agreement with the learned Sessions Judge and the majority of the jury as to the guilt of the accused who have been convicted.

HASSENULLA SHEIKH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

In the case of Hassenulla on the reference under sec. 374 it was our duty to satisfy ourselves that the finding of the jury on the facts was right. On a consideration of the evidence for this purpose we have also come to the conclusion that the Appellants Rezatulla and Tamez were rightly convicted. In their case we cannot alter or reverse the verdict of the jury unless we are of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law laid down by him. We find no misdirection in the charge to the jury either on the law or the facts which was likely to mislead the jury. The only point of law of any difficulty was the application of sec. 34, I. P. C. The jury's attention was drawn to the essential point that it was necessary to find that there was a common intention of all the accused to commit each of the murders and that each of the murders was committed in furtherance of that common intention. On the facts, though the learned Sessions Judge expressed his opinion adversely to the accused on several points, reading the charge as a whole it cannot be said that he did so improperly. We see no reason to suppose that the jury did not fully realise that it was their duty to form their own opinion on the facts.

We hold therefore that the verdict of the jury as against all three Appellants should be upheld. We believe that they deliberately waylaid Moulavi Mahjazal Huq with the intention of killing him. From the nature of the fatal wounds on Moulavi Mahjazal Huq and on Kaimulla Sheikh there can be no doubt that Hassenulla Sheikh killed both these persons intending to do so. For these offences the maximum penalty of the law is not too severe.

We accordingly dismiss these appeals and confirm the sentence of death passed on Hassenulla Sheikh.

J. N. R. Death sentence confirmed.

[APPEAL FROM LAHORE.]

LORD DUNEDIN.
LORD PHILLIMORE.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.
1923,
Heard, 30, October.
Judgment, 30, October.

RAM SINGH,
Appellant,
v.
RAM CHAND,
Respondent.

Partnership at will—Dissolution, right of partner to demand, a legal and not an equitable right—Misconduct, if ground for dismissing suit for dissolution.

It is a legal right of a partner in a partnership at will to ask for dissolution. A suit for dissolution of such a partnership cannot be dismissed by the Court on the mere ground of his having destroyed old account books, prepared a false balance-sheet, made false entries in the books and having tried to deprive the firm of a valuable asset.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 19th May 1919, of the High Court at Lahore, reversing a decree, dated the 1st June 1914, of the District Judge of Delhi.

The Appellant and the Respondent were partners in the firm of Ram Chand & Co. carrying on business at Delhi. The Appellant claimed that the partnership was dissolved by him by a notice of the 11th February 1911. The partnership was a partnership at will and the suit was brought by the Appellant for dissolution, and for an account of the partnership.

The Respondent alleged misconduct on the part of the Appellant and denied his right to an account.

The District Judge held that the partnership had been dissolved and ordered an account to be taken.

On appeal the High Court (Rattigan, C. J. and Abdul Rwof, J.) held that the Appellant had been guilty of gross misconduct and was not entitled to any of the reliefs claimed by him. The Plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. Dubé and Bishan Narain for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and L. M. Parikh for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—This case is of the simplest nature. A gentleman who has a partnership at will brings a suit for a declaration of dissolution. The learned Judge of the District Court before whom the case depends finds and it is declared "that this partnership shall be deemed to have been dissolved on 11th February 1911, the date of the notice of the Plaintiff to the Defendant," and then he makes a declaration in ordinary form as to accounts being taken, but he puts in one particular finding, No. 3 :—

"An account of all dealings and transactions between Plaintiff and Defendant from December 1897, with the instructions that the debit of Rs. 7,559 against Defendant and credit of Rs. 3,133 in Plaintiff's favour are forgeries and are to be struck off, and all entries relating to interest p yable to either party are wrong."

Both parties appealed against that finding. On appeal, so far as the finding of fraud is concerned, the High Court are entirely in accordance with the learned Judge, and they say in their judgment :—

"From the evidence on the record it is therefore clear that the Plaintiff has been guilty of gross misconduct. He has destroyed the old account books, has falsely prepared a balance sheet, Ex. P. W. 1, has made false entries in the books and has tried to deprive the firm of a valuable asset."

If they had stayed there all would have been well, but they go on to say this :—

"Having done all this he has had the audacity of coming into Court with a prayer for an equitable relief."

But it is not an equitable relief for which he is asking. When it is a partnership at will, a partner is entitled to dissolution; it is a legal right, under the Code and under the contract. Then the learned Judges quote a passage from "Lindley on Partnership" which deals with the circumstances in which a Court may order a dissolution of partnership during the term, which, of course, has nothing to do with this case.

The Appellant here has been forced to admit that he cannot ask for any alteration of para. 3 which has been read, and the Respondent cannot support the judgment of the High Court, which says that there is to be no relief given; but on the question of relief he practically says: "There is no room for an account here at all, because we have already seen that this gentleman has falsified all the account books, and there is nothing to account upon." That is really trying to make this Board do what the Commissioner ought to do when the accounts are being taken.

In the circumstances it is quite clear that the appeal must be allowed with costs, and the decree of the District Court restored. With regard to the costs of the appeal to the High Court which were ordered to be paid by the present Appellant, their Lordships think that having regard to what took place there, neither party should have any costs, and any costs paid under the High Court's order must be repaid. The future costs, which will be incurred on the further proceedings in the District Court, will of course be in the discretion of that Court. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Messrs. Ranken Ford and Chester for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. for the Respondent.

SIR JOHN EDGE.	Appellants,

Judgment, 29, June.

Successive rent suits—Zemindar's decree in earlier suit reversed on appeal by the Privy Council—Later suit decreed during pendency of appeal, but not appealed against—Decision of Privy Council, if supersedes later decrees.

In certain suits by the Zemindar against his raiyats to enforce the acceptance by them of pattas or leases of Faslis 1314 and 1315 which had been tendered to them, the latter pleaded that certain rates had been fixed in Fasli 1292 which alone were recoverable and not the asara or varam rates (produce-sharing system) demanded by the Zemindar. The first two Courts upheld the tenants' plea but on second appeal the High Court held that the pattas tendered were proper pattas and the tenants must accept them. The decrees of the High Court were reversed by the Privy Council, but during the pendency of the appeal to the Privy Council, the Zemindar instituted similar suits for arrears of rent in respect of 1316 Fasli to 1322 Fasli against the tenants and recovered decrees which he realised in execution. After the Privy Council decision the tenants, who had made no applications for stay of trial of the later suits pending the disposal of the appeal by the Privy Council, sued the Zemindar for a refund of the amounts paid by them in excess of the rates determined in the previous suit in consequence of the Privy Council decision:

Held—That the decision in the later rent suits was not reversed or superseded by the decision of the Privy Council in the earlier suits and the suits for refund were not maintainable.

Decision of the majority of the Full Bench in JOGESH CHUNDER DUTT v. KALI CHURN DUTT (3) disapproved.

This was a consolidated appeal from a judgment and a number of orders of remand, dated the 7th March 1919, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, setting aside a judgment and a number of decrees, dated the 23rd January 1917, of the Court of the District Judge of Kistna, on appeal from a judgment and a number of decrees, dated the 3rd December 1915, of the Court of the Honorary Suits Deputy Collector, Bezwada, in one set and a judgment and a number of decrees, dated the 29th September 1916, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada, in the other set.

The main questions for consideration in this appeal were—

(1) Whether the Respondents were entitled, on account of the order of the

(3) I. L. R. 3 Cal. 30 F. B.) (1877).

SRI RAJA BOMMADEVARA NAGANNA NAIDU v. RAVI VENKATAPPAYYA.

Privy Council, dated the 16th July 1914, in the suits for Fasli 1315 between the parties, to a refund of the rents paid in excess under final decrees of competent Courts and in execution;

(2) Whether the Civil Courts had jurisdiction to try and decide suits relating to disputes as to rates of rent, and

(3) Whether the final decrees in suits for Faslis 1314, 1316 to 1322 were not res judicata between the parties as to rate of rent for Fasli 1323.

The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows :—The Appellants were the Zemindars of North Vallur Estate in Kistna District and the Respondents are the occupancy tenants of the villages of Maddur and Chodavaram in the said Estate. Originally the lands held by the Respondents were dry lands and up to Fasli 1283 (1873) the rent used to be paid in kind. In that Fasli the rent in kind was, by agreement, commuted into a money rate. This money rate was twice revised subsequently by agreement between the parties and the last revision was in Fasli 1292 (1882).

During the period between Fasli 1283 (1873) and Fasli 1313 (1903) pattas and muchilikas were exchanged between the Zemindar and the tenants. These documents contained, in addition to the usual terms, a clause to the effect that, in case any of the lands were converted into wet, and wet or garden crop raised, the Zemindar would be entitled to demand a higher rate of rent and that the tenants would be liable to pay it in respect of such lands. The rate, however, was not stated.

In Fasli 1314 (1904) the Respondents began to cultivate some of their lands with wet crops. The then Zemindar (father of the Appellants) demanded a higher rate of rent for such lands which was refused by the tenants. Thereupon the Zemindar tendered asara pattas claiming a share of the produce in respect of lands on which wet crops were raised. The tenants refused to accept them.

The Zemindar (father of the Appellants) instituted summary suits under the Rent Recovery Act (Madras Act, VIII of 1865) to enforce acceptance of pattas for Faslis 1314 and 1315 claiming rent on the asara or the produce-sharing system. The suits were dismissed by the Head Assistant Collector, Bezwada Division and the District Judge, on appeal, affirmed the decrees. But on further appeal the High Court reversed the decrees of the lower Courts and decreed the Zemindar's suits. The tenants appealed to His Majesty in Council from the decrees of the High Courts in suits for Fasli 1315 but there was no appeal from the decrees in suits for Fasli 1314. The Privy Council by their order in Council, dated the 16th July 1914, reversed the decrees of the High Court and restored those of the District Judge.

Meanwhile, the Zemindar instituted similar suits for Faslis 1316 and 1317 and obtained similar decrees. Applications for leave to appeal from these decrees were made by the tenants but leave was refused by the High Court and no steps were taken to obtain special leave.

On the 1st July 1908, the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908) came into force and the Zemindar instituted suits under that Act for recovery of rents for Faslis 1314, 1316 to 1319, obtained decrees and realised them in execution. Similar decrees were also obtained for rents of Faslis 1320 to 1322. The Respondents did not apply for stay of trial of any of the suits pending the disposal of their appeal to the Privy Council. All of them except those for Fasli 1322 were realised in execution. On the strength of the order of the Privy Council, dated the 16th July 1914, the Respondents applied for review of the judgments of the several Courts in suits for other Faslis but those applications were all refused.

On the 2nd October 1914, the father of the Appellants instituted, in the Court of the Sub-Collector, Bezwada, the present suits (first set) for recovery of rent for Fasli 1323 from the Respondents. In his plaint, he claimed dry cash cist (rent) for dry lands and claimed Ambaram (rent in kind) or its equivalent in money for the wet lands. He further alleged that he collected rents on that basis up to Fasli 1321 and that, as the decrees in suits for Faslis 1317 to 1322 between the parties became final, the Respondents are bound to pay in the same manner for Fasli 1323. He added that, if the Court holds that he is not entitled to receive Ambaram (rent in kind), he may be decreed the amount mentioned in the hisseb (account) therewith annexed at the enhanced rate for wet lands as per agreement effected between the parties. He prayed for a decree accordingly.

On the 3rd March 1915, the Respondents filed their written statements in which they pleaded that the Zemindar was only entitled to dry cash rate on all the lands, that it was so decided by the order of the Privy Council, dated the 16th July 1914, that Devudu and Durbari fees claimed were not proper and that they were ever ready to pay the dry cash rate. They prayed that a decree may be passed only for dry cash rent for all the lands and that the rest of the claim may be dismissed.

The suits were transferred to the Court of the Honorary Suits Deputy Collector, Bezwada. The tenants deposited in Court the sums admitted by them.

On the 13th April 1915, the Court framed the following issues:—

"(1) Is the Plaintiff entitled to claim rent in kind on asara system on lands cultivated with wet crops?

(2) Or is he entitled to dry rates only?

(3) If the Plaintiff is entitled to wet rate not in kind but in money, what is that money rent?

(4) What was the yield on wet lands in the suit Fasli and what was the price of the produce?

(5) Is the Plaintiff not entitled to Devudu and Durbar fees?

(6) To what amount is the Plaintiff entitled?

(7) Is the Plaintiff's claim for paddy on asara system barred by res judicata by reason of the Privy Council decision in Ravi Veeraragharulu v. Venkata Narasimha Naidu (1) or is the Defendants' contention for not paying according to asara system barred by res judicata by reason of the decisions of various Courts for Faslis 1314 and 1316 to 1322?

(8) To what relief is the Plaintiff entitled?"

On the 3rd December 1915, the Honorary Suits Deputy Collector, after examining witnesses for both the parties, delivered his judgment in the suits. On the 7th issue he held that the Plaintiff's claim for rent on the asara system was negatived by the decision of the Privy Council in suits for Fasli 1315 and that the Defendants were not barred by res judicata by reason of the decisions of the various Courts for the previous Faslis. On the second issue he held that the Defendants cannot claim to pay only the dry rates on wet lands and that a suitable rate should be fixed. On the 3rd issue he found that the suitable rate is Rs. 6 an acre. He held that Devudu and Durbar fees were not legal. He therefore passed decrees allowing the claim at Rs. 6 an acre for the wet lands.

Against the said decrees, dated the 3rd December 1915, Respondents preferred appeals to the District Court of Kistna at Masulipatam and the Appellants' father preferred cross-appeals. On the 23rd January 1917, the District Judge delivered his judgment in the appeals and cross-appeals. He held that the Privy Council decision operated as res judicata and had the effect of reversing all the decrees passed by the several Courts for the other Faslis and that the Plaintiff was only entitled to the dry cash rates on all the lands. He therefore modified the decrees of the Court of the Honorary Suits Deputy Collector and decreed rents at Rs. 2-12-0 an acre. He passed decrees allowing the Respondents' appeals to that extent and dismissing the cross-appeals of the Appellants' father.

From the said decrees, dated the 23rd January 1917, the Appellants' father preferred second appeals to the High Court of Judicature at Madras.

On the 9th February 1916, the Respondents instituted, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada, the present suits (second set) against the father of the Appellants, for refund of amounts paid by them in excess of dry rates for the rents of Faslis 1314, 1316 to 1321 and also for an injunction restraining the Appellants' father from executing the decrees of the Revenue Court for Faslis 1322. In their plaints, they alleged that the decision of the Privy Council in suits for Fasli 1315 was to the effect that the Zemindar was entitled only to dry rates of rent for all the lands, that the said decision nullified the decrees of the Collector and of the High Court for all the other Faslis and that they were entitled to get back the amounts paid in excess of the dry rate under those decrees. They prayed for decrees directing the Defendants to pay the amounts they claimed and granting an injunction restraining him from executing the decrees for rents of Fasli 1322.

On the 11th August 1916, the Appellants' father filed his written statement in which he pleaded that, for Faslis 1314, 1316 to 1322, he obtained decrees from competent Courts and realised them in execution; that the decrees for Fasli 1322 were being executed; that, after the Privy Council decision of 1914, the tenants applied to the High Court and the Revenue Courts for review of their decisions which were refused; that the suits were barred by res judicata; and that the suits were not maintainable.

On the 11th August 1916, the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada framed the following issues :—

(1) Whether this Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit?

(1*a*) Whether the suit is barred by the rule as to res judicata?

(2) Whether Plaintiff cannot recover—

(a) as the decrees under which Defendant collected the cist are still in force, or

(b) as Plaintiff's petitions for review thereof were dismissed?

(3) What is the effect of the Privy Council decision in Ravi Veeraraghavulu v. Venkata Narasimha Naidu (1) on the amount of cist payable by Plaintiff?

(4) What is the amount, if any, recoverable by Plaintiff?

(5) Whether Plaintiff is entitled to the injunction prayed for?

(6) To what relief is Plaintiff entitled?

On the 29th September 1916, the learned Subordinate Judge of Bezwada, after recording the documentary evidence for both parties delivered one judgment in all the suits. He held that he had jurisdiction to try the suits, that the Privy Council decision in Ravi Veeraraghavulu v. Venkata Narasimha Naidu (1) superseded the decrees of the Revenue Courts, that those decrees were no longer in force, that there was no question of res judicata and that the Plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction prayed for. On the third issue, he found that the Privy Council did not decide that a uniform rate of Rs. 2-12-0 per acre should be paid for all kinds of lands. He, however, accepted the Plaintiffs' statement showing what was due to the Plaintiffs as correct. He passed decrees in accordance with the above findings.

On the 7th March 1917, the father of the Appellants preferred appeals to the High Court against the said decrees, dated the 29th September 1916, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada.

These appeals and the second appeals referred to in para. 9 supra were heard together by the High Court. The Appellants were brought on record as the legal representatives of their deceased father.

On the 7th March 1919, the High Court disposed of the two sets of the appeals by one judgment. The learned Chief Justice in the course of his judgment, said, after referring to the decision in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (3) :—

"The question is one of considerable doubt and difficulty, but on the whole I have come to the opinion that the tenants on reversal of the decree of the High Court by the Privy Council became entitled to recover the rent which they have overpaid in the intermediate suits by reason of this decision. I think, however, the Subordinate Judge was wrong in assuming that the rate of rent fixed in the Revenue Court for Fasli 1315 has been decided to be the proper rent for succeeding Faslis. The decision of the Revenue Court only related to the contents of the patta for Fasli 1315, and all the Privy Council decided was that the High Court had no sufficient grounds for disturbing this finding of fact. Now that the decree of the High Court has gone, it will, in my opinion, be necessary for the Court to find afresh what is the proper rate of rent with a view to ascertaining to what extent, if any, the Plaintiffs are entitled to a refund. I would therefore reverse the decrees and remand the suits for disposal according to law. Costs will abide."

"The connected second appeals relate to suits for the rent of a Fasli subsequent to the decision of the Privy Council. For the reasons already given I hold that decision in the Revenue Suit for 1315 is not binding on the Civil Courts and therefore the decrees must be set aside and the suits remanded for disposal according to law. Costs will abide."

Kumaraswami Sastri, J., agreed with him.

In accordance with the above judgment, two sets of orders were drawn up, one set remanding the suits to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada and the other set remanding the suits to the Court of the Honorary Suits Deputy Collector, Bezwada.

Against the said two sets of orders of remand, the Appellants preferred the present consolidated appeal to His Majesty in Council.

simham for the Appellants.—The decision of the Privy Council in 1914 was merely to the effect that the High Court was precluded from setting aside the findings of the lower Courts that the "asara" system had been abrogated. It did not affect the decrees in the other suits.

In the Appellants' rent suits the High Court should simply have restored the findings of the Revenue Court.

The tenants were not entitled to recover anything in their suits because the money had been paid under decrees which had never been set aside.

The decision of the majority of the Bench in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (3) is erroneous and the facts in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdury v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdury (2), on which the High Court rely were entirely different to those in the present case, and that decision is not applicable.

The Respondents were not represented at the hearing.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD CARSON. The Appellants are the Zemindars of North Vallur Estate in Kistna district, and the Respondents are the occupancy tenants of certain villages in the said estate.

In 1904 the Zemindar, father of the Appellants, brought before the Court of the Head Assistant Collector of the Bezwada Division, Kistna district, forty-nine summary suits under sec. 9 of the Madras Rent Recovery Act, 1865, against the Respondent raiyats to enforce the acceptance by them of pattas or leases of Faslis 1314 and 1315 (1904 and 1905) which had been tendered to them. The Zemindar demanded asara or varam rates for wet lands. The tenants on the other hand denied the claim of the Zemindar, pleading that certain rates had been fixed in Fasli 1292 (1882), which were alone recoverable and not the asara or varam rates (produce-sharing system) demanded by the Zemindar. The suits were dismissed by the Head Assistant Collector, Bezwada Division finding as a fact that the conversion of the asara rates into cash payment in 1283 Fasli, which was confirmed in 1292 Fasli, and had been acted upon ever since, was a permanent arrangement, and that the Plaintiff (the said Zemindar) was not therefore entitled to impose on the tenants pattas on the asara basis. On appeal by the Zemindar, the District Judge affirmed the decrees of the Collector in respect of the finding of fact relative to the character of the arrangement of 1283 Fasli, and upheld the orders dismissing the suits On further appeal to the High Court of Madras, the High Court set aside the orders of the lower Courts, holding that "the pattas tendered by the Plaintiff were proper pattas, and that the Defendants must accept them."

The tenants, thereupon, appealed from the judgment of the High Court to His Majesty in Council, and on the 18th June 1914, the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council set aside the judgments and decrees of the High Court on the ground that as there were concurrent findings of fact in the Courts below, an appeal to the High Court was precluded by the Code of Civil Procedure, secs. 581 and 585. Their Lordships, however, ordered that the cases should be sent back to be remitted to the Court of the Collector for the drawing up of proper decrees and dealing with any other questions that might be outstanding in these actions between the parties. The case before this Board is Ravi Veeraraghavulu v. Venkata Narasimha Naidu (1) where the facts outlined above are more fully stated. Meanwhile during the pendency of the said appeal to His Majesty in Council the Zemindar instituted similar suits for arrears of rent in respect of 1316 Fasli to 1322 Fasli under sec. 77 of Madras Act I of 1908, and decrees were made against the tenants, all of which, except those of 1322 Fasli were realised in execution. No application was made for stay of trial of any of the suits pending the disposal of the appeal to this Board. The matters for determination in the present consolidated decrees raise questions as to the effect, if any, of the decision of this Board of the 18th June 1914, on the subsequent judgments and execution thereunder.

On the one hand, on the 2nd October 1914 the Appellants brought the present suits against the Respondents, claiming dry cash cist (rent) for dry lands and claiming [illegible] (rent in kind, or its equivalent in money) for wet lands, whilst the tenants (Respondents) contended that the Zemindar was only entitled to dry cash rate on all the lands, and that the order of the Privy Council had so decided.

On the other hand, the tenants (Respondents) instituted the present suits against the father of the Appellants, who now represent him, for a refund of amounts paid by them in excess of dry rates for the rents of 1314, 1316—1321 Fasli, claiming that the said decision of the Privy Council in suits for 1915 Fasli was to the effect that the Zemindar was entitled only to dry rates as fixed in 1292 Fasli, and that not only the decisions of the High Court but also those of the Collector and the District Judge, which were given subsequently on the strength of that decision, were void and ultra vires.

In the Zemindar's suits the Deputy Collector of Bezwada decreed the suits, fixing the rent at the rate of Rs. 6 per acre for wet land and rates varying from Rs. 3 to Rs. 2-8-6 for dry lands. On appeal, however, the District Judge of Kistna held that the Privy Council judgment operated as res judicata with regard to the claim for rent for future years, and he decreed a uniform rent of Rs. 2-12 odd per acre.

In the tenants' (Respondents') actions for recovery of the excess of rent paid during the pendency of the appeal the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada on the 29th September 1916, found in favour of the Respondents (tenants).

The decisions in both sets of cases were challenged, and appeals taken to the High Court of Madras, and both sets of appeal were heard together.

On the 7th March 1919, the High Court gave judgment. With regard to the suits instituted by the Respondents for the refund of rent in consequence of the decision of the Judicial Committee, the Court held "that the tenants (Respondents), on reversal of the decree of the High Court by the Privy Council, became entitled to recover the rent which they had overpaid in the intermediate suits by reason of this decision," and remanded the suits for disposal according to law.

The learned Judges of the High Court based their decision mainly, if not altogether, on the authority of a case decided by this Board, viz., Shama Purshad Roy Chowdury v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdury (2) as interpreted by the majority of the Full Bench in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (3) to be referred to later.

Their Lordships cannot agree with this view, nor do they consider that the case cited in evidence is an authority for the conclusions come to. It is clear and settled law, as stated in the case referred to at p. 211 of the report that "money recovered under a decree or judgment cannot be recovered back in a fresh suit or action whilst the decree or judgment under which it was recovered remains in force; but this rule of law rests as their Lordships apprehend upon this ground, that the original decree or judgment must be taken to be subsisting and valid until it has been reversed or superseded by some ulterior proceeding. If it has been reversed or superseded the money recovered under it ought certainly to be refunded, and as their Lordships conceive, is recoverable either by summary process or by a new suit or action. The true question, therefore, in such cases is, whether the decree or judgment under which the money was originally recovered has been reversed or superseded?"
